LINES BY A MOTHER IN ISRAEL.

Roman, spare that book,
Keep off that bloody hand,
There's danger in thy look,
And life is thy demand.
Touch not that sacred page,
There's hatred in thine eye,
Ah! Roman, quell that rage,
I'll keep this book or die.

That good old book I love,
It bids my sorrows cease;
It leads to joys above,
And gives the mourner peace.
It is the orphan's stay,
And heals the widow's heart,
Take life or friends away,
With this I'll never part.

Behold those tender youth
Whom Jesus died to save!
I'll teach them here is truth,
Or fill a martyr's grave!
The crimes are ne'er forgot,
The deeds of thee and thine,
Go, Roman! touch it not;
That holy book is mine.

Ah! Roman, spare that book!
Our fathers long ago
Thy slavish creeds forsook,
Its precious truths to know.
These children now are free
From error's galling chain;
Go, Roman! let it be,
That book shall here remain.

Give up that book to thee,
And rob my soul of God?
To papists bend the knee,
And kiss the tyrant's rod?
Never! while I have the breath
To raise my feeble hand,
I'll tread the freeman's path,
In this my native land.

"REV."

No reference is had in the above abbreviation to the book of "Revelation," for which it often stands. We do refer, however, to its use as a prefix to the names of the ministers of Christ, where it stands as an august sentinel to warn all who venture to approach within the radius of the "Rev.'s" sacred circle of influence, or his presence, to be reverent, or "pass by on the other side."

Titles are so much in favor with mortals, that they have grown hoary with the lapse of ages; just as though they could serve their ostensible purpose of lifting those, who are so (un) fortunate as to possess them, out of the dunghill of common mediocrity, into notice and renown. Hence, he is a poor-good-for-nought who has not something of the sort to lift him into notice.

In aristocratic countries, one is only of the common herd unless he be a "Lord," "Duke," "Earl," "Knight," or "Esq."; and here, if there are not titled "Lords many," there is almost an innumerable number of Esq.s who have never held a Justice of Peace commission, and "Generals," "Colonels," "Captains," abound in a greater degree than commissions were ever given, and then the "Rev's," "D. D.'s," "LL. D.'s," and other titled ones, swell the host until titles come to be a drug in the market, from their very commonness, and they are not, after all, "worth a cent" to any one, although but few ever refuse them. Real worth rests not in titles, nor social position, but in the man; and he who is not himself of sterling value, from his high christian character, gains nothing from titles; they are a disgrace to him, and make him more disagreeable than he would be without them; and he who has character has no use for them. They neither supply that which is deficient, nor add to the lustre of the good.

It is to be expected that this world of fallen sinners should try the stilts, jumping poles, and ladders of titles, to get out of the hole of the pit into which they have fallen; but when we see even the professed ministers of Christ's gospel, who at the best are but humble instruments in his hands to carry forward his work, trying these means of popular elevation, we are filled with disgust and sorrow. Disgust, because it is so out of place in them to do thus; and sorrow, because they are willing and consent to adopt, or accept, the world's applaudits, and follow its customs. Although these gifts may be well meant, sometimes, they are unworthy the attention of the "ambassador for Christ."

REVEREND—how it looks! how it sounds! attached to a mortal's name; for no mortal is worthy of it. It is as much out of place as the golden-jewelled crown of a king on the head of a wooden image. Only once is it used in the Bible, and then as one of the titles, or names, of the great GOD of heaven. "Holy and reverend is his name," says the Psalmist (Ps. 111: 18); and let it ever stand as a title appropriate only to Him who fills immensity with his presence, and from whose Spirit there is no place to flee. Let not his servants arrogate to themselves the honor of that title. It is theirs to humbly and faithfully do the solemn, momentous work committed to their hands. If God has counted them worthy, putting them into the ministry, because they are his servants, they are not therefore entitled to titles, and do not require them, either to make themselves more efficient, or as ornamental appendages. Jesus, the Master, declared of himself, "I receive not honor from men"; and if he refused such honor, then his disciple, who "is not above his Lord," nor the servant, who "is not above his master," has any right to receive "honor from men." The world may call him by high sounding names, but they are all useless, meaningless trumpery, a mere mockery, an unhallowed profanation. They should not be received from the church over which the Holy Ghost has made them ministers, "overseers," and neither has authority to bestow worldly titles on the other. God's workmen stoop low, and stop their work to play with baubles, when they receive "honor from men," or "one of another." Be not ye called Rabbi, says Jesus' significant voice, and it has the tone of authority. It is a positive prohibition, and leaves all the ministers of the New Testament untitled, either by "Rev's," "D. D's," or LL. D.'s," or anything else unscriptural.

Jesus even puts this honor-receiving, title-bearing disposition in direct antagonism with faith. Hear him: "How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?" The Jews, to whom this language was uttered, loved titles, to be "called Rabbi," and to have "the chief seats in the synagogues, and greetings in the market," and "to be seen of men"; and the pride which fostered this love stood in the way of humble faith in Jesus, and it stands in the way of faith in all who indulge it; and to keep his own "friends" out of the snare, Jesus forbade them to receive titles.

It is not to the purpose that they are "worthy of double honor" (1 Tim. 5: 17), or that they should in honor prefer one another (Rom. 12: 10). They are not thereby titled and mitred. The moment such lumber is accepted, there is a barrier raised to a practical obedience to these commands, and the recipients of the stuff dishonor God, and disobey his direct commands through his Son.

One might fancy, or coin a name, with which all these titles would agree perfectly; they might all be cemented on, and not be out of place; but the name would not be that of one of God's humble ministers. Here it is: The Most Right Reverend Philo Vox Populi, D. D., LL. D., F. R. S., etc., etc. It looks like a great puff of vanity, meaning as the name indicates, Most highly venerated, and in love with the world. It is like a huge scarecrow, covered with bright scraps of old tin, glittering in the sun, and rattling in the wind. For, in the light of popular smiles, these man-made titles glitter, and, in the wind-puffs of human praise, they rattle. That is all. "Only that, and nothing more—nothing more."

If a minister of Christ has ability, let him consecrate it to God, and let it be thoroughly imbued with the dews of heavenly grace. If he have learning, let it, like Paul's, be "counted as dung," and "dross," as to all worldly good, and not entitled to honor; but to be used only to the glory of God. If God shines on his servants with the light of his glory, let it shine out as God's light, and not the man's; for, as the moon is opaque, or dark, and has no light except the sun's reflected rays; so man, in his opaqueness, has no light to be glorified, or honored, only the light of God's name, and not man's.

The "reapers of life's harvest" have no time to "play with shadows"; their work is not to play, or be pleased with a string of trinkets; but to work untitled, and unappreciative of worldly titles, which, if given, even "for the Father's sake," will cling to the man, unless thrown off and back to Him to whom all honor is due; who alone can bear it all. The Rev. Mr., or Rev. Dr., whoever he may be, is too weak to bear such names, certainly. The plain name is enough; his position, as described in the Bible, is sufficient. If he wants any honor, let him find it in such a life as his Master led,—in toils and imprisonments; in weariness and fasting; in watching and praying; in preaching the gospel in its fulness; in burden and travail of soul for the welfare of the church, and the conversion of men; and wait for other honor until he receives a crown of glory.

How strange it is that those who profess, and ought to have their minds absorbed in devotion to the work of God, should even be pleased, not only to accept, but to don and wear these appendages, prefixes, and suffixes; "and not only so," but they sometimes love to see them written, and to write them themselves against their own names; to hear the sounding words applied to them, and, at least, to accept and permit the use of such things by other ministers. Ministers seem to have a "mutual admiration society"; not only among themselves, but associated with all the honor-loving, applaudit-seeking men of the world, and the professed church.

We groan and sigh for times of gospel simplicity, when it was not, Rev. Dr. Peter, or Rev. Paulos Apostolus, D. D., LL. D.; but plainly, "Bro. Paul," "Paul the aged," "Paul the prisoner," "Paul a servant of Jesus Christ," and the like; with all the others who were pioneers in the work of the Lord. The Lord help his servants, who preach his word, to be free from the titles and distinctions whereby men glorify and honor each other; from the growing love of applause, in these last days, of reverend and honored titles; and to be the humble, unassuming messengers of the gospel of peace and grace to a world of lost ones for whom Christ died.

A SHORT REPORT.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—Since my last letter, which was last December, I have been confined at home by sickness in our family. Our little daughter Ella was taken sick with rheumatic fever, which settled on the heart. We concluded with the physician she could not live many weeks; but God, in his mercy, has seen fit to restore her to health. I was enabled to hold meetings only evenings in our own vicinity, which I trust was of some advancement to the cause of truth. A few saw new light in the Bible, in relation to the speedy coming of Jesus. Since the return of good traveling, I have been able to fill my appointments, and to attend the quarterly conferences. The one held in May, at West Gardiner, was well attended. The Brn. in the place did all on their part to make the meeting of interest. Some who have been very hard against our views have softened down very much, and acknowledge the entire mortality of man; yet much prejudice exists in some minds. Our meeting was one of harmony.

A few faithful ones in West Gardiner still live to hold up the truth. One of their number, Bro. John L. Littlefield, has fallen asleep. He was a living christian. Thus our ranks are thinned, but we sorrow not as others that have no hope.

Our quarterly meeting at Rome, in June, was in a new place. A few Brn. there started a meeting last fall. Others came in from abroad, and quite an interest in religion was manifest. A number were converted and reclaimed. The brethren and sisters came from abroad, filled with the spirit to labor. Brn. Nason, Walker, Carr, Rines, and others, were present to preach the word. The meeting was of much interest. Some got new light, and rejoiced in the soon coming of Jesus.

I met with the Brn. in conference at Pittston. The attendance was quite large for a new place. Some fifteen preaching brethren were there during the meeting. Some interest was manifested for a deeper work of grace, so as to live free from sin and condemnation, which is our privilege, and also duty. There seems to be a lack of godly piety among us, as a body. We need more holy living, godly conversation, and purity of heart. Many are striving to trim up, by living correctly, dropping off a little here, and a little somewhere else. Would it not be better to go direct to the fountain, and have the heart made all right? Then how easy it is to do the will of God. Then it is a pleasure to deny self. Then, with Paul, we can say, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ; by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." I love it, blessed be God. Shall we sink beneath it? No; Jesus bore it for us, and has promised to give us grace which is sufficient for us.

Our grove meeting in July, the fourth of July, was of much interest. We had a prayer-meeting Saturday, at five o'clock P. M., in the grove, which was well filled up by the Brn. A number came from abroad to help. The Spirit of the Lord was with us of a truth. We had a large gathering on Sunday. Prayer meeting in the morning; preaching by Brn. N. G. Reed and Haggett; also by Bro. Kimball. Brn. Rines and Doughty were present to help. Three men were baptized. The Fourth was a day of much interest. Sixty-five spoke in the morning for our King Jesus. It was truly blessed. Some said it was the first fourth of July they ever spent in the service of God, and was the best of all the celebrations they ever attended. Union and love ruled. Many saw the foolishness of pride, and felt condemned. When will professors lay aside these little weights that hold them to this world, and keep themselves unspotted from the world, by obeying God's word? I never felt the need of more watching than at the present time, that I may be kept by the power of God, ready for his work and kingdom.

AS THOU WILT.

It is so sweet to live
My little life to-day,
That I would never leave it, if
I might forever stay!
I sometimes say.

I am so weary, Lord,
I would lie down for aye,
Could I but hear thee speak the word,
"Thy sins are washed away!"
I sometimes say.

The better mood that lies—
These moods between midday—
Comes softly, and I lift my eyes,
"Lord, as thou wilt!" I pray;
And would alway.

A MODEL SYLLOGISM.

All mankind are in possession of immortality. The rich man died, and was buried, and in hell he lifted up his eyes being in torments. Therefore, all wicked persons will suffer eternal torments in hell after death.

The great majority of believers in the Christian religion admit the major premise. And all admit the minor premise, as it is a Bible statement. Therefore, it seems almost impossible to evade the conclusion, that all the wicked will writhe in endless torments, and that too in sight of heaven, where they can behold the righteous praising God; while the saved, happy (?) ones will be looking on, and seeing their once loved relatives writhing in endless torment.

Evidently there must be something wrong in this syllogism. On examining the major premise, by the sacred word, we find it to be altogether wrong; for the sacred word says, that God "only hath immortality." (1 Tim. 6: 16.) Therefore none of the human family are in possession of immortality. It is promised only "to them who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life." (Rom. 2: 7.)

On examining our minor premise, we find it wrested from its true meaning. It is a part of a parable, spoken by our Savior concerning the Jewish nationality; and it has no reference to man after death. There never was, in reality, such a transaction as men talking when they were really dead, for it is written, "The dead know not any thing" (Eccl. 9: 5); also, "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, IN THE GRAVE whither thou goest." Eccl. 9: 10. Again: "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Ps. 146: 4. Therefore, the conclusion in the syllogism must be wrong, and the saved are not compelled to sit and see their children writhe forever and ever in misery, groaning and crying for mercy. Men ought always to examine their premises before they draw their conclusions. The Bible teaches that the wicked "shall be punished with everlasting destruction, from the presence of the Lord." (2 Thess. 1: 9.)

"False premises always bring us to wrong conclusions. The old adage is a good one: "First know that you are right, and then go ahead." James says: "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God." Jesus says; "Search the scriptures," and in them we read that "this mortal must put on immortality" (1 Cor. 15: 53) "at the last trump." Therefore we have not got it now, but will have it when Jesus comes at the end of this world. For it is promised as a reward "to them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for" it. And Jesus tells us when we will get our reward: when "the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, THEN he shall reward every man according to his work." (Matt. 16: 27.) May God help us to seek for immortality and eternal life.

DRESS.

Much has been said and written on the subject of dress, but we are forgetful creatures, and often need to be put in remembrance of things that we know. If the wearing of jewelry, plumes, artificial flowers, and other ornaments, are to arrest the attention of beholders and excite admiration (and if they are not worn for this, what are they worn for?), then we do thereby foster pride, which God tells us in his word is hateful in his sight; for "the proud he beholdeth afar off"; and again, "God resisteth the proud." But is this all that can be brought against this practice? How can we as followers of Jesus take the Lord's money and spend it in this worse than useless way, when Christ, in the person of his followers, lies sick, destitute, naked, and hungry? Do we forget that Jesus has said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it to one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me"? Matt. 25: 40. It is useless to close our eyes, and say that we do not know that these things are so. Job tells us that the cause he knew not he searched out. When Jesus comes, shall we want him to tell us, I was hungry and ye took of the goods that were entrusted by God to your care, and spent it in costly array, while I suffered? I sometimes think that the latter part of the twenty-fifth chapter of Matt. is almost forgotten by many who profess to love the Lord.

O, my sisters, did we but realize these things as we ought, instead of spending our money in the adornment of our persons, it would go into the treasury of the Lord, to send the gospel and also the comforts of life to those who are perishing of both temporal and spiritual wants. I do not expect those who have never been made partakers of the benefits of the gospel, will heed these things; but I have expected it of those whose hearts are changed, and who have been made partakers of the divine nature. O ye children, adopted into the family of the Most High God, fear not to give of the fruit of thy strength and toil to the needy; for thy God, for whom thou laborest, is mindful of thee, and he will give thee good wages, and thou shalt reap a rich reward in the world to come.

Warren, Me. A. HEMENWAY.

THE FRENCH POSITION.

A special correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune sends an interesting account of the French position and plans in relation to the Prussian war. After looking over the immense military forces, and their movements, in connection with the vast quantity of war material already collected, he says:—

"The line from Strasbourg to some distance beyond Sarrguemines has left stamped upon my brain impressions not likely ever to be effaced by stronger ones of the same kind. I fear I cannot reduce these impressions to writing, but some faint idea may be conveyed by imagining a crammed railway line, in which all the trains were filled with soldiers, cheering and being cheered; stations lined with sympathizing spectators; trucks laden with guns in such numbers that one ceased to take any interest in them; the roads, when they could be seen from the trains, encumbered with cavalry; and lastly, for the twenty miles between Bitche and Sarrguemines, tents so thick that I could hardly make out whether I was passing through one or several camps. Abundance of goods, forage and wood was stored along the lines. This last puzzled me, until I found that this portion of the French railways are supplied with coal from the Prussian mines, which it is feared they will flood before abandoning.

But one feature struck me as conspicuous by its absence—there was but little show of either baggage or baggage animals. I saw none of the droves of cattle which might have been expected to be seen with a large army. My own belief is that the grand movement across the frontier will commence on Wednesday or Thursday. The centre and nearly the whole of the right, except the army of Africa, —which is rapidly coming up and of which a coup d'etat is already at hand—are now on the line between Bitche and Sarrguemines; the left wing of which is immensely strong at Metz and Thionville, will make for Saarlouis and Birckenfel, the right and centre heading for Kaiserslastin, and thus the movement will be along the western slopes of the Vosges; although the corps will probably be ordered to move in a parallel direction along the east of that range to watch the defiles and to give warning of any land attack by the Prussians. It is not unlikely the French army will then descend the valley. The King of Prussia if willing to fight at all on the left bank will accept battle somewhere about Kerntzenach. The position is strong in itself and affords a secure retreat upon Mayence, the bulwark of Germany and standing menace of France. With regard to the chances of success of the combatants in the first battle, I believe the odds are immensely in favor of France. For the last twelve days she has been massing the whole of her army on the frontier, and within one or two marches of Bitche and Sarrguemines. I have read of a certain number of battalions being sent forward and of others remaining behind, but as far as I can judge the French are evacuating every garrison en masse. I put 800,000 down as the lowest number. The Emperor means to have them under his hand and in complete communication at the entrance of the campaign, and I believe the concentration now to be within forty-eight hours of completion. The number of guns will be large, but they will not be adequately housed. The cavalry also will not bear a high proportion; probably under one-tenth of the infantry. The whole of these troops are in a magnificent state of discipline. The officers are much more numerous than those of the Prussians. The French artillery was superior to the Austrian at Solferino, and the Austrian superior to the Prussian at Konigratz. There is no doubt of the Chassepot being a better weapon than the Prussian arm. I cannot hardly believe in the Prussians having yet been able to effect such a concentration of strength as the French have done. I believe that on the opening of the campaign, either with or without a battle, the Prussians retire behind the Rhine. The weather is most inviting for military operations. Even a lady could not consider it a hardship to be forced to sleep under a tent, The country seems made for war, from the absence of fences to embarass movements, Water, fuel and stands of stacked corn for forage are to be met with everywhere, There are many villages in which the troops might if necessary sleep at night. At present the authorities avoid billeting men upon the inhabitants, and form their corps outside of the towns.

Now for a few words as to the attitude of the people. I have by this time gone through a large section of France. In the war section I find the opinions too clearly and evidently marked to make me personally doubtful of the state of public opinion:—First, by the officers the war is received as at once their due, and as the greatest boon the Emperor could bestow upon them; second, the soldiers accept it with enthusiasm and in many cases with pleasure; third, the reserves, who have been out on an unlimited leave, take it as a terrible duty which it is their hard luck to have to discharge, but rapidly their opinions merge in those of their comrades; fourth, the upper classes, commercial, educated, etc., all talk of La France, how the Prussians must be beaten, and how La France should be and is united, and how it is not patriotic to abuse the Government. This being settled they immediately pull the Government to pieces. They say Mexico was the cause of Sadowa. We should have fought in 1866. In both Bismarck outwitted the Government. The pretext for war is a bad one; we should not have fought till 1871; still war was inevitable and La France must be and is united. Fifth, the peasantry and lower classes—their attitude is plain and unequivocal; they elect the war; their homes may be burned, their crops and cattle taken by the Prussians. Although it must be said that they firmly believe this will happen to their German neighbors over the border, still they exclaim war a fete. The soldiers, most of them, talk German as well as French, to be sure; that is not saying much. Many do not like the French at all; still, as Thiers says, the wise policy of Colbert has made of them the best Frenchmen in France, and the larger the number of men who speak their own tongue that fall in the first battle the better they will be pleased."

DIANA COVERDALE.

The following is an extract from a letter of Diana Coverdale:—

MY DEAR LUCY,—If I didn't know you so well, I should be afraid of your thinking harshly of me for not writing to you sooner. You would get word of my safe arrival from the Silvery folk; and then you can understand all how I felt on the first off-go. The truth is, one's eyes smart sore when they try to look back through the dust raised by such a terrible clash of change as shakes one out of all the old grooves, and makes a chaos at all events of one's thoughts. At such a time the best economy of both strength and feeling is to set one's face forward, and wait till the atmosphere is clearer again. Had I allowed myself to think too much of all I was leaving, I scarcely could have come here, or if I had come I couldn't have been of any use. There is so much in the world claiming one's attention always, that one's first lesson in the way of doing good is to put self aside. 'Tis no good attempting everything; one must learn to humbly take what lies near; and even in trying to cherish and help that, it is so needful to crush out one half the feeling the sights should awaken were there less room for help than there is. I am scarcely ever impatient with myself now, save when I detect myself hurrying over what claims my attention by chasing in my mind a number of other things, which I fancy are waiting. But nothing waits on you while you are in the right path of work; it only waits on God, who by this waiting may be carrying forth all his best purposes. Have you not felt it so, my dearest Lucy? I am sure it cannot but be with you in some measure as it is with me. And would you believe me, when I say that this is the worst and last terrible selfishness I have to fight against. For a kind of selfishness it is —a limping faith in God, seeking a crutch of self to lean on, so as to make a kind of little world of its own, to bear witness for its goodness, which simply should need no witness at all, save the bliss that it but half-consciously sheds around it, and which it never should look back on to claim as its own.

Oh, how many are there who would be great workers for God, if they would but realize this. They go on from day to day, striving to find some satisfaction in the amount they do; whereas the amount is of no consequence; and worse, the idea of it runs us all into a sort of sad, exclusive competition, as for prizes given at a race. "Our Father knoweth our heart," and he determines in a different way from that.—Sunday Magazine

POLITENESS.

Somebody says, and says truly, that there are few families anywhere in which love is not abused as furnishing the license for impoliteness. A husband, father, or brother will speak harsh words to those he loves best, simply because the secrecy of love and family pride keep him from getting his head broken. It is a shame that a man will speak more impolitely at times to his wife or sister than he would to any other woman. It is thus that the honest affections of a man's nature prove to be a weaker protection to a woman in a family circle than the restraints of society, and that a woman is usually indebted for the kindest politeness of life to those not belonging to her own household. These things ought not to be so. The man who, because it will not be resented, inflicts his spleen and bad temper upon those of his hearthstone, is a small coward, and a very mean man. Kind words are circulating mediums between true gentlemen and ladies at home, and no polish exhibited in society can atone for the harsh language and disrespectful treatment too often indulged in between those bound together by God's own ties of blood, and the most sacred bonds of conjugal love.—Home Guardian.

GIVE LOVE TO CHILDREN.—The Anti-Slavery Standard conveys a word of encouragement to parents in the following paragraph:

Don't think a child hopeless because it betrays some very bad habits. We have known children that seem to have been born liars and thieves, yet we have seen those same children become noble men and women. Whatever else you may become compelled by your circumstances in life to deny your children, give them what they most crave and need—plenty of love.

OVERWORKING.—Our Savior never drove his overtired faculties. When tired, "he sat by the well." He used to go and rest in the house of Mary and Martha after the fatigues of working in Jerusalem. He tells us all, you and me, to let the morrow take care of itself, and merely to meet the evils of the present day. Real foresight consists in reserving our own forces. If we labor with anxiety about the future, we destroy that strength which will enable us to meet the future. If we take more in than now we can do well, we break up, and the work is broken up with us.

☞ In a time of much religious excitement, and consequent discussion, an honest Dutch farmer on the Mohawk, was asked his opinion as to which denomination of Christians were on the right way to heaven. "Vell den," said he, "ven we ride our wheat to Albany some say dish road is the best, and some dat; but it don't make much difference which road we dake, for when we get dare dey never ask vich vay we come—and it is none of dere pizines—if our wheat is good!"

LYING is the worst of all evils. God is said to hate a lying lip. And yet how many are addicted to this vice! Reader, the Bible says, "Lie not one to another."

THE CHILD'S RESOLVE.

A little child I am indeed,
And little do I know;
Much care and help I yet shall need,
That I may wiser grow,
If I would ever hope to do
Things great and good, and useful too.

But even now I ought to try
To do what good I may;
God never meant that such as I
Should only live to play,
And talk and laugh, and eat and drink,
And sleep, and wake, and never think.

One gentle word that I may speak,
Or one kind, loving deed,
May, though a trifle, poor and weak,
Prove like a tiny seed;
And who can tell what good may spring
From such a very little thing?

Then let me try, each day and hour,
To act upon this plan:
What little good is in my power,
To do it while I can.
If to be useful thus I try,
I may do better by and by.

NEURALGIA IN THE HEAD.

A TALK TO THE BOYS.

An Indiana daily thus states a fact, if it be one: "A New-Jersey man, laboring under neuralgia in the head, threw forty thousand dollars into the fire. A severe remedy." Perhaps some matter-of fact man might give a different version of the incident; but it is stated so sharply that I design to talk familiarly to the boys on this as a text.

There are two unpleasant things in the case of this "New Jersey man," who was the collecting agent for some New York merchant. The first was, that the man should be "laboring under neuralgia in the head"; and second, that for that, or any other cause, he should "throw forty thousand dollars into the fire."

Neuralgia in the head (examine the dictionary) is very unpleasant, and so is neuralgia in any other part of the body. This "New Jersey man" was quite crazy for this reason, and really did not know what he was doing. He could not think justly, so that the large sum of money did not seem valuable at that moment, and he threw it into the fire. It was a difficulty of the head. If his head had been clear and sound, he would not have done what he did.

"Neuralgia in the head" is a very bad thing; a sound, well head is a very good thing. The one who has the first sees things in a wrong light, takes a wrong view of things. See that boy who has a lesson to learn. It is a hard lesson, and he yawns and pushes away his book. He makes no effort to conquer it, and resolves to tell his teacher a lie about it, that "he has tried and could not get the lesson." Is this a case of "neuralgia in the head"? Or has the disease got hold of the boy's pluck and honor and heart? If he will conquer that lesson, he will the next one, and so form a habit for future life. He will become a man, a real man, and "no shame." And yet there he is, yawning instead of working, and proving himself a poor coward instead of a man. Could he but get rid of this "neuralgia in the head," so as to have a "clear head," to see what a fool he is to act so, then he would not cast such an opportunity of becoming a man into the fire.

And there is another boy, with a strong, healthy body, and all the privileges of becoming a good, valuable business man, or professional man. What is that boy doing? He is playing cards. What else? Drinking. Where does he go? Into the bar-rooms and gambling places. See him drink, see him gamble; hear his profane and dirty words; see him reeling along the street, now singing coarse songs, and now uttering horrid blasphemies; see him in the prison, or, worse still, staggering into his own mother's house, to break her heart. It is a dreadful sight, and yet we too often see it. And how comes he to do this? Is it so very pleasant to be a drunken sot? "Does it pay" to act such a part? A drunkard is a dreadful sight, and a drunkard's doom a dreadful doom; and yet here is a mere boy who is a drunkard. Is this another case of "neuralgia in the head"? If his head were sound, would he do so silly a thing? Take this "New Jersey man" with the "forty thousand dollars" in his hand,—if he had been well, if the "neuralgia in the head" had not crazed him, would he have flung the precious handful of bank-paper into the fire? But this boy is doing worse; he is casting his character, his opportunities, his happiness, himself into the fire, to be destroyed. Has he "neuralgia in the head"?

Now, boys, it is a fact that a great many people have this very difficulty in the head. When Dr. Webster killed Dr. Parkman, and buried his body, he must have had "neuralgia in the head," or he could have reasoned more clearly; when Schuyler forged the New Haven railway bonds, and made his name a by-word for fraud; and when young Ketchum forged the gold checks, and became a Sing-Sing convict;—each of these two must have had this "neuralgia in the head." I am sure it was so.

But I said there was another unpleasant thing in this statement about the "New Jersey man;" that is, he not only had the "neuralgia in the head, but he threw forty thousand dollars into the fire." It was a great sum. It was more than he was worth, and he is sure to feel badly about it as long as he lives. He burned up forty thousand dollars! I knew a plain man who had a small sum of money, not more than fifty dollars, and to keep it very safe he laid the roll of bills in his parlor stove. His wife, the next day, thought her parlor needed a little fire "to change the air," and so she made it in that very stove. Of course the money was burned up, and the man felt very badly about it; but what was that small sum to "forty thousand dollars"?

Here, boys, I am reminded that in 1843 a man asked a Cincinnati physician to examine his throat. The Doctor told him "his throat was all right;" but the man told him to take another look, "for," said he, "something is the matter with my throat." But the Doctor could see nothing. "Well," said the man, I think there must be something wrong with my throat, for I have swallowed a hundred thousand dollars' worth of farm utensils and stock, besides a hundred slaves!" You understand it, boys; I will not explain.

Many years ago, a collegian found in the campus a ten-dollar bill, which he determined to keep, although the "bulletin-board" told him whose it was. It is true he was poor, and wanted money, and the young man who owned the money was rich. But the finder of that bill was also rich up to that time in a good reputation. He was a fine scholar, and he was esteemed as a very excellent young man. The wise man says: "A good name is better than great riches," and the young man had "a good name." And now a ten-dollar bill is in his hand, and it is not his. He begins to reason about it. "I need it very much, and he (the owner) does not need it. I want to get an education, and this will help me. Is it not providential? Besides, nobody will know it but myself, and by and by I will replace it." And so he kept the money, and threw, not forty thousand dollars, but his GOOD NAME, into the fire. He was found out and dismissed from college. As long as he lives that bad deed will dog him like his shadow. He cannot escape it.

It was a clear case of "neuralgia in the head," and he threw into the fire what is better than great riches." I tell you, boys, that when houses burn up we can rebuild them, when we get sick we have a good hope of getting well, when we lose money we may get it back again; but when a boy or a man, or anybody, labors under such a "neuralgia in the head" as to commit some mean act, or some crime, theft, or fraud, or infamous deed, he destroys that which is worth more than gold or jewels, and which is very hard to be restored.

Now, should you be tempted to do any mean or dishonorable act, or lazily and foolishly to despise your opportunities to become true men, let me ask you, boys, to remember this talk to you about "the New Jersey man, who, laboring under neuralgia in the head, threw forty thousand dollars into the fire."—Home Guardian.

SHUTTING DOORS.

"Don't look so cross, Edward, when I call you back to shut the door; grandmother feels the cold wintry wind; and besides, you will have to spend all your life shutting doors, and might as well begin now."

"Do forgive me, grandmother; I ought to be ashamed to cross you. But what do you mean? I am going to college; and then I am going to be a lawyer."

"Well, admitting all that, I imagine Squire Edward C—— will have a good many doors to shut, if he ever makes much of a man."

"What kind of doors? Do tell me, grandmother."

"Sit down a moment, and I will give you a list. "In the first place, the door of your ears must be closed against bad language, and evil counsel of the boys and young men you will meet with at college, or you will be undone. Let them once get possession of that door, and I would not give much for Edward C——'s future prospects.

"The door of your eyes, too, must be shut against bad books, idle novels, and low, wicked newspapers, or your studies will be neglected, and you will grow up a useless, ignorant man; you will close them sometimes against the fine things exposed for sale in the shop windows, or you will never learn to save your money, or have any left to give away.

"The door of your lips will need especial care, for they guard an unruly member, which makes great use of the bad company let in at the doors of the eyes and ears. The door is very apt to blow open; and if not constantly watched, will let out angry, trifling, or vulgar words. It will backbite, sometimes, worse than the winters wind, if it is left open too long. I would advise you to keep it shut much of the time, till you have laid up a store of knowledge, or at least, until you have something valuable to say.

"The inner door of your heart must be well shut against temptation, for conscience, the doorkeeper, grows very indifferent if you disregard his call; and sometimes drops asleep at his post, and when you may think you are very well, you are fast going down to ruin.

"If you carefully guard the outside doors of the eyes, ears and lips, you will keep out many cold blasts of sin, which get in before you think. This 'shutting doors," you see, Eddy, will be a serious business—one on which your well-doing in this life depends."—Mother's Magazine.

HAVE COURAGE TO SAY NO.

You're starting to-day on life's journey,
Along on the highway of life,
You'll meet with a thousand temptations,
Each city with evil is rife.
This world is a state of excitement,
There's danger wherever you go;
But if you are tempted in weakness,
Have courage, my boy, to say no.

The bright ruby wine may be offered,
No matter how tempting it be,
From poison that stings like an adder,
My boy, have the courage to flee.
The billiard saloons are inviting,
Decked out in their tinsel and show,
You may be invited to enter—
Have courage, my boy, to say no.

In courage alone lies your safety
When you the long journey begin,
And trust in a Heavenly Father,
Will keep you unspotted from sin.
Temptations will go on increasing,
As streams from a rivulet flow,
But if you are true to your manhood,
Have the courage, my boy, to say no.

THE MILLER AND THE CAMEL.

The Arabs repeat a fable of a miller, who was one day awakened by having the nose of a camel thrust into the window of the room where he was sleeping. "It is very cold out here," said the camel, "I only want to get my nose in." The miller granted his request. After a while the camel asked that he might get his neck in, and then he gained permission to have his fore feet in the room, and so, little by little, crowded in his whole body. The miller found his rude companion was becoming exceedingly troublesome, for the room was not large enough for both. When he complained to the camel, he received for answer, "If you do not like it you may leave; as for myself, I shall stay where I am."

So it is with sin. It comes and knocks at the heart, and pleads for only a little indulgence, and so goes on, increasing its demand until it becomes master in the soul. What then shall the young do but guard against sin, beware of its very appearance, and, above all, pray for the aid of the Holy Spirit, that by his grace they may be enabled to keep their heart with all diligence, and to guard against the entrance of anything that may defile or ruin the soul.—*Amer. BE HELPFUL.—Every member of the family can help some. Be willing and glad to do your share to relieve father and mother of their burden. In-doors, the girls can sweep and dust, and do many things for the general comfort. Out-of-doors, especially at this season, even the little boys can be useful in keeping good paths and clean walks; and all can do much, by carefully putting away their coats, and hats, and boots, and mittens, to make home pleasant and happy. Whether you are rich or poor, order, neatness, regularity, and thoughtfulness will go far toward your own real happiness as well as that of those about you. Try it.—S. S. Gazette.

WHEN HE COMES.

When we see the gates uplifting,
And the blue curtains torn away;
When we hear the arches ringing
With the high angelic lay;
Then in full and swelling chorus
Forth the dear sleeping ones will break,
And in shining robes before us,
The friendly hand again we'll take.

CHORUS.
When He comes in royal glory
Down the golden path of heaven,
Then we'll shout the old, old story,
To us a Prince, a King is given.

When earth wails with thunder moaning,
And resists her awful trial;
When the deep doth cease its foaming
From the fullness of His vial;
Then from hence on high ascending,
Where earthly flames can never break;
Through the pearly gateways entering,
The heavenly mansion we will take.

When the mighty angel standeth
Upon the earth and ocean hoar,
And with trumpet blast declareth—
Time, oh time, thy curse is o'er!
Then the brow with sorrow clouded,
With a crown shall shine forever;
Then in robes of radiance shrouded,
We shall walk and sing together.

When earth's final conflict's ended,
And right o'er wrong doth boldly sway;
When the rocks that once obtended,
And the heavens are passed away;
Then to earth again descending,
Around the crystal fount we'll throng;
There we'll live through time unending,
With a harp, a crown, and a song.

OUR SKEPTICAL AGE.

That our world is becoming skeptical and irreligious, is too apparent to be denied by any observer. The evidence is coming upon us with the power of an avalanche, as is evinced by the following. Seeing a notice in the Boston papers that the Rev. Mr. Alger, the popular theologian, would by request repeat his sermon "On the day of Judgment," Dec. 19th, in the fornoon; and feeling an interest to hear on such a great theme, from one of the great ones of earth, I attended; but O the disappointment I met with! 'T is no wonder now to me that the people are perishing for the word of the Lord; that they are so blind to present truth, when their great teachers are so blind. Mr. Alger commenced with no text, but commenced reading his sermon "on the day of judgment," of which the following is a specimen of his whole discourse:

"'Day of the Lord,' 'day of judgment,' means nothing more than calamities on Jews and Gentiles. Ezekiel's vision of the dry bones coming to life again, means nothing more than the future prosperity of the Jewish race. But Orthodoxy took it literally, hence the twelfth chapter of Daniel took the form of a literal resurrection. . . . The day of judgment is nothing more than a Jewish metaphor literalized. . . . Did Christ intend his signs (spoken of in Matt. 24) to be taken literally, or metaphorically? We think he did not intend them to be taken literally. . . . Christ refers all his signs spoken of by him to Jerusalem, and to similar events." The speaker spoke of the signs in the sun, moon and stars, when they fell like untimely figs, as all referring to the past. "To imply that Christ means anything pertaining to the judgment, implies insanity. . . . They must all be taken metaphorically and spiritually." Thus he endeavored to render nugatory every prophetic word of the Lord.

Again, he says: "Every providential event is a second coming of Christ, removing every obstacle in the way of the millennium." Taking this view, Christ may come thousands of times. But the Scriptures of truth define only one second coming without sin unto salvation. That second coming was to be as literal as was the first. See Acts first chapter, Matt. 24th, Luke 21st, Mark 13th, and John 14th.

If every providential event was a second coming of Christ, and the signs pertained to Jerusalem, will he explain why the signs spoken of have never been fulfilled in consecutive order until the present generation, beginning from May 19th, 1780? As Mr. Alger took the ground that it implied insanity to believe that the signs applied to the judgment, it follows that the just and good of every age were insane on that point. We find in the headings of most of our Bibles, when speaking of the signs spoken of by Christ, that they read: "Signs of his coming to judgment." But hear the word of the Lord. The disciples asked Christ what signs there should be when he was about to come to judgment at the end of the world. After enumerating the signs that should take place as a sign of his coming, he says in Matt. 24: 30, "They shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven." What takes place then? The judgment. The proof is found in the 25th chap. of Matthew, 31st, 32nd, 34th, 41st, and 46th verses. When the Son of man shall come, all nations shall be gathered, and separated into two classes. The just receive life eternal; the unjust everlasting destruction. "Depart from me, ye cursed." Is not the judgment clearly set forth here?

Mr. Alger was very liberal in his religious views. He says: "If you keep the moral law, you are a member of the kingdom of heaven." This would seem to give every latitude required. He said "it was an atrocious doctrine and dogma, to believe that Christ would come in flaming fire; that millions would rise from their graves, while squadrons of angels were filling the air." What saith the Scriptures? "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire."—2 Thess. 1: 7, 8. "We say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive, and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, . . and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air."—1 Thess. 4: 15–17. "I saw a great white throne; . . . and I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; . . . and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books; . . . . every man according to their works; . . . . and whosoever was not found written in the book of life, was cast into the lake of fire."—Rev. 20: 11–13. Now which of the two must we believe,—Mr. Alger, or the Scriptures of truth, in the above passages? Is not the judgment clearly set forth?

Mr. Alger says, "The time coming, when the small and great should stand at the judgment, is taken from daily police occurrences, and fancily taken into the future." If this is not taking away from the words of prophecy, I know not what is; and if it is, hear the curse in Rev. 22: 19: "If any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city."

Speaking of the holy city, Jerusalem, Mr. Alger says, it is impossible for the New Jerusalem to come down from heaven. Here he is at fault again, if we take the Scriptures as our guide. John saw in vision what would really be in the future. He says: "I John saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven." It will be a blessed time for the saints of God, when God shall cause all tears to cease flowing; when there shall be no more death, nor bitter partings; but where all is one eternal sunshine of life and happiness. Mr. Alger says, "Rewards and punishments are all to be taken spiritually." He claimed that we have our reward as we go along; and that the day of judgment is the whole career of the individual; consequently daily. Death is his final day of judgment.

Says Mr. Alger: "The Apocalyptic pictures of the future are atrocious; such as the opening of graves, fiery rains of brimstone," etc. So that when we read in Corinthians that, at the resurrection, the body shall be raised in glory, shall be like Christ's glorious body, shall put on immortality; when the saying is brought to pass, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Mr. Alger calls this glorious event, this crowning of the saints with immortality, this union with Christ, an "atrocious" doctrine. Surely Spiritualism can not go much ahead of this. He stated that one of Dr. Cumming's works (The Great Tribulation) had met with a sale of 300,000 copies, and that there was a sect in this country, called "Second Adventists," who kept their white robes ready. He remarked: "'T is all a delusion; away with such." He stated that the prophecies were not intended to be literal. Let us see how the prophecies and facts agree, he himself being witness. Was it not prophesied, and does not history verify the fulfillment concerning the rise and fall of the Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Grecian, and Roman empires? also the rise of the little horn, or Papal power?

At the conclusion of his sermon, a clapping of hands evinced the approbation of his audience. It would seem very odd to have Paul preach on the judgment to come, in such a manner?

In the Police Gazette of Dec. 18th, 1869, is an article on Socialism, which says: "Ministers must become christians. . . . The old-fashioned truths of the Bible must be brought forward with more power, and fashion sway our churches less than religion. But there is no time for parley. The enemy is now at work upon the foundations of morality, and if force is not soon organized to check this work, the whole superstructure will be toppling upon us, and involve the whole world in chaotic ruin." On the doctrine of affinities, the same paper says: "Marriage is fast becoming obsolete, and a system of concubinage instituted, which did not scourge mankind even in the dark ages of the world. . . . The laws of marriage are held up with contempt."

On the social tendencies of the age, he says: "Only a few of our older citizens recognize the great change which has come upon society within the past quarter of a century. . . . The old and once respected system of religion no longer finds a home in the popular heart. In many instances, we find popular preachers seldom look upon the Bible as their fathers looked upon it."

Such is society to-day, with the gloomy prospect before us that iniquity will increase. Who would not pray for the kingdom to come, when universal righteousness will prevail?

New Sharon, Me. JOHN TAYLOR.

— The most common error of men and women is that of looking for happiness somewhere outside of useful work. It has never yet been found, and never will be while the world stands. Of all the miserable human beings it has been our lot to know, they were the most wretched who had retired from useful employments, in order to enjoy themselves.

— By groans unutterable, the Lord ushers in joy unspeakable.

ABSENT AND PRESENT.

"We are confident, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord."

So says the beloved apostle Paul; and what can he mean? He tells us that he does not mean absent from all bodily existence and "present with the Lord" without any body at all. To leave his flesh behind him at death, as we leave off old garments, or as a prisoner leaves his cell, as a gem is taken from its casket, or as a bird leaves her cage, "and to be present with Christ" as a naked spirit, a great formless thought, was no part of Paul's faith or of his teaching. "Not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon." Doubtless, Paul heartily endorsed the faith of the patriarch of Uz, "Yet in my flesh shall I see God." Job had no idea that he must drop his flesh, in order to see God; but "in" it he should see him. One thing is noticeable with Job: he speaks of his dissolution; he speaks of Jesus' second coming,—"I shall stand at the latter day upon the earth." Between the two events he sees nothing to him worth mentioning; but at the latter event, he sees what makes his joy—"In my flesh shall I see God." Such, too, was Paul's hope. Not a hope that death would dislodge him from his flesh; this death does not do. The bodies of Abraham and Sarah, Isaac and Rebecca, were put in the cave of Machpelah; but where were they themselves? "There," precisely "there they buried Abraham [himself] and Sarah his wife; there they buried Isaac and Rebecca." Death had not separated either of these from their bodies, but exactly where we know their bodies rested, inspiration asserts they put Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, and Rebecca themselves.

Once more: Lazarus died. They buried his body. Where was he? "Where have ye laid him?" asks Jesus. "Come and see." Soon Jesus stands at that grave. He calls—"Lazarus, came forth." Is he there? Yes, "he that was dead came forth." Death had not sent Lazarus away from his body. Paul did not therefore mean this.

2nd. He did not mean "absent" from the church and "present with the Lord." The idea that Paul expected to be separated from every other christian when present with the Lord, is too absurd to need refutation. His teachings are too plain that "they without us" (Heb. 11: 40), nor "we" without "them" cannot be made perfect, or "be present with the Lord."—1 Thess. 4: 15–17.

3d. He means something.

4th. He doubtless means the same as when he speaks of being "in the body," and "out of the body." All will consent to this. "In the body," "out of the body," what can this mean? These expressions must denote either locality, as in the house, or out of it; or condition, as "in Christ," out of Christ. A few references to similar expressions of the apostle, will easily determine which. "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith." Certainly, he does not mean inside of the faith, but in a condition of trust in God. "In Christ" denotes condition, not locality. "So, then, they that are in the flesh cannot please God."—Rom. 8. Does he mean that no one can please God while located in the flesh, as a man locates in a tenement? "Ye are not in the flesh, . . . if so be that the Spirit of God dwells in you."—Ibid. Does he mean that we are disembodied when we receive the Holy Spirit? Certainly not. In both these instances he refers to condition, or state, and not to locality. So, also, "absent from the body" refers not to locality, as inside or outside, but to condition or state. "In the body" refers to this mortal, corruptible condition of life.

Paul's vision of Paradise was so real and vivid, that when past he could not tell whether he had actually been changed for a while from mortality to immortality, from corruption to incorruption, or not. He has written very plainly to us when this change shall take place beyond a doubt: "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed; for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."—1 Cor. 15: 52, 53. This change brings us to "ever be with the Lord."—1 Thess. 4: 17. That Paul, in 2 Cor. 5, when speaking of being "absent from the body," and being "present with the Lord," refers to this deliverance from mortality and corruptibility, is evident for several reasons:

1st. He has designated that time of being "changed" as emphatically the time "ever to be with the Lord."—1 Thess. 4: 15, 16, 17.

2nd. He clearly states, in 2 Cor. 5, that one reason, at least, why he was so "confident" and "willing" "to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord," was that "mortality might be swallowed up of life."—v. 4. This, death does not do; nor will it be done till "at the last trump." Paul therefore was not desiring death, but that deliverance from mortality and corruption which would bring him to "ever be with the Lord."

TESTED.

Brethren, beloved, our faith in the speedy coming of our Redeemer, to stand upon the earth in the latter days, is soon to be tested. And it is no small matter to stand in this gap. A few noble souls have been long looking for sublime events to startle and make sure to the waiting ones the fact that we have not looked nor labored in vain, when sounding loudly, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," and beseeching men to lay hold of eternal life. And now the affairs in the old world indicate the truth of the position. And while the Pope is claiming his infallibility, and a great council is making public declaration that it is so, France has withdrawn her protection. The papal states or kingdoms, filled with jealousy and hatred, are eating her flesh, preparatory to her utter downfall, like a mighty millstone cast into the sea. Add to this the array of signs that have been literally fulfilled, and the word of God brings us down into a narrow circle, which must terminate our hope and bring our long expected Lord. When we measure the abomination that has desolated the church; or the leopard beast with his forty-two mouth's tirade to bring us to the time of the end; or the tribulation to be shortened, that the sun may be darkened to tell us our whereabouts; or the taking away of papal dominion since 1859, all tell with unmistakable certainty the important moments in which we are living.

And now what shall be done? Shall we have any misgivings here, and yield the sacredness of our expectations? No, never. But trusting in the strong arm of Jehovah, gird ourselves for the coming conflict, and give more earnest publicity to the signs that are surrounding us, and with all good faith sound the alarm, crying the Lord is at hand; and if reproach comes in consequence of it, bear it with joyful delight. The Lord is with us, and his word will be justified. If we make some mistakes with regard to the fulfillment of prophecy, don't let that retard our progress in the study of the Scriptures of divine truth; but keep doing the will of God, relying upon the promise, "Ye shall know of the doctrine." Then, dear brethren, let your heads be uplifted now, as we are nearing the eventful period. Keep yourselves in the love of God, and love of one another, holding up the banner, standing up for Jesus, not being ashamed of our hope, that he may not be ashamed of us at his coming.

NOAH THE PREACHER.

It needs no imagination to conceive how the witlings of his day would laugh at the crazy old man, as they would deem him. We can fancy how the passers-by would sneer at him, as, with hammer in hand, he put together the timbers of his strange vessel. But nothing could shake his faith in God; nothing could divert him from his purpose. He knew that the rain would come, because God had said it would. He knew that his ship would preserve his family, because he was building it according to divine direction. And he warned the thoughtless and careless of his generation. St. Peter expressly tells us that he was "a preacher of righteousness." His voice fell on disobedient ears, but he could say, as St. Paul said to the Jews, "Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean." Thus, with nothing but a message from God, for one hundred and twenty years, Noah lived by faith, and it was a faith which never wavered for a single moment. It endured to the end, and he had his reward. The deluge came; the world perished; Noah and his family were saved.

Is it wrong to speak of this ancient servant of God as a hero? If to believe when God speaks; if to be gentle when revilers sneer; if to be calm when foes rage; if to be willing to be laid by, bidden only to trust God,—if all this is to be heroic, men never saw a truer hero than Noah. And who can describe the relief of that instant, when the gentle dove returned with the olive leaf in her mouth? Who can picture the expectation of those seven days which elapsed, and the joy with which the released family stepped upon the firm ground, to give expression to their gratitude in building, as the first act of their new life, an altar unto the Lord.—The Quiver.

COMFORT IN TRIBULATION.

The testimony of the word of God, as well as the experience of all ages, proves that "Through tribulations deep

The way to glory is."

Then let us not wonder, nor be dismayed, if, in our journey, we find many a cross to bear, many a rugged hill to climb, many a thorny path to trace. Let us rather be content to "follow where our Leader trod," and be willing to "suffer with him, that we may also reign with him."

Has the Captain of our salvation been made perfect through suffering, and shall we shrink and murmur when the trial of our faith comes? Has he been derided and rejected of men, and betrayed by one who professed to love him, and shall our faith falter when darkness gathers round us, and anguish weighs down our spirits? Rather let us "endure hardness as good soldiers," and "hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering."

Verily there is One in heaven who numbers our tears, and regards our plaintive cries. In his own good time, if we are faithful, and wait patiently for him, will he let the sunshine of his love into our hearts to brighten the gloom. . . . . As the stars shine forth the brightest when the night is darkest, so the graces of faith, hope, love, and humility, should illuminate our characters with the most heavenly radiance, when the sun of earthly hope is set, and the night of sorrow settles down upon us.

We read that God brought his ancient people into strait places, not only to test their love and fidelity to him, and to show them their own weakness and dependence, but to manifest forth in their behalf his own almighty power. Thus their faith would be strengthened. May the Lord help us not to murmur like ancient Israel, and distrust that almighty hand that has led us out thus far. We must learn to "walk by faith, and not by sight."

Trials seem to be the common lot of the people of God, though some are placed in peculiarly trying positions. Some are to stand alone in battling for the truth, with no sympathizing friend to cheer them with words of encouragement when faint and weary in the conflict, save the "still small voice" within, that sometimes whispers peace to their sorrowing hearts. The promise to such is, that those who have forsaken all for the kingdom of God's sake, "shall receive manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come everlasting life." O! what an inducement to be faithful! Who can estimate the value of eternal life!

Though God has a perfect right to exact obedience as a matter of duty, yet, in the plenitude of his love and compassion, he condescends to offer us, as rewards for well-doing, joys that far transcend our highest conceptions; and these joys are to be eternal. When we consider the great price that has been paid for our redemption, how it ought to humble us in the dust that we ever dare to murmur or complain at the little sacrifices we are called upon to make. How little we give to God when we give all, for we have but little to give, and all of this we have received from him. O! how hard are our hearts; how slow to be corrected of our wrongs! We read and wonder at the rebellious murmurings of the Israelites. Rather let us wonder at our own stubbornness and hardness of heart. We sink down under trials. We displease God by our lack of faith.

Look at faithful Abraham. Did his faith falter when subjected to the severest test that was ever required of mortal man? Paul declares that he staggered not at the promise of God. O! for Abrahamic faith and self-sacrifice among the people of God now! What have the most of us endured for Christ and the truth's sake that is worth speaking of? What are our trials compared with those of ancient worthies who stood up for God and his truth against kings and mighty ones of earth, and were not dismayed when called upon to lay down their lives for his sake? What are they compared with those of the long army of martyrs who have pressed their way through blood and flame to gain a passport to a better world than this? . . .

May the power of the truth get hold of our hearts, and make us more willing to suffer and do for God. Then will the Lord work for us, and for perishing souls around us. Trials, such as we have never yet experienced, await us; and may the constant prayer of God's people at this time be, "Lord, increase our faith."—Adv. Review.

— "Sacred to God," is to be inscribed on all our possessions, in the use of which we are to consult his honor, and acquiescence in his arrangements.

— Sorrow's best friend is employment.

NO CROSS, NO CROWN.

Our Savior says, that whosoever will be my disciple must "take up his cross" and follow him: by which doubtless is meant that his disciple must be willing to suffer for him, in any way in which God, in the course of his providence, may call him to suffer,—and even endure death itself, if thereby his glory and honor can be increased and advanced more than they could by living.

The people of God have ever been an afflicted, persecuted and tempted people; they have been "a cross-bearing people," and to maintain their claim to the christian character, it is necessary that they should be such; for our Savior has said, "In the world ye shall have tribulation."

Nor are we at the present day (if we live godly in Jesus Christ), to expect peace or rest for we have the same spiritual adversaries to contend with. We were assured of this when we united with God's people, and voluntarily assumed the christian name, and put on the christian armor, to become the self-denying, persevering soldiers of the cross. We are not called upon, it is true, to engage in bloody conflicts; but we are required to pass through scenes far more difficult and trying—to engage in a spiritual warfare with principalities and powers, and spiritual wickedness in high places.

We have crosses to take up. They are various. We are sometimes called to pass through the dark valley of affliction, where turbid waters roll at our feet and a dark and sunless sky is spread above our heads. Sometimes we have to endure temptations, trials, distress of mind, pain of body, disappointed hopes, the scorn, derision and persecution of the world. These, and a hundred other things that might be named, are crosses for the christian to take up. And our Savior's words will be ever sufficient to uphold his disciples, when called upon to bear these crosses.

"Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake." "Rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the apostles which were before you."

These crosses must be taken up. Whoever will become his disciple must not only deny himself, but he must also take up his cross and follow him—follow him through evil as well as through good report.

We must take up the cross willingly and joyfully, esteeming it to be a privilege to suffer with him, that we may also reign with him. We must take up the cross without a murmur, and instead of mourning, rejoice that we are counted worthy to suffer for his cause.

Soon we shall lay down the cross, and take up the crown—a crown of life, of righteousness, and glory, which the Lord the righteous Judge will give to all them that wait and long for his appearing,—a crown that shall never fade away, but grow brighter, and brighter, and brighter, as the revolving ages of eternity roll on in their ceaseless course.—Christian Witness.

CHRISTIAN COURTESY.

Every man has his faults, his peculiarities. Every one of us finds himself crossed by such failings of others from hour to hour, and if he were to resent them all, or even notice all, life would be intolerable. If for every burst of hasty temper and for every rudeness that wounds us in our daily path, we were to demand an apology, require an explanation, or resent it by retaliation, daily intercourse would be impossible.

The very science of social life consists in that gliding tact which avoids contact with the sharp angularities of character, which does not argue about such things, which does not seek to adjust or cure them all, but covers them as if it did not see. So a christian spirit throws a cloak of love over these things. It knows when it is wise not to see. That microscopic distinction in which all faults appear to captious men, who are ever blaming, dissenting, complaining, disappears in the calm gaze of love. And oh, it is this spirit which our christian society lacks, and which we will never get till each one begins with his own heart.—Earnest Christian.

For the World's Crisis.

A WARNING.

O careless sinner, how many more warnings do you need? how many more invitations will you slight? how much longer will you trample under your feet the blood of the Lamb? O sinner, awake from sleeping; behold the Judge stands before the door. You must shortly stand before the bar of God, and give an account of your stewardship. How stands your account? are you wasting the breath and time which your master is giving you, in sinning against him? Pause and reflect. Open your eyes and look around you. You are standing upon the last edge of time, and your foothold is fast crumbling beneath your feet. O careless one, will you still sleep on amid these awful dangers, unmindful of the many warnings which you receive, till the gathering storm shall burst in all its fury upon your head, and awake you to a sense of your awful doom? will this be your case? will you reject the love of Christ and die, with life eternal within your reach? will you have it said to you in the day of judgment, "Depart from me, I never knew you?" Remember the words of the Lord which saith: "Because I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded; but ye have set at naught all my counsel, and would none of my reproof; I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh; when your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you; then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me." Prov. 1: 24–28.

Remember, sinner, if you slight his offered mercy now, it will be his turn to slight you, in the day when he comes to make up his jewels. Yours will be the doleful lamentation, "the harvest is past, the summer is ended, and I am not saved." Sinner, be wise in time for eternity. Fly to the arms for mercy that are outstretched to receive you. Come to Christ, "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." He is the only refuge from the coming storm.

Charlton, Mass. A WATCHER.

For the World's Crisis.

A SHORT SERMON.

"Where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty."—2 COR. 3: 17.

Natural men have not the Spirit; and if they make a profession of religion, it is only the form of godliness without the power. But the true-hearted and humble souls who love God in sincerity, not only have the Spirit, but are led by the Spirit, and are truly the sons of God.

Liberty denotes freedom; and truly the humble soul that has been brought into the liberty of the sons of God, knows what freedom is; for whom the Lord makes free, is "free indeed." But what are we freed from? We answer, that the blessed book tells us that we are freed from "the bondage of corruption," and brought into the "liberty of the children of God." We know that if we are dead to the world, we are "freed from sin."

We must determine the residence of the Spirit by its operations and influences. The Spirit makes those spiritual in whom it dwells. They live in the Spirit, they walk in the Spirit, and they worship God in the Spirit. They that "have not the Spirit of Christ" are "none of his."

The apostle says: "Where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty." What liberty? A freedom from sin; a freedom in duty. It is in the present tense that we have freedom in the service and worship of God. But there is no freedom to indulge in popular worship. The Spirit does not give us liberty to gratify pride. The Spirit of God does not give us liberty to do wrong to any of our fellow beings, and especially to those of like precious faith. We should show the spirit of Christ in all our dealings with each other. We should show the same kind spirit to our brethren that we want shown to us. If we are governed by the tender and loving Spirit of Christ, we shall dislike a proud and haughty spirit, and manifest a kind and lovely disposition; for the Spirit of Christ will not lead us to frown on a brother or sister because they are poor and destitute in this world; but will lead us to love and pity them, and to speak kindly to them, and to cheer them up to duty before God, and to encourage them to trust in that mighty arm that moves the world.

Our blessed Lord tells us that "where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them"; and certainly if Jesus is there by the power of his Spirit, they are freed from sin, and enjoy the freedom of the Spirit, and the sweet liberty of the children of God. If we have the kind and lovely Spirit of Christ, we shall not be selfish, and want to do all the work ourselves; but shall be willing for each brother or sister to occupy their part of the time, either in singing, speaking, or praying, as the good Lord shall direct.

"The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance; against such there is no law." Gal. 5: 22. If we are led by the Spirit of God, we shall break no law, nor do any wrong.

Now, dear brethren, suffer a word of exhortation from an old man, nearly seventy years of age, who has been nearly fifty years in the delightful service of the Lord. Let us examine ourselves, and see if we are in the true faith of the gospel, and if the fruits of the Spirit of God are daily and hourly manifested in our lives. Let us take the Bible and try ourselves by the word of truth, and see if we are ready for the coming of our dear Savior. Let us not think, because we can pray loud and long, and can sing in splendid style, and talk with the tongue of an angel, that we are going to be saved. We must do our duty towards God, and also towards our fellow men, and live up to all the requirements of our heavenly Father, in order to be ready for the kingdom. May the good Lord prepare us all for the great, eventful day.

B. PERHAM.

Vernon, Vt.

A THRILLING SCENE.—At the Fifth National Campmeeting, held at Milton Grove, Oakington, Md., on the day when the dogma of infallibility was proclaimed in Rome, the following scene took place:

"Here a scene occurred which no pen or tongue can describe. It was announced that at about this time the Pope's infallibility was being promulgated at Rome. Rev. W. H. Boole arose and said: 'brethren, in the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ and his gospel, and in the midst of his church here assembled, I put this sixty acres of Maryland against all Rome.' The interest was intense, while the immense congregation arose to their feet, and with uplifted hands sang

'All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown him Lord of all.
Let every kindred, every tribe,
On this terrestrial ball,
To him all majesty ascribe,
And crown him Lord of all.'

Then with long, loud, multitudinous voices the shout arose—'We crown him! We crown him! Hallelujah!'

It did seem that the final day of Coronation had come, and that the hosts above had broken through the veil, not only to listen, but to join in placing the crown on the brow of Jesus. Never will that assembly forget that scene. It was quite on the verge of heaven."

EXPLANATION.

Sometimes persons write to us that they ordered their paper discontinued when the subscription expired, but it was not, and they think we want to force the Crisis upon them, and then force them to pay. We wish to force none. Post-masters, in returning papers to be discontinued, often send them with no post-office or State marked upon them, and we cannot look our large list all over to hunt up the name; and then there may be several of the same name on our list.

When any one orders a post-master to return a paper, always see that he puts on the post-office and State.

THE NATIONAL CAMPMEETING.

The time is drawing near when our great annual gathering at Springfield is to begin. It will be a meeting of great importance to us, as a people. Let each christian who attends do what he can to make it the most profitable of all our annual gatherings. Let those who cannot be present, remember the meeting by special prayer, that it may result in the salvation of many sinners, and the reclaiming of many backsliders. Let us all make this the special object of the meeting. If we do, great blessings will fall upon us, from the Most High, and we shall go away refreshed in the Lord, and better prepared for his coming and kingdom. This is the time for earnest work; and without it, we cannot expect to see much accomplished. If only one is saved as the result of the meeting, it will pay for all the trouble and expense attending the whole encampment.

Dear reader, should you be there, will you try to persuade at least one to come to Jesus? How blessed it will be to find even one in the kingdom, who was persuaded to be a christian by your feeble efforts. But few have any idea how much influence they may exert in persuading others to come to Jesus, till they make an effort. Let us all begin anew, and entreat the Lord to help us to win souls to Christ. Probationary time is nearly ended, and soon we must be present in the judgment scene. Will the King say, "Well done?"

Let this campmeeting have a special place in our daily prayers, that it may be the means of giving a new zeal and earnestness to all who may attend, and that every preacher may go forth from that great gathering to do more than ever, if possible, to save men from destruction. Let this be the burden of our prayers, Lord, fit us to work in thy vineyard; to do thy will in all things, and to keep "unspotted from the world." Let us all consecrate ourselves anew to the Lord before we go to the meeting; so that when we get there we shall be ready to enter at once into the work of trying to save others. Again we entreat every professed follower of Jesus, who is interested in the National Campmeeting, to make it a subject of special prayer, that it may accomplish more good than any other meeting ever held by those looking for the coming of Jesus. The dear Savior is able and willing to make it the best, if we will co-operate with him. Let us forsake all that will tend to prevent such a glorious result.

COME EARLY.

Those who wish to enjoy the campmeetings should go at the beginning, and stay as long as they can. Those who are present at the commencement, and rise up with the increased interest of the meeting, enjoy it much better than those who come late. It is seldom that late comers get much benefit, because, they are inclined to be spectators. Others are in advance of them in their feelings, and this leads them to think that they cannot add to the interest, so they conclude to keep still and take no part in the exercises; and as sure as they refuse to act, so surely they will receive but little or no benefit. But if you must come late or not at all, we would say come, and go to work at once after your arrival.

PREPARATION FOR CAMPMEETING.

Those who have never been to campmeeting, and purpose to attend this year, may be glad to receive advice in relation to what they will need for their comfort.

Bring one or two bed-quilts, a warm shawl, rubbers, pillow, or a pillow-case which can be filled with straw or leaves; wear plain clothing that is not too good for a seat on the straw; bring towels, soap, comb and brush; and each tent's company will probably need hammer and nails, some twine, looking-glass, matches, lantern, lamps; and if they can bring an axe, spade, augers and a crow-bar, they will find them useful in pitching their tents. Leave family and business cares all at home; bring abundance of long-suffering, kindness, forbearance, brotherly love, and love for Jesus and his coming. When a company of such meet on the camp-ground they will have a precious feast in the Lord, and sinners beholding them, will wish they were christians.

HOW TO ENJOY A CAMPMEETING.

It often happens that persons go to campmeeting, expecting to receive great benefit, but go home sadly disappointed. Why is this? It may not be because the meeting was not good, but because they neglected to do what was necessary in order to secure a blessing. Those who attend campmeetings expecting to receive good without taking an active part in the prayer and conference meetings, will generally go away feeling more leanness than when they came. It is a poor place to act the part of a spectator, if one wishes to get spiritual strength.

If one wishes to enjoy a campmeeting, and the same is true of other meetings, he should take the earliest opportunity to express his sympathy with Jesus by taking a part in some prayer and conference meeting.

It is well for each one to select some tent in which to attend the daily prayer-meetings, instead of floating where it happens. Said Dr. Franklin, when speaking of those who often change their place of residence: "A rolling stone gathers no moss;" by which he meant such people are likely to continue poor. This is true spiritually of those who are continually running from tent to tent at a campmeeting. Have a home, and have a holy fire there, and not be dependent on your neighbors.

Another important matter that should have special attention, is secret prayer. It often happens that this is most sadly neglected at campmeetings. Let no day begin or end without it. One should have the courage to bow down in the tent where he spends the night, and have a sweet season of prayerful communion with the Lord before leaving the tent, and so at night before retiring. We do not see how a professed child of the Lord can think of doing less than this. We think they must be in a starving condition when they do not this much.

FAMILY PRAYER.

Besides the secret prayer of every christian on the camp-ground, there should be family prayer in every tent. This is often sadly neglected at campmeeting. None but those who attend to this know its value. This year we hope every tent will have an altar. We go to campmeeting for the express purpose of receiving spiritual strength and comfort. Shall we be less particular than at home? There is a special need of cultivating our devotional feelings. If prayer is neglected, we soon grow cold and indifferent, and lose our interest for the salvation of others, and of ourselves. Spiritual consumption takes place; and death soon follows. If such come to campmeeting, let them apply in prayer for the healing balm, and begin anew in the service of the Lord. Think of the worth of "eternal life." None can afford to lose it. Let us secure that first.

CERTIFCATES FOR DELEGATES.

It is necessary that the delegates from the churches* to the annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, to be held at the National Campmeeting, in Springfield, should bring certificates showing that they were duly appointed. The following form will answer:

This is to certify that —— was duly appointed by the church in —— as a delegate to the annual meeting of the A. C. A., to be held on the National Campground, in Springfield, Mass., Aug. 23d, 1870.

[To be signed by the Elders, Clerk, or deacons of the church, or Chairman of the meeting called to appoint the delegates.]

This matter of choosing delegates should be attended to at once, in order that those appointed may have time to make suitable arrangements to be present. Every church can send one delegate, and an additional one for every fifty members over the first twenty-five. Let every church be fully represented.

* A church is understood to be any number of christians who meet together for the worship of the Lord.

CAMPMEETING GOSSIP.—Much injury is often done to the cause of Christ by a few gossiping ones, who sometimes attend campmeetings. In a few days they will sow enough discord to keep up a church fermentation for a whole year. They are busy gathering up the faults of others, to scatter them as tares among wheat. Such persons are to be dreaded worse than the cholera or small pox. Thank the Lord, backbiters, evil-speakers, and busybodies, cannot enter the kingdom. Let us all keep clear of such things.

TENT-MASTERS.—Every tent should appoint a tent-master to look after the welfare of the tent, and the interests of those who occupy it, and to see that the devotional exercises receive proper attention. No tent should be without a family altar. Let every professor of religion, who attends the campmeetings this year, go there expressly to worship the Lord of hosts, and to do all the good possible. The Lord is coming, and it is time we were all ready for "the marriage of the Lamb."

CONVEYANCE TO CAMP-GROUND.

Those who go to the National Campmeeting at Springfield, and wish to be carried to the ground, will inquire at the depot for Collins' campmeeting team, as usual. Fare ten cents, common trunk ten cts.; smaller baggage free. There will be a team at the depot on the arrival of the noon train on Thursday, Aug. 18th.

THE FAST.—We earnestly request all interested in the great gathering at Springfield, to remember Friday, Aug. 19th, as a day of fasting and prayer. Dear brethren and sisters, is it not time for all who are looking for the coming of Jesus to be more awake on this subject, and to be more entirely consecrated to the Lord, if we expect to be ready for "the marriage supper of the Lamb"? Let us be in earnest.

APPOINTMENTS.—As our paper will go to press earlier campmeeting week, it will be necessary for all to send their appointments so that we can get them by Saturday, Aug. 20th.

TREMONT CAMPMEETING.

We did not have the privilege of spending but one day and two nights at the Tremont campmeeting, but from what we saw and heard, we felt assured that the meeting will result in great good. Some of the meetings were truly heart-searching seasons, causing humble confessions, while tears flowed freely from penitent hearts. It was truly good to be there. It seemed like meetings we enjoyed twenty-seven years ago. We hope to see more such. It is time all christians were awake. Let all remember the caution of our Savior to beware of being found sleeping at the time of his coming. Satan is administering all the opiates in his power to keep us in a stupid, sleepy condition, so that we shall not see the signs of the times, and get ready for the coming of the Lord. Beware of his devices. Keep out of his pleasure parties; put on 'the whole armor of God'; conquer or die. We found many at the meeting who felt determined to be true soldiers of the cross, and wear a victor's crown when the King of kings shall come in glory.

We had the pleasure of meeting Bro. Wm. Sheldon at the meeting, and had much occasion to rejoice because his health is improving. He finds the sea air has a good effect upon his constitution. Pray for him.

THE WAR IN EUROPE.

It will be seen from our news columns, that the war in Europe is assuming gigantic proportions. The French are tremendously excited, especially in Paris, on account of the signal defeat of their army in the battle at Woerth, Saturday, August 6th. Paris was threatened with revolution for a few days after the news of the French defeat was known; but at present (Aug. 15th), the Imperialists appear to be masters of their position. A new ministry has been formed of men who are devoted to Napoleon and the Empire. They are men of signal ability, and will do all in their power to carry out the policy of the Emperor.

The battle at Woerth was a bloody one. It is said Marshal McMahon lost in killed, wounded, and prisoners, some twenty thousand out of fifty thousand. Both the Prussian and French "fought desperately." It is said the French troops manifested "wonderful bravery," especially the African corps, which fought eight hours "against overpowering odds."

The ardor and enthusiasm of the French soldiers is said to be now hourly increasing, and that they are eagerly awaiting the signal for another battle, which is about to commence upon a grand scale at or near Metz, a strongly fortified place, in the hands of the French. Many expect that it will be a decisive battle. No doubt it will surpass any thing in modern times. The New York Herald of Aug. 9th says: "The Bible prophets, who see in this fight the battle of Armageddon, may not be so far wrong after all."

PITTSFIELD CAMPMEETING.—It will be observed that the campmeeting is to be held at Pittsfield, Me., commencing Aug. 29th, instead of at Carmel, as stated last week.

HEALTH IMPROVED.—God has heard prayer on the behalf of Edwin Burnham. His health is improved, and he is now engaged in his usual work, full of comfort, love, and hope.

She is a little better now. Pray for us, that the will of God may be done. I long for the time when sickness and death, sorrow and pain, shall all be gone. O Lord, hasten the time."

TWO NEW TRACTS.

BY I. C. WELLCOME, YARMOUTH, ME.

THE INQUIRER.—CATHOLIC OR PROTESTANT: WHICH?

This tract gives a sketch of the great Roman apostasy, and the dogmas which caused it; the arguments which the early faithful christians used in opposing it; also of original Protestantism, its noble declaration of Bible principles against Romanized Platonism on the immortality of the soul; the relapse of Protestantism to the Platonic dogma; their present driftings towards Romanism, Rationalism, Universalism, and Spiritism, growing out of their dogma of the soul's immortality. To this is added some interesting sketches of the revival and progress of truth in our times, and a statement of the true gospel hope. 48 pp. Price, single, 8 cts.; by mail, 10 cts.; three for 20 cts.; $5 per hundred, by express.

CHURCH SPECTACLES.

This tract raises the questions, "Why do so few attend preaching, prayer, and conference meetings? Why are so few thoroughly converted to Christ?"

It finds an answer in the lack of love for Christ in the church, as manifested in the sinful practices by her members of pleasure parties, levees, fairs, banquetings, games, gambling, dancing, and other immoral conduct, which destroy the confidence of the unconverted in the religion they see exhibited. Many proofs are given, and faithful scriptural reproofs administered. It is a terrible picture faithfully drawn, and the only remedy clearly pointed out.

24 pp. 5 cts. single; three for 10 cts.; 40 cts. per dozen; forty for $1; $2 per hundred, by mail.

RECEIPTS.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you be kind enough to acknowledge the following receipts for my German tract-work: J. Wakefield, $1.00; John Rathgeber, $5.00; Wm. Cook, $3.00. Altogether, I have received $35.00 Though very little has been done so far for the German tract-work, yet I am thankful for this, and hope that the friends of the cause will keep in mind that what is to be done, must be done quickly, for there is not much time left, as every thing around us indicates. These $35 pay for the second edition of Bro. Grant's tract, "What is man?" which I have translated into the German. I would like to translate others, but am without means.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—I felt it both a duty and a pleasure to again communicate a few lines to you through our loved "Crisis," concerning my work and my present welfare; for I know there are many greatly interested in efforts for the instruction and elevation of the poor Freed-people. My winter's labor was hard, and during my spring term I found it necessary to save all my strength for the duties of my position. I closed my school the 24th of June, and although I regretted much to leave, it seemed duty. Undisturbed rest for brain and nerve is needed for a few weeks.

I am greatly encouraged, especially in my Sabbath School, and the temperance work. A good number are nicely reading the word of God, and it was the delight of my heart to help them understand. I could see ideas struggling to take form, and mind enlarging; and principles forming upon the Bible standard, and manners refining; old vicious habits condemned, and chaste, virtuous ones taking their place. Efforts directed especially against whiskey drinking were rewarded. Nothing like the amount of the poison is drank compared with that consumed a year ago. The Mayor of the town, himself a dealer, told me the whites drank as three to one of the blacks. In all that pertains to christian civilization, I could realize an improvement. Even the whites admitted the fact. With my might, I have labored in the fear of God to give them an intelligent idea of what the Bible requires of them, and I cannot but feel that a foundation has been laid for the advancement of still greater good.

This morning, I have been reading the "Crisis," and reviewing the evidences of Christ's soon coming: and, although Satan is ready, as usual, to scatter mist and doubts, still I cannot and would not resist the conviction that the end of all things is at hand. The question arises, Will it pay, in view of the shortness of time, to teach the young to read, and try to relieve the poor and the sick? The response comes clear, and unmistakable, Go teach all nations, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, visit the afflicted, and tell the sorrowing of that land where the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick. So I feel like girding myself anew, and if Providence permits, will return in a few weeks to my little corner, asking the prayers of brethren and sisters for grace to meet my responsibilities, and do some little good in the name of the Master.

Since my last letter to the "Crisis," I have received a few small sums. From Sr. Steeples, of Monroe, Ct., for freight on a box of papers, $1.50. She has my special thanks, for I feel so well satisfied to distribute the "Young Pilgrim," and if friends could keep my Sabbath School supplied with those papers after they have read them, I should be most thankful. From Bro. Jefferson, Nevada, a package of the same papers. Several packages of tracts and small articles for the poor from C. Green, M. D., Philadelpha. Many thanks. Several requested that their gifts be not acknowledged in the paper. All have my thanks, and be assured, friends, I have endeavored to use wisdom in giving all that has been sent. I have received in all from brethren and sisters about $32. Unavoidable expenses in getting my school started, and extreme destitution among some sick and dying, compelled me to use it all. The debt of $100. which I contracted, to finish paying for the house, is still on my hands, but the house and school lot is secured to the people by deed, for church and school purposes forever; and I am still trusting to be relieved from actual embarrassment, feeling that I have only done what was my duty.

To tried friends of other days, I express love and greatful remembrance. To all who have written words of cheer, I send a God bless you. You helped to lighten my pathway. Pray for me, that I may meet you in the kingdom. MRS. CAROLINE TULLER.

VERMONT CAMPMEETING.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—We have made arrangements to have our campmeeting commence on Sunday, Sept. 11th, and continue over the following Sabbath. The Vermont mission tent will be put up Thursday or Friday before the 11th, for a place to stay nights, while we are there at work. We want all that can to come and help prepare the ground, and put up a boarding tent; also other necessary buildings. Come prepared to stay through the meeting. Be there as soon as the 8th.

The meeting is to be held in a pleasant grove belonging to Zebina Spaulding, two miles above West Bethel depot, on the West Randolph road. The place is known as Finley's Bridge, or Camp Brook. We expect to make arrangements with the R. R. Co. to stop the trains at the Bridge; if so, it will not be a hundred rods to the ground. If we cannot do this, Bro. Wilson keeps the depot house, and he says he will convey all to the ground at a low price—twenty-five cents each. He will run a team three times a day. Every thing will be done to make the meeting pleasant. We want all who love the Lord to come at the commencement of the meeting to work for the salvation of souls, without regard to party names. Let every one be free. Brethren who are to have tents, and want poles ready on the ground for them, can have them by sending the length and number they want, to Jonah Washburn, or Geo. W. Lewis, West Bethel, Vt. If any should want lumber, please notify these brethren. Come, dear brothers and sisters, spare no pains to get to this meeting. Straw, hay, horse-keeping, grain or grass, and all other things necessary, can be had on or near the ground.

Our State Conference will be held in connection with the campmeeting. All business in connection with the conference will be attended to some time during the meeting. We want all the officers of the conference present, and a full representation at the meeting.

For the Committee, J. A. CLEAVELAND.

THE SEAT OF WAR.

I have just received a map of the seat of war in Europe, published by E. T. Lloyd, No. 30 Cortland St., New York, and would say to the brethren, who wish to keep posted on the movements of France and Prussia, that it is a splendid thing; minute, comprehensive, and reliable. In these times of national perplexity, no one needs information in regard to these things more than those looking for the coming of Jesus. Price 50 cts. by mail. Address as above.

HAVE YOU READ IT?

What? That tract by Bro. I. C. Wellcome, of 48 pp., entitled "The Inquirer." It is "multum in parvo." The question is raised, "Which are we? Catholic, or Protestant?" Paradoxical as it may appear, we are thinking many Protestants will find themselves to be Catholics in doctrine, on perusing this valuable tract. The public ought to be faithfully warned of the danger of tolerating any system of faith not in accordance with the word of God.

ANOTHER tract is also put out by Bro. W., entitled "Church Spectacles," and they are commendable for their clearness; no color about them; and if one cannot see "the reason why," on reading these unvarnished facts relating to a pleasure-seeking, world-loving church, as are recorded in this tract, their theological optics must certainly be at fault. We should keep up with the times in this respect, that we use every endeavor to obtain victory over the ever changing wiles of Satan. May the Lord help us to watch closely the signs of the times, apply our hearts unto wisdom, and may we be a people ready to meet him when he comes. L. F. COLE.

Correspondence.

From Sr. L. B. Weaver.

My dearly beloved brethren and sisters in the Lord:—For sometime my pen has been silent, but I have not forgotten any of the dear ones, and have hailed with great joy the dear "Crisis," which comes weekly, laden with food for the weary, hungry, starving souls; and my sad and sorrow-stricken heart has been cheered by the dear words from the household of faith. Especially did I receive much comfort from an article written by Bro. C. of Sardinia, N. Y. I said to sister, This piece was written for me, I know. Well, thank God for the consolation we can get from the dear ones in Jesus.

I have been passing through severe trials, and have been suffering more severely than ever, but Father has thus far upheld me, and he has promised to be with us to the end of time, if we will only listen to his sweet voice, and follow in the path he has marked out for us. Weeping endures but for a night, but joy eternal will come in the morn of glory. I am seeking with all my heart for that better land, where no sorrows will ever come, and where the cold, chilling hand of death is never felt or feared; where our loved ones will never again be torn from our fond embrace. O hasten, glad day, when all the earth will smile in gladness, and death and disease will be known no more. When will the last bright morning dawn, that ends our tears and sorrows? I can hardly realize that we shall ever be in a land where there will be no more pain or distress; but I know that if I am faithful to God, that I shall be in a land, by and by, where there is no more death, neither sorrow nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain. Blessed, blessed be the God of love. How good he is to prepare such a home for his people.

Dear ones, pray for poor unworthy me. How often does my heart and voice go up to God in prayer for all the dear ones of Jesus; those who are laboring in the vineyard of the Lord; those who are in trials severe; those who are deprived as poor sick sister Chloe is, of meeting with the dear ones to worship the Lord. As the time draws near for the campmeetings, how my whole being grows anxious to be there with you, to greet the dear ones. As you gather there, remember me. I shall be with you in spirit, but cannot be there in person. Dear ones, do come and see me. There are none of like precious faith nearer than ten miles. Occasionally, dear Bro. and Sr. Hemenway (God bless them) come and see me. I cannot begin to tell the good it does me. Now, do make extra effort to come and see me. You shall have a generous welcome to our humble home, and although poor in this world, and unable to pay your fare in coming to see us, yet I do believe the Master will pay you when he comes. Please write to me often. I frequently feel disheartened, and letters from the dear ones comfort my sad heart very much. After I get a good letter of consolation, I feel better for days.

I hope soon to meet you all in the fadeles bowers of Eden restored, where there will be no more parting, no more pain, sorrow or death. May this be the happy lot of both reader and writer, is the earnest prayer of your suffering sister, THERIA B. WEAVER.

No. Dana, Mass., July, 1870.

Extracts from Letters.

SR. B. S CLARK writes from Floyd, Iowa:—"Permit me to speak a few words through your worthy paper, as I have not contributed for its columns for some years. I would say to the dear brethren and sisters, that I am still trying to persevere in the good cause so that I may be ready to meet the Master when he comes. I feel truly that the time draweth night. O, let us still lift up our heads and rejoice. God help us to wake up, and see that our lamps are trimmed and burning. Death is yet abroad in our land, and is still causing us to mourn for our loved ones, which have fallen by his ruthless hand. May 10th, Sr. A. Manger, of Dubuque, fell a victim to death, after a long and distressing sickness. To know her was but to love her. She was a faithful child of God, a loving companion, and a kind and affectionate mother. She reared the family altar, there she bowed the knee, there she plead with God for her unconverted children, that they might be brought into the fold of God. Will they not be answered? Yes, I verily believe those tears will be blotted, and her prayers will be answered, to the salvation of their souls, that may meet their mother in the kingdom of our Lord."

SR. SMITH writes from South Hadley Falls, Mass., June 5th:—"Although we are despised, and our names cast out as evil by the world, and even by our own children, whom we have watched over in sickness and in health, who come to us and say: 'You have been a fool long enough, and a disgrace to your children.' O I tell you it is cutting to a mother; but our Savior told us it would be so, before the great day of our Lord would come; therefore let us be patient, and bear the scoffs and frowns a little while longer. Our blessed Lord has been through with all these, and more suffering, to bring us to that glorious place of rest. O I do bless and praise Jesus, that he ever led my mind to look into the blessed book to find the 'old paths.' What a rich reward lies before us, if we are only faithful in the service of that dear Savior to the end of our pilgrim journey. The language of my heart is, 'How long, O Lord, how long? But we will trust, wait, watch and pray, with our lamps trimmed and burning. Brethren and sisters, pray for me."

BRO. B. SPAULDING writes from Chelmsford, Mass., Aug. 7th, 1870:—"I am seventy years old, feeble in body but strong in faith that Jesus is soon coming to reign personally on the earth. I have been in his service for many years, and by his help, intend to endure to the end. My efforts look very weak and small to me. I lay no claim to any merit for what I have done. If I am saved at all it must be wholly by the merits of Christ."

BURRELL—SNOW. At Worcester, Mass., in the chapel, Aug. 7th, by Eld. Geo. A. Streeter, Mr. WILLIAM R. BURRELL and Miss OLIVE SNOW, both of Worcester.

Obituaries.

SMITH. Died in Camden, N. J., on Monday, July 25th, 1870, Eldridge, son of Bro. and Sr. Smith, aged nineteen years and eight months.

Eldridge found peace in Christ about two weeks before he died. His last words were, "I love Jesus, and Jesus loves me; doesn't he, mother?" These words were uttered as he lay dying in his mother's arms. He will be brought again from the dead at the last day. F. H. BURBANK.

FAY. Bro. and Sr. Fay's little twin daughter Adah fell asleep in Jesus, on Sunday morning, July 31st, 1870, in Camden, N. J., aged three weeks and five days.

"Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

F. H. BURBANK.

COBURN. Died in West Lynn, Mass., Aug. 10th, of cholera infantum, Irene, infant daughter of Bro. and Sr. Geo. E. Coburn, aged one year. Services conducted by Bro. Chas. E. Barnes.

WHITNEY. Died in Fitchburg, Mass., Aug. 5th, 1870, Charles Stillman Whitney, only child of Charles H. and Francis A. Whitney, aged one year, five months, and ten days.

Sleeping sweetly in the grave,
Till the Lord himself descend;
Then the Mighty One to save,
The reign of death shall end.
When that glorious day shall break,
That saints have longed to see,
Such lovely ones shall then awake
To immortality.

The funeral was attended by S. S. BREWER.

HEATH. Died at Penobscot, Me., July 28th, 1870, Isaac Heath, aged sixty-seven years, five months, and seventeen days.

Bro. Heath was one who loved and lived out the teachings of the Bible. He was converted when a young man, and united with the Calvinist Baptists; but soon after he joined the Methodist church, of which he was a member until his death. He was a class-leader for forty years; but about a year ago, he heard the second coming of Christ and its kindred doctrines preached, and after examining them by the word of God, he confessed them to be true, and as he had rather obey God and confess the truth, than to obey men and hold his peace, they took from him the "class papers"; but he bore all things meekly for Jesus' sake. He confessed that "his last days had been his best days." And while in his last sickness (quick consumption) he was confined to his room, it was good to be with him, and to hear words of counsel and encouragement from his lips. There is a crown laid up for him, which Christ will give him when he appears. Sermon by Eld. O. R. Wilson (Methodist), from Lam. 3: 32, 33.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

ROME, Aug. 8. The last of the French army of occupation left Civita Vecchia to-day in the steamers Magellan and Panama for Marseilles and the seat of war.

LONDON, Aug. 9. A French fleet of nine ironclads bound east, passed Dover to-day.

A dispatch from General Frossard, stationed between Metz and Nancy, is printed in the Patrie. It says the Emperor has been solicited to return to Paris by the home Generals and replies, "I will only return dead or victorious."

PARIS, Aug. 9. There is an immense uprising of the people of France to repel the Prussian invasion. It is said officially that 2,000,000 of men are ready to march, and that the reserved corps will number 1,000,000 men. The people are clamorous for organization and a leader.

THE ALLIES OF FRANCE.

In Sweden, Norway and Denmark the popular feeling is with France, and the Emperor of Russia gives proofs of the best understanding with France. Austria and Italy are arming, and will cause embarassment to Prussia. French diplomacy is not more idle than French arms will be, and France will prove that she has not degenerated in 1870.

Letters from Metz speak in the most undisguised way of the calamitous and fabulous incapacity of the Emperor, Marshal Leboeuf and all the military dandies composing the Imperial staff. The army has utterly lost confidence, and a change in commanders is an absolute necessity to prevent mutiny.

THE ARMY OF AFRICA

Is rapidly arriving at the seat of the coming war. Very rapid passages have been made. Some of the Zouaves who left Constantine on the 16th inst. have actually arrived at Strasbourg on the 22d.

THE MITRAILLEUR.

The Prussian officers and soldiers think lightly of the effectiveness of the mitrailleur, but believe that the Chessapot is a better weapon than the needle gun.

The Empress Eugenie is said to be devoured by a restless fear of the consequences of the great struggle she did so much to bring about. For hours she is engaged in consultation with her confessor, and her features have assumed a careworn and haggard appearance.

Lafaveur, the editor of the Soir, on arriving from Forbach, stated that he witnessed almost the entire destruction of General Frossard's corps, and claims to speak for the 30,000 soldiers who were cut to pieces by the fault of their leaders, and lamenting, with their last breath, that they fell uselessly.

PARIS, Aug. 9. La Liberte says that the Emperor is in the neighborhood of Metz.

The corps of Gen. Frossard has united with that of Bazaine, who now has 150,000 men.

LONDON, Aug. 12. The Bank of France suspended specie payment to-day. There is now in the Bank of France from thirty to forty millions of specie.

Another French fleet has left for the Baltic.

MCMAHON'S REPORT OF HIS DEFEAT.

PARIS, Aug. 12. The journals of Metz publish Marshal McMahon's report to the Emperor. The report says that the enemy, in greatly superior numbers, began the attack at 7 o'clock on Saturday morning, the first attack having been repulsed about noon. In the evening they re-opened the contest, throwing forward numerous sharpshooters, protected by the guns in a commanding position. Masses of infantry were then brought up, and at 4 o'clock in the afternoon McMahon was forced to order a retreat, which was effected in good order, the enemy's pursuit being without vigor and by no means troublesome. The Marshal was able to send only a partial list of the killed and wounded.

THE FRENCH ARMY AT METZ.

A dispatch from Metz, dated Aug. 11, says: "It has rained all day. The army is centered around this place and is being recruited and reinforced. The retreat of McMahon and Failly has been accomplished in excellent order. Marshal Bazaine is engaged in visiting and inspecting the troops under his command."

The report that the Prussians occupy Nancy is false.

THE NEW MINISTRY.

The Journal Officiel says that the Ministers of War and the Interior, on assuming control of their Departments, immediately took the most energetic measures to insure efficiency in the various branches of service.

LONDON, Aug. 12. [New York Tribune Special.] Our special correspondent from Paris, Thursday, writes:

Scraps of news about the recent defeats are permitted to be printed.

At Reichshofen the soldiers had no cartridges left. They had been without any for hours and made repeated bayonet charges.

The Prussians mowed them down in masses. The ammunition was on its way, but the wagons conveying it by rail were stopped at the station nearest the battle-field by the explosion of bombs from the Prussian spies who had signaled the train to their friends.

LONDON, Aug. 12. A letter from Rome, on the 8th inst., states that the Pope declares that in the case of a hostile occupation of any portion of the Pontifical territory he will leave the Papal domains and probably go to Malta.

The official information about the recent losses is still withheld, and Paris is exasperated by the bad faith of the Government, which had promised to give all the news. While McMahon admits the loss of 15,000 out of 18,000 men engaged, Frossard's losses at Saarbruck are wholly unknown.

NAPOLEON EULOGIZED.

The Examiner this week says that Napoleon adopts a course most worthy of his name and the gravity of his situation. Roused from indolent indecision by a stunning blow, he attains to the greatness of the situation in presence of peril unspeakable to himself, his family and to the proud nation which so lately reinstated him with kingly power. Laying aside conventionalities, he tells France of her danger and exhorts her to the rescue, not for his sake, but for her own.

The presence of Napoleon at the battle of Woerth is positively reaffirmed.

It is said that the Prussians have largely outnumbered the French in every engagement. The French claim that at Weissenburg 8000 men checked 80,000 Germans, with 120 guns, for four hours, the former losing 4000 men, while the enemy lost 10,000. They also assert that McMahon at Froschweiller had only 40,000 men against 90,000 Germans, yet the French only yielded when 100,000 more Germans were hurled upon them.

PARIS, Aug. 11. The Figaro says that a physician, who has just returned from the front, reports that even the Prussians acknowledge the superiority of the French guns. Nearly all the French soldiers were wounded in the legs and feet, while at the battle of Woerth the loss of the Prussians in killed and mortally wounded was immense, owing to the larger range of the chassepot. These facts make a strong impression on the soldiers.

The same gentleman says the French wounded were taken by the Prussians into their ambulances and treated with the utmost care and kindness, and he adds that the ambulance service of the enemy is perfectly organized.

LONDON, Aug. 11. The correspondent of the New York Herald, who was present at the battle of Woerth, telegraphs the following from Carlsruhe: The French official accounts of the battle at Woerth are wholly untrue. Marshal McMahon was completely routed. The French abandoned everything and fled, leaving behind them their killed and wounded and prisoners, numbering 20,000 out of 50,000 men engaged. The French held a strong position, but the Prussians fired with terrible precision and the French very badly. Both sides fought desperately. Finally the French gave way in a panic.

STRASBOURG BESIEGED.

The accounts representing Strasbourg still in communication with Nancy are untrue. Strasbourg has been completely besieged since Monday, and the gates are shut. Heavy artillery is now on the way to the Prussians. A short resistance is expected. The Crown Prince of Prussia is vigorously pushing McMahon, and another engagement is expected. It is believed the object of the Prussians is to get between Metz and Paris.

PARIS, Aug. 11—3.30 P. M. La Liberte has positive information that the Imperial headquarters are no longer at Metz.

Dispatches from the Prefects of Departments in all parts of the empire are filled with details of the patriotic excitement of the people. On all sides volunteers are coming forward.

LONDON, Aug. 11. Telegrams from Metz give the assurance that Marshal Bazaine is the real commander of the French army, while the Emperor is a mere nominal head. Only two corps now have their headquarters at Metz. The others are under Marshal McMahon.

MCMAHON'S DEFEAT.

It is stated that at the battle of Woerth the French charged the Prussians eleven times. McMahon was for fifteen hours in the saddle, without food, and finally fell fainting in a ditch, but was accidentally discovered and revived sufficiently to direct a retreat of the fragments of his army on foot.

LONDON, Aug. 11. The Times correspondent at Paris reports particulars of engagement at Saarbruck. 90,000 Prussians confronted second corps French army, thirty thousand, under Frossard. Prussians suddenly appeared in woods, and opened a terrific fire. Frossard's command advanced to assault Prussians from cover of forest, and opened a withering fire upon assaulting columns. A hundred times did the French, with heroic valor, advance close to the woods with desperate impetuosity, but always repulsed by Prussian artillery, served with terrible precision—Frossard's corps fearfully decimated. French troops complain loudly of incapacity of commanders.

PARIS, Aug. 13. Midnight. News from the army is awaited with anxiety. The decisive moment draws near. The information obtained by the war department shows that Prussia is concentrating a great army of invasion, consisting of 75,000 men, between Cologne and Rastadt. It is certainly ascertained that there are no longer more than 250,000 men in Alcace and Lorraine. The leaders of the French army are making preparations to resist this tide of invaders. More than 400,000 men will be brought together between the Vosges and Moselle within two days. The bulk of the army remain concentrated around Metz, where the first detachments of the corps of McMahon and of that of De Failly arrived yesterday.

LONDON, Aug. 14. A telegraphic despatch from Paris, received this evening denies the retreat of the French army. It states that Marshal Bazaine covers Metz with 200,000 men; that Gen. McMahon is posted in the woods south and west of Nancy with 90,000 men; that Gen. Canrobert is in reserve with 39,000 men, and that Gen. Douay is in Belfort with 22,000 men.

The telegram also states that Gen. Trochu will have at Chalons Sur Marne in two days 35,000 guerilir volunteers, the free corps to operate.

LONGUELLE, Aug. 14, 10 P. M. The army commenced to cross to the left bank of the Moselle this morning. Our advance guard had no knowledge of the presence of any force of the enemy. When half of our army had crossed over the Prussians suddenly attacked us in great force, but after a fight of four hours they were repulsed, with great loss to them.

(Signed) NAPOLEON.

FLORENCE, Aug. 15. A despatch from Palermo announces the arrest yesterday of Mazzini. He had just arrived from Genoa. After his arrest he was taken to Gaeta.

PERE HYACINTHE has volunteered as a private in a regiment for the defence of Paris.

Victor Emanuel and Napoleon.

The Gaulois reports that Victor Emanuel wrote a long letter to Napoleon saying: "I gave you my word, and am ready to keep it; but I must tell you, should I leave Italy I may never reenter it." The Gaulois adds that the Emperor has released the King from his promise.

NEW YORK, Aug. 15. A battle was fought yesterday near Metz. Both parties claim the victory.

LONDON, Aug. 14. The British Consul at Hamburg telegraphs that the mouths of the rivers Elbe, Eyder, Jahde and Weser are blockaded by the French fleet.

ROME, Aug. 12. The Archbishop of Buenos Ayres died yesterday morning in this city.

DOMESTIC.

PORTSMOUTH, Aug. 14. Admiral Farragut died at fifty-eight minutes to twelve o'clock today.

— In this country, at the last census, there were 54,000 churches, one for every 583 persons of all ages.

Conveyance from the station to camp-ground not to exceed twenty-five cts. for each person. As far as practicable, reach Plainville by noon trains. Our object is to worship and glorify God, to strengthen the weak, promote brotherly love, and win sinners to Christ. To this end, we invite all who love our Lord Jesus Christ to join with us, from far and near. The deep, dark clouds of national distress, together with the muttering thunders of the final conflict, are the startling summons to meet the Bridegroom. Let us come, then, as pilgrims and strangers to prepare for the event, instead of fashionable devotees to eat and to drink. Come, brethren and sisters, consecrated to God, ready to work for him, that in the great judgment day many sheaves may be gathered as fruits of this meeting. Amen.

Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the Advent brethren of Milo, and vicinity, though their numbers are few, have felt for a long time that it would be for their good, and the glory of God, for them to establish regular conference meetings. They have accordingly procured the Good Templar's Hall, a neat and commodious room, for religious worship, situated in Milo Village. The brethren have met and decided to hold conference meetings regularly once in four weeks. Our first meeting will be holden on Saturday, the third day of September, at 2 o'clock P. M., and every fourth Saturday after that date. Bro. F. A. Baker, of Levant, Me., is requested to meet us in conference, and preach to us on the Sabbath following. We most heartily invite all who love the Lord, of every name, to come in and worship with us. It is our earnest prayer that God would enable us, by his grace, to faithfully discharge our duties to him and to our fellow men; that we may with confidence claim and long for the glorious reward soon to be given to all the faithful. For the brethren,

J. K. BILLINGTON.

Campmeeting at Mechanic Falls.

The committee chosen at B. Pond last year, have thought proper to locate a campmeeting, to be held permanently at Mechanic Falls, Me. A beautiful spot is found, and nearly prepared, which we believe will fully meet the expectations of the people. Now what we wish is a general rally of the brethren and sisters, that our meeting may prove a success. Prepare your tents, ye companies in the armies of the Lord, and be ready for a march to camp, about Sept. 12th. Particulars about railroads and other matters will be given by the full Board of the committee soon.

J. ALBERT LIBBY.

Notice.

The seventh annual campmeeting of the Adventists of the Interior will be held at Amboy, Ill., commencing Saturday, Sept. 3d, 1870. This point has been selected as the most eligible that could be obtained, and as combining more advantages than any other location at our command. It is quite easy of access, and an excellent ground. All possible preparations will be made for the convenience and comfort of those who attend.

Amboy is situated upon the Illinois Central Railway, between Dixon and Mendota. At Mendota excellent connection is made with the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Road, every day about noon, trains from the east, west, north and south, arriving within a few moments of each other. Be sure and take a train that will bring you to Mendota about noon. At Dixon, connection is made with the Northwestern Road. At La Salle, with the Rock Island and Pacific Road. At Bloomington, with the Alton and St. Louis Road. At Freeport, with the Racine and Milwaukee Road. We cannot now give the connections at these junctions, but may do so hereafter.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R.

Persons coming to camp on the Illinois Central Road, will pay full fare in going to Amboy. On the camp-ground, they will receive a certificate which will enable them to return on payment of one-fifth fare.

Lumber for tent-frames will be furnished free. Straw also will be furnished free. Hay and feed for horses will be furnished at cost. Board, at the most reasonable rates, will be furnished; and if there should be profits accruing in this department, they will be applied to the expenses of the meeting. J. M. SHOOK, Secretary.

Other matters will be noticed hereafter.

East Boston.

During the great fire there July 25th, the Hall where our brethren have held their meetings for the past year was burned, and in consequence they have no place to hold meetings. As soon as a place can be obtained, notice will be given in the Crisis. By order of the Brn.,

A. P. MOORE.

Tent Meeting.

The Mass. conference tent will be pitched at Hurd's Corner, Needham, Mass., near Upper Falls, Sept. 16th, and continue meetings daily over two Sundays, or more, as the Lord may direct. We hope the disciples of Jesus will come and help in the meeting. This is the time to awake. Startling events may be expected, making even more certain that the Lord is at hand. Bro. Couch and others may be expected to labor at this meeting. By order of the Committee,

L. BOUTELL.

Grove Meeting in Fairfield, Ohio.

There will be a grove meeting in Fairfield, Ohio, in woods belonging to Israel Weeks, adjacent to the Second Advent Bethel Chapel, two and a half miles east of Steam Berg, commencing Thursday, Sept. 1st, and continuing over Sunday, the 4th. Bro. McCullock, pastor of Nevada church, Ohio, and other preaching brethren, are expected to meet with us. Now, brethren, as we have no campmeeting near us, let us all turn out in northern Ohio, and make this a good substitute. Preaching on the ground at 10.30 A. M. and 1.30 P. M., and in the chapel in the evening. Come with baskets well filled for noon lunch, and hearts prepared, and voices tuned to make that grove vocal with the praises of God. Provision is made for the entertainment of strangers.

GEO. W. STETSON, Pastor.

A Suggesion.

A suggestion has been made by some to have a small campmeeting somewhere in the centre of the following churches: Danielsonville, Abington, West Gloucester, Foster, North Scituate, and others in the region round about. It may be located in the north part of Foster, on the stage line from Providence to Danielsonville. Bro. Stone, one of the owners of the line, says the fare can be reduced. There will be no boarding table on the ground. Each family will provide for themselves. Some one will sell provisions on the ground, if this plan is matured. Particulars hereafter.

E. BELLOWS.

Campmeeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a campmeeting in New Milford, Ct., commencing Sept. 3d, and hold over the eleventh. Board will be had on the ground at a reasonable rate. The camp-ground lies three-fourths of a mile from the depot on the Housatonic rail road. Bring your tents with you. Come filled with the Holy Spirit, praying the blessing of God to rest on the meeting.

For the Committee, J. L. WOOD.

Annual Campmeeting.

The annual campmeeting for the eastern part of Maine, will be held at Pittsfield, Me., commencing Monday, Aug. 29th, 1870, and continue over the following Sabbath. This meeting is to represent the whole body, and is one with the conference and missionary enterprise of the Advent people. All, both ministers and people, are cordially invited to come up to this feast and unite for the general good. Arrangements are made for board and horse-keeping, and a reduction of railroad fare over the Portland and Kennebec R. R., also over the Maine Central, from Aug. 27th to Sept. 5th. Correspond with B. S. COLBY, Warner Village, N. H. ALLEN DAMON.

Notice.

As the time has come for us to start the Mass. Mission Tent, we shall need funds to carry forward the work; and we wish those who have subscribed would forward the amount to the Treasurer, C. GOODRICH, No. 7 Salem Street, Boston, as soon as convenient.

S. W. THURBER, Pres. of Conf.

Notice.

To the young men and women in Christ:—Thinking that more ought to be done than is being done for the good and advancement of our young people, and believing that the only way to secure that most desirable end is to be united, and work in harmony the one with the other; and knowing that united labor and the spirit of harmony can be obtained only by organized operation; therefore, we, the undersigned, would issue a call for a meeting of all young men and women, who are waiting for the "blessed hope," to be held at the Alton Bay campground, Thursday, Sept. 8th, at 9 A. M., to see what can be done in this direction. A cordial invitation is extended to all those interested to be present. We hope every young preacher, whether male or female, will make this matter one of deep, personal interest. E. S. MOULTON.

A. DAMON.

Notice.

The "Maine Mission Tent" has been in the field for several weeks, doing good service under the labors of Bro. and Sr. Taylor, Bro. W. H. Mitchell, and others. Any wishing to contribute funds to help along the tent interests in Maine, can send such aid to W. H. Mitchell or R. R. York.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be preaching on ground selected for Conn. campmeeting, two miles and a half below Plainville, Ct., Sabbath, Sept. 11th. For the committee, O. D. WOODRUFF.

Book Notice.

As the Lord has blest me with health to travel again this year, I would say to brethren that I shall be at the Springfield campmeeting with a good supply of "Death not Life," to deal out at cost by the dozen, so that more may be got to lend and give away to spread truth. They will be free to the poor. I shall also have McCulloh's large work there for $1.60, as noticed in the Crisis a few weeks ago, J. BLAIN.

Notice.

The next regular conference for Fairfield, Ohio, will be held Sept. 3d and 4th, and will probably be a grove meeting. Let all be duly prepared.

G. W. STETSON, Pastor.

Notice.

By the permission of the Lord, there will be a conference held at Carr's Corner, Dexter, Me., every third Saturday in each month, at two o'clock, and also meeting on Lord's day following. Preaching brethren coming this way are invited to lend a helping hand. A pilgrim's home may be found at John H. Brown's. O. G. TRUNDY.

Read! Read!!

Send your pledges and monies at once to Bro. Ira Aldrich, Whitefield, N. H., for the Tent. Come, brethren in Grafton and Coos Counties, N. H., let the amount be raised immediately, for we want the tent in the field doing its work.

A. W. SIBLEY.

Notice.

The brethren in Bowdoinham Village, Me., have hired Hinkley's Hall for a few months, and invite preaching brethren who can come and break the bread of life, to give notice through the Crisis.

For the brethren, N. G. REED.

Notice.

Will our brethren, who wish the campmeeting committee to build their tents at Alton Bay, send to me at once (at Farmington, N. H.), the plan, or how they wish them built? J. G. SMITH.

LEAVE ALL TO GOD.

Leave all to God, who knoweth all,
To whom there's neither great nor small,
But one vast comprehending plan,
Thyself involved, ere worlds began;
Leave all to him.

Leave all to him, he guideth all;
He hears the weakest when they call,
For none are mightier than those
Who on his unseen arm repose;
Leave all to him.

He'll scourge thee when nought else will do,
But make thee more than conqueror too;
Scourge thee perhaps against thy will,
Yet trust him,—he's thy Father still;
Leave all to him.

Though friends may turn to bitter foes,
Leave all to him, he ever knows
When thou wouldst lean too much on these,
And seek, with them, thyself to please;
Leave all to him.

Leave all to him, thy want, thy care,
That nameless grief that none may share;
That daily sum of wearying toils
That vexes, and thy peace despoils;
Leave all to him.

Leave all to him, then sweetly lie
Beneath his watchful, loving eye,
And say, fulfill thy will in me;
In life, in death, eternally,
Leave all to him.

WHAT IS TRUTH?

When speaking of the wicked, Paul says: "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and … the glory of his power."—2 Thess. 1: where agrees with the admonition of Christ, the body, as: "Fear not them which kill but rather fear … not able to kill the soul; both soul and body which is able to destroy "For behold the day cometh."—Matt. 10: 28. as an oven; and all the proud that shall burn that do wickedly, shall be stubble, and all day cometh that shall burn them up, … the the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. . . . And ye shall tread down the wicked, for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I do this, saith the Lord of hosts."—Mal. 4: 1–3. "And I saw the dead small and great stand before God, and the books were opened, and another book was opened which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things that were written in the books according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life, was cast into the lake of fire."—Rev. 20: 12–15. "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad."—2 Cor. 5: 10. "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Rom. 6: 23. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively [or living] hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away; reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God, through faith, unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time."—1 Pet. 1: 3–5. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."—1 John 3: 2. "Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Phil. 3: 21.

O blessed hope! O glorious anticipation! Truly great things are reserved for the faithful child of God; all to be given freely through faith in Christ. God not only gives us life, but with it "all things to inherit." Rev. 21: 7. And this possession shall not be for a little time; no, no; for when "the kingdom, and dominion, and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him" (Dan. 7: 27), then shall the meek "inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace."—Ps. 37: 10. When the righteous "inherit the land, and dwell therein forever" (Ps. 37: 29), then the New Jerusalem (Rev. 21: 2) will have come down on the new earth (Rev. 21: 1) with all its glories (Rev. 21: 10–27). All sin and sorrow, pain and death, will be for ever destroyed, together with him that had the power of death (Heb. 2: 14); and we shall be delivered and permitted to walk those golden streets (Rev. 21: 21), drink of the river of the water of life (Rev. 22: 1), and eat the fruit of life's fair tree (v. 2). Then shall we serve our God and see his face (v. 4). O, is not this enough to urge us to renewed action in the cause of our blessed Master?

Brethren and sisters in Christ, it is high time we were awake, and in earnest in this great work of saving our fellow men from the coming storm. We may feel we can do but very little; well, then, let us do that little, so that when the Master comes, it may be said of us we have done what we could. Pray with and for your unconverted friends and neighbors; distribute tracts, praying God to bless your efforts to the salvation of souls. Let the light that God has given you shine in these dark days, when infidelity and Spiritualism are sweeping our land with their deadly poison; taking from the bosom of the churches once useful members, and from their pulpits many an able minister, and converting them into ministers of Satan, fully prepared to do his damning work of leading others down to death. Let every brother and sister arouse to this all-important truth. Let your light shine. See to it that you are not occupying a position that will in any way uphold that giant evil, that crowning work of the enemy,—Spiritualism. They recognize any one as a Spiritualist that will admit that man is immortal, without Christ. Get on the whole gospel armor, and use the sword of the Spirit with all your powers, praying God to aid, assist, and direct, and give you victory at last, remembering that "to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."—Jas. 4: 17. S. TENNEY.

THE LIFE AND WALK OF FAITH.

"I may be faint and weary," says the believer, "but my God cannot. I may alter and fluctuate as to my frames, but my Redeemer is unchangeably the same. I might utterly fail and come to nothing, if left to myself; but the Spirit of truth hath said, 'I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee.' He will renew my strength, either by changing my weakness into strength, or by enduing me with his own power. He is wise to see and provide for all my dangers; he is rich to relieve and succor me in all my wants; he is gracious to hear and answer all my prayers; he is omnipotent to deliver and defend me from all my enemies; he is faithful to perfect and perform all his own promises.

Oh, what a great and glorious Savior for such a mean and worthless sinner! Oh, what a bountiful and graciously indulgent Friend for such a base and insignificant rebel! What, what am I, when I compare myself, and all that I am of myself, with what I can conceive of my God, and with what he hath kindly promised even to me! What a mystery am I even to myself, to angels, to men! A worm of earth to be like a star of heaven; a corruptible sinner to be an incorruptible saint; a rebel to be made a child; an outlaw to become an heir; a stronghold of the devil to be changed into a temple of God; an enemy and a beggar to be exalted to a throne, to be in friendship with God, one with Christ, a possessor of his Spirit, and of all his honor, happiness and glory forevermore; and without any right to any one thing on my part, but the miseries of a lowest hell!

Oh, what manner, and what matter of love is this! Lord, take my heart, my soul, my all! I can render thee no more, and I would render thee no less."—Ambrose Serle.

THE KEYS OF THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN."—Matt. 16: 19.

The question is …ly asked, What are we to understand by "the keys of the kingdom of heaven," which Christ promised to give unto Peter? In answering this question, we remark in the first place that a key is an instrument of great importance. Its use is to lock and unlock, bar and unbar, and thus secure, and also give access to valuable treasures. We understand the gospel to be the key to the kingdom, and the commission which Christ gave to his disciples fully warrants us in this belief: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature; he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned (Mark 16: 15); consequently salvation, and an admittance into the "kingdom of heaven," are consequent upon our believing and obeying the gospel. "The kingdom of heaven," with all its glorious treasures, is securely locked and barred from all evil doers. The apostle says, "They which do such things, shall not inherit the kingdom of God." Gal. 5: 21. The sinner is under sentence of death. The law of God has placed him there. He is bound by that law, while the christian, the pardoned sinner, is loosed, liberated, made welcome to all the blessings of the kingdom; hence the apostle says, "The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Rom. 8: 2.

The gospel is the only means given whereby we can gain an entrance into the kingdom of God; and it has pleased God, "by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe" (1 Cor. 1: 21); hence the apostle could say, "We are unto God a sweet savor of Christ in them that are saved, and in them that perish; to the one we are a savor of death unto death, and to the other a savor of life unto life." 2 Cor. 2: 15–16. This view makes the Bible all plain, and one harmonious whole, presenting the means, and putting it within the reach of every son and daughter of Adam, and thus leaving us without excuse. May the Lord enable us to accept of the provisions made, and finally share in the glories of the kingdom. E. McCULLOCH.

PAUL A MATHEMATICIAN.

A gentleman of a good deal of intelligence said to me,—we were comparing men, and speaking of the apostle Paul,—that he was indeed a very great and good man, of a great and comprehensive mind; but he did not suppose him a great mathematician. They had not in that age reached the highest mathematical methods.

I told him I thought Paul had. At any rate, he knew how to reckon. He was certainly master of the highest arithmetic. "I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." "Likewise reckon ye yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord."

He also knew how to count. "Neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God. Yea, doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them as dung, that I may win Christ."

Now here are two sums under the rule of loss and gain, that Paul could work out and prove, and had done it, as no mathematician of that age or this ever did. He worked under the question of his Lord and Master—"What shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Paul had won Christ, and was continually endeavoring to teach others the method and rule of the same arithmetic.

Then, again, he was master of logic. He knew the method of comprehending the incomprehensible. "That ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the length and breadth and depth and height, and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge; that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God." He knew how to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ; and out of the same, by the divine Spirit, could draw bills of exchange for his believing hearers on eternity. And Paul could square the circle of eternity by the love of Christ, could measure the infinite and immeasurable by that, and had been taught to make that the quadrant and guide of his own being and actions for time and eternity. Hear him while he lays down the method and the conclusions:

"For the love of Christ constraineth us, because we thus judge"—that is, thus reckon and demonstrate for ourselves and others, for this is a sum in the higher mathematics of the eternities, that "if one died for all, then were all dead." The dignity of the Son of God is Paul's logarithms of the eternal world; his method of approximation to the measurement of the absolute, the infinite, the eternal; his system of sines, co-sines, and tangents; the basis of his loxodromic curves, cutting all the meridians at the same angle, continually approaching, but never reaching the inapproachable and unfathomable, and obtaining all certainties from that eternal approach. Paul could measure the effect of that approach, and of the first beginning of a motion toward it in the soul; the effect of the light inapproachable upon the soul drawn torward it, and yielding to its attraction, so that perhaps he had gone even beyond the science of this modern age, even in that which is the culminating boast of its discoveries—the properties and laws of light.

It is said that our discoveries in light—the polarization of light more especially—show us a method of calculating the latitude and longitude by the degree of refraction different at different points. It may be measured so precisely, and the rate ascertained according to the distance, or the distance according to the rate of refraction, as to determine, even without the use of the quadrant, at noon the position of the ship.

If it be so in physical science, and in relation to material structures and motions, how much more in moral. . . . The place and the motion of a man's life, near to God or at a distance from him, may be determined with accuracy by the effect of revealed light upon him—God's light; by the manner in which he receives, and the sense and sensibility with which he holds, the informing and transfiguring truths directed upon us from God, especially concerning Christ. The refraction of these doctrines in a man's heart is as good as polarized light to tell where a man stands spiritually. Paul could tell where every man stood, what was his character, and what to do with him, by presenting Christ to him; and how to bring him to God and have him made over anew in God's image. If there be any higher or more practical mathematics, we should like to know them and the master of them.—George B. Cheever, D. D., in New York Independent.

CHRIS. MISSION CAMPMEETING.

From the interest that was taken in the meeting, and the future prospect, it was thought best to arrange for an annual campmeeting. And as the ground of our present location could be leased for a number of years, it was thought best to lease the same, and establish the meeting for years, or until Jesus should come. Accordingly the following persons were appointed for a Campmeeting Board: P. S. W. Deyo, Strawberry Point, President; Alonzo Raymond, Floyd, Secretary; W. H. Peck, New Hartford, Treasurer; J. J. Towsley, Parkersburg, Auditor.

The following persons were appointed Campmeeting Committee: W. H. Peck, Warren Sherman, William Taylor, Eber Dunham, H. L. Bowen, Eben Hurlbert, Silas Peck, Darius Kenison.

I would add for the comfort of the saints scattered abroad, that I arrived on the ground July 5th, the meeting being in progress then three days. I found the brethren united, hearts filled with the love of God, and hoping for great results. I found immediately that they were having good meetings. The Lord truly was with them. The brethren kept coming in from all parts from day to day. The meeting increased in interest until the close. The Lord was with us. I felt some like the apostles—"Let us build tabernacles." It was a heavenly place in Christ Jesus. It was the best meeting I ever enjoyed. Peace reigned in all our borders. I never saw the equal. Every one seemed to be interested in the success of the meeting, and as one brother remarked, when the congregations left the ground after evening service (and we had large congregations beyond all expectation), one could lie down and go to sleep while the people were retiring. God will bless such a community. We had no rowdyism or anything of the kind. It speaks well for the people of New Hartford.

There were a large number of ministers present, and as all could not preach, the following names are those who did the preaching, the others taking an active part in the prayer and conference meetings, and thus all worked harmoniously for God. Elds. C. C. Ramsay, P. S. W. Deyo, S. K. Gibson, A. A. Wilber, and the writer. We put Bro. Ramsay in the front of the battle, and he was fully competent for the task. May the Lord bless him in his arduous and faithful labors. I would to God we had more such men.

A goodly number manifested a desire to be Christians, and at the close, eight happy souls obeyed the Lord in baptism. In the evening a large number united in eating the Lord's Supper. Thus closed the best meeting I ever attended. All felt reluctant to part, but hoped to be faithful, and meet in the kingdom when Jesus should come.

Dear brethren and sisters of New Hartford and all Iowa, let us all try to so live that if Jesus should not come, and our lives are spared, that we may have still a better meeting next year. In behalf of the Campmeeting Committee, ALONZO RAYMOND,
Secretary of Board.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.

BRO. GRANT:—I notice there are many who do not pay up for their paper, the Crisis. There are many, yea, most all are at fault about this; but some are not, for many live away back in the country, who never wrote a letter in their lives. I can think of some now. The fault is here: Brn. in different places get up clubs for a year, or six months, and never trouble themselves any further about it. The year is up, the six months are up, still the paper comes. Some do not wish to take it longer; some dare not send money through the post-office. There are some in Wickford, R. I., and Lafayette, R. I., who have not paid anything in two or three years. They would pay, if some reliable Bro. had authority from you to collect it.

I would suggest, Bro. Grant, as a good plan, that through the Crisis you request that all such as get up clubs, or have in days past, see to this thing at once, and call upon some reliable brother in all churches, where the Crisis is taken, to see all who owe for the same, and learn if they wish it any longer; and if they are too poor to pay, report the same. I know our good brethren or sisters would be glad to do you and the cause this good, in every church or place where the Crisis is taken. I know many who do not, who are well able to pay; and it seems too bad not to pay, when so many need it who are not able to pay. Your sister, in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes,

THE WELCOME DAY.

Jesus, thy church has waited long
Thy glorious face to see;
When will the beauteous morning dawn
That brings the jubilee?

When shall thy sleeping ones come forth,
Immortalized and fair;
And meet with all the ransomed throng,
Their Savior in the air.

When shall the Judge of quick and dead
His righteous law proclaim,
And give to all his faithful ones
Salvation through his name?

O quickly, lingering moments, fly,
And bring the welcome day,
When pain and anguish, grief and sighs
Shall all have passed away.

LETTER FROM SR. LANNING.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me to inform the friends of Jesus, through the "Crisis," of the receipt of their gifts to the Freedmen. I have received through the mail two packages of "The Well Spring," with the name S. M. Crowell, Barnard, Vt.; also a "package of tracts," etc., with fifty cents from C. Green, M. D., 161 Cumberland Street, Philadelphia, Pa.; also twelve new Testaments from Eld. S. A. Chaplin, Pierceton, Ind. I would say to Sr. Elvira A. B. Benton, that with the fifty cents she sent me, I purchased five new Testaments, which, together with the twelve I received from Bro. C., make seventeen. I gave them to my scholars, and formed a Testament class, and told them to learn and recite six verses every Sabbath, commencing at the fifth chapter of Matt. There is a great interest manifest in the Sabbath school. Last Sabbath the house was so full, that many had to remain standing. It encourages them to get papers and tracts. I was sorry that I could not supply all with the Testament who can read. We who have always had Bibles to read, scarcely realize how it would seem to be deprived of the "word of life."

When I see how highly those who received the Testaments prize them, and see the tears of gratitude roll down their cheeks, my heart is melted, and I thank God that he has made me an instrument of doing something to help enlighten this people. As the time draws near for me to leave them, they cling to me with words of affection, and say they cannot give me up.

Whiskey and tobacco are ruining thousands of people here in the south, both white and colored. Last Sabbath, I wrote a form of pledge, which I give below. I said but little about the use of tobacco and coffee. I thought it would be best to try one thing at a time; besides, it would be a hard thing for them to break off from tobacco, as they have to work in it, and everybody uses it, big, little, and middling, white and black, male and female. O it is a dreadful sight to see my scholars, some not more than eight years old, chewing the poisonous weed: but they are not to blame. I here send the words of the pledge, together with the names of those who signed it. They are mostly all grown men and women. I told them to consider well what they were doing, and I think they will keep their pledge. Those who signed are all colored, except myself and son.

THE PLEDGE.

"We, the undersigned, pledge ourselves to abstain from all intoxicating liquors as a beverage, and to live temperate in all things, so far as we can."

Archer Holland, Abram Holland, Elsie Philips, Susan J. Jones, Alice Morris, Maggie Morris, Eliza Jurdan, Betty Rucker, Marshal Jurden, Albert McDaniels, Fletcher Sayles, Maria Tucker, Sallie McDaniels, Winnie Pleasant, Sophia Pleasant, John Hughs, Maria Tolover, Robert Franklin, Minor Payne, Maria Jurden, James Landrom, Martha Smith, Rosetta Lanning, Frank Lanning, Robert Rucker.

I expect to get many more to sign. Last Sabbath was the first time I mentioned the pledge to them.

Well, dear friends, pray for this school, that good may be done here in the name of Jesus, and also remember unworthy me, that God will give me grace to bear up under every trial, and do my duty wherever I may be. Your Sister in Christ,
MRS. ROSETTA LANNING.

PHENOMENA OF SUN SPOTS.

The New York Times says:—The present summer season, so far as it has yet gone, bears out in rather a striking manner the anticipations of the astronomers who have devoted special attention to the phenomena of sun spots. It may be remembered that on the 23d of May last we referred to their theories on the subject, and pointed out that magnetic storms frequently accompanied the appearance of these spots. "In 1848," we wrote, "there were magnetic storms, and we had the French Revolution. Again in 1859 they occurred, and we had wars and rumors of wars in Europe." Again in 1870 the cycle is complete, and once more the world resounds with the din of arms. Whether there is really any connection between solar-convulsions, magnetic storms, and the agitated passions of mankind; or whether they are merely accidental coincidences, is a subject which offers a vast field for research, but which at present only confounds human speculation. We have, however, this fact before us—that several astronomers foretold the occurrence of solar disturbances on a great scale this year, and predicted a summer of unusual heat, accompanied, perhaps, by troubles in the world similar to those which have occurred at corresponding epochs. It may have been all guess-work; but that way of explaining the matter does not render the mystery much clearer than it was before.

GOOD MEN MAKE GOOD HORSES.—A horse is never vicious or intractable without a direct cause. If a horse is restive or timorous, you may be sure that these faults arise from defects in his education. He has been treated either awkwardly or brutally. Commence the education of the horse at his birth; accustom him to the presence, voice and sight of man; speak and act gently; caress him; and do not startle him. All chastisement or cruelty confuses the animal and makes him wild. They are good men who make good horses.—Translated from French of Albert Arnoul.

TWO HARD THINGS.—First, to talk of one's self without being vain. Second, to talk of others without slander.

Schwarzenberg on Papal Authority in Matters of Faith and Morals.

The first printed protest by a Cardinal against the doctrine of the Papal infallibility, has just been published at Naples, under the title of "De Summi Pontificis Infallibilitate Personali." Its author, the Austrian Cardinal, Prince Schwarzenberg, begins by guarding himself against the view that the opponents of Papal infallibility are also the adversaries of Papal authority and supremacy; an accusation which, he says, is obviously unjust and uncharitable. He next proceeds to combat the arguments in favor of Papal infallibility of the Jesuit Belarmin, and especially of Dr. Manning. In opposition to these arguments he brings forward the following points: 1. A doctrine which is neither indicated in the Holy Scriptures nor in tradition so as to be at once recognized everywhere by all—and such a doctrine is that of personal infallibility—can never be a subject of dogmatical definition. 2. The principle defect of the doctrine is that it gives the right of decision in matters of the faith to the Pope alone, and thereby deprives of such right the other depositors of the apostolic office. 3. It should be remembered that neither the Pope nor the Bishops are masters of God's word; they are the servants, and they must learn before they can teach. 4. Hitherto, as a matter of practice, all the Popes, including Pius IX. himself, have always consulted the Bishops, etc., before coming to any important religious decision; but this will be impossible if the Pope is made personally infallible, for in such case he cannot ask or accept advice. 5. What is to become of Papal infallibility if the Pope should fall ill in mind or body—if a long vacancy were to occur in the Holy See—or if, in consequence of a schism, the validity of the Papal election should be doubtful? The pamphlet concludes by warmly urging the abandonment of the dogma of Papal infallibility as the only means of securing peace in the church.

According to reports received at Vienna, a speech made at a recent sitting of the council by Cardinal Prince Schwarzenberg created even a greater uproar than the famous one of Bishop Strossmayer. He said that the time for religious wars was past, and that an epoch of conciliation was at hand. It was equally unchristian, unintelligible, and incorrect to place the Protestants in the same category with heathens and atheists. The Roman church and the Roman Bishops must accept a word of advice on this subject from the German and Austrian prelates. The latter are in daily communication with Protestants, and know them better than those who never see them or read their books. The presiding legate, Cardinal de Angelis, here interrupted the speaker, and a warm dissute between the two Cardinals ensued. The President strove repeatedly, but in vain, to silence the Cardinal with his bell, and at length the Bishops drowned his protests in a storm of hisses, in the midst of which the Cardinal was carried from the tribune, half fainting from excitement, to his seat.

WATER-PROOF TENT CLOTH.

BRO. GRANT:—The following is a receipt to make tent cloth: For a tent of forty yards of common cotton cloth, take two pounds of alum, one pound of sugar of lead, powdered, then put the alum and sugar of lead into an earthen bowl, stirring it occasionally until dissolved in soft water. Then take four pails of soft water, put the preparation into it, put in the tent, and let it stand about eighteen hours. Then take out the tent, and boil the water it has soaked in, skim off the skum and throw it away. Then put the tent into the hot water, and let it stand two hours; afterwards spread it on the grass to dry.

LONG SERMONS.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to raise my voice against long sermons. I think they are injurious. I have known preachers to commence with a full congregation, and when the sermon was ended, one third, at least, had gone home, because the sermon was from one to two hours and a half long. Fifty minutes is long enough, sixty at the longest. If a sermon exceeds this, as it often does, it is like quack medicine; it kills more than it cures. I have been tried by long sermons, and I hope the preaching brethren will avoid them in the future. Long sermons kill young converts. A word to the wise is sufficient.

ALCOHOL IS FOOD.

Liquor fattens; whiskey is a good tonic; bitters aid digestion. These are statements made every day with considerable confidence, and in a manner well calculated to impose on a certain class of minds; hence, it is well that the friends of true temperance should have at hand the weapons of their warfare against the liquor traffic.

If alcohol is food, why not give it to our horses?

If liquor fattens, why not give it to our beef cattle, our turkeys, and our pigs; a good dram of it night and morning?

If whiskey is a good tonic, that is, gives a good appetite, why is it that so many whiskey drinkers, the men who are always full and never empty, eat so little; and on the contrary almost live on whiskey? Give them plenty of whiskey and they want nothing else but leisure to drink it.

If "bitters" aid digestion, why is it that those who take them all the time, are never well?

But suppose that in some cases spirits do fatten, it is a watery fat; gives no strength but increases the inability to work, and the susceptibility to all prevalent diseases. In cholera and all epidemics the liquor drinkers are the first to die.

If liquor fattens, why is it that we see so many spindle shanked drunkards? Whiskey drinkers are often long, lank, and lean, with so little flesh on their bones that the skin seems almost to cling to them, and so tottering are they in their step that the wind is ready to blow them away at any moment, and so shaky do they become in the end, that it requires all the strength and steadiness of both hands to carry a glass of grog to their lips.—Well's Journal of Health.

"PAIN PAINT" AND BALDNESS.

Few persons are sufficiently aware of the injurious effects of narcotic and irritant applications to the scalp. They are pernicious when applied to any part of the surface, but are especially so when applied to the scalp, on account of the disproportionate amount of blood which is supplied to the brain, and the common abnormal condition of preternatural determination or "rush of blood" to the head. "Pain Paint" and "Pain Killers" of various brands are now being extensively advertised by the enterprising quacks, and as extensively patronized by the gullible public.

We saw a young man in Philadelphia the other day who got more than he bargained for in the "Pain Paint" nostrum. He was afflicted with headache, the consequence of an overloaded stomach and constipated bowels, and concluded to try the pain painter. A few applications produced an edematous inflammation of the whole scalp. In his own language, the whole skin became rotten, and seemed for days as if it would mortify. The final result was a loss of nearly all the hair of his head. Except a little circular patch of grizzly hair on the crown, his pate is as bald as a pumpkin. Nor is there the least appearance of any new growth. The roots are as effectually pain-paint-killed as would have been his vital organs had the pain-killing medicamentum been applied to them. Those who would keep the greatest amount of hair on their heads the longest possible time had better use nothing stronger than water; and this should be soft and pure.

COLD APPLICATIONS.

I have known a swelling upon a child's forehead as big as a pigeon's egg occasioned by a fall; and because there happened to be no camphor in the bottle, the sympathizing mother had nothing to do but sit down and cry over her child. Now she should know that cloths dipped in cold water, or in winter, when it can be obtained, a snowball wrapped up in a cloth, and held on the swelling, will do more good than a gallon of camphor. I have known persons to heat rum to wash the head with, in violent headaches, when showering it with cold water or a cup full of snow, will do a great deal of good, as we might expect. I have known a good nurse put on bruised wormwood steeped in boiling vinegar to a sprained ankle to keep the swelling down, but according to the laws of human nature, all hot applications in such cases do harm. We must apply cold to do any good. Let pitchers of cold water be poured from a height upon such an ankle, and the inflammation will be very soon subdued. These directions to use cold water are intended to apply to an inflamed state of the part, where it is red, hot, painful and swelled.—Dr. Dickinson.

PICKING THE EARS.

Dr. Hall says "picking the ears" is a most mischievous practice. In attempting to do this with hard substances, an unlucky motion has many a time pierced the drum; nothing sharper or harder than the end of the little finger, with the nail pared, ought ever to be introduced into the ear, unless by a physician. Persons are often seen endeavoring to remove the "wax" of the ear with the head of a pin; this ought never to be done; first, because it not only endangers the rupture of the ear by being pushed too far in, but if not so far, it may grate against the drum, excite inflammation and an ulcer which will finally eat all the parts away, especially of a scrofulous constitution; second, hard substances have often slipped in, and caused the necessity of painful operations to fish or cut out; third, the wax is manufactured by nature to guard the entrance from dust, insects, and unmodified cold air, and when it has subserved its purpose it becomes dry, scaly, light, and in this condition is easily pushed outside by the new formations of wax within.

HOW TO BE HEALTHY.

Fresh air by day and night, strong and nourishing food, dry soil on which to live, sunlight and warm clothing, are the means of saving many lives which would have been hopelessly lost in the preceding generation. If our conjectures are correct, this improvement may be expected to continue, and everybody can help to make it greater. Ventilate the school-rooms and the workshops, and the stores, and the houses. In cold weather let the air, comfortably and equally warmed, be generously supplied from without in a constantly flowing current. Let those who can provide it in their homes remember that an open fire, which sends two-thirds of the heat up the chimney, furnishes the best ventilation for a room of moderate size which the ingenuity of man has yet devised, and that the heat escaping by the flue is the price to be paid for it. Let in the sunlight, and never mind the carpets; better they should fade than the health of the family. When a man proposes to build a dwelling in a swamp, warn him of his danger.—Dr. George Derby.

CURE FOR CHOLERA MORBUS.—Slice a lemon as you would a cucumber in a pint bowl, and fill it with boiling water (no sweetening), and take a table-spoonful every few minutes.

CURE FOR JAUNDERS.—Take two good sized lemons, cut them open, stuff them full of saffron, join them together again, put a wet cloth around them, bake them, then cut them up in a quart of good wine, let it stand a day or two, to get out the strength, then take a wine glass full before breakfast, and one at bed-time.—From Bro. G. S. Harwood.

For the World's Crisis.

HE IS COMING AT LAST.

Christ is coming at last. Hark! the war notes are ringing,
And the lightning is flashing the word from afar;
And the breezes of heaven the glad sounds are bringing,
That Jesus comes riding his cloud-mantled car.

For long years the saints, 'mid sorrow and sighing,
Have watched for the dawn, for the glorious day,
When He whom they loved, to their sad plaint replying,
Should bid his beloved from earth come away.

Hark! hark! hear the war notes of fearful commotion,
Of nations who, angry, rush to the fierce fight;
And lightning-borne messages come through the ocean,
Portentous that soon ends earth's long gloomy night.

The white horse and rider go forth now to battle,
Lo! the wonderful words on his vesture and thigh;
The mighty men "wake up," the loud cannons rattle,
The coming of Christ must be specially nigh.

The man most blasphemous, the "little horn" power,
'Mid the lightning's red glare and the dread thunder peal;*
'Mid darkness and tempest has reached his last hour,
Speaking great swelling words, his doom thus to seal.

Oh, wonder of wonders! he scarcely has spoken
Great things of his power and infallible might,
Ere the spell that has kept him enthroned is broken,
And, lo! he is left to his enemies quite.

The last of the "kings," the "eighth of the seven,"
Who himself "goeth" fast "to perdition" and death,
Fulfilling the word which on Patmos was given,
Has left him to gasp his expiring breath.

Soon voices of saints "Alleluia" will be singing,
For God hath avenged the blood of his own;
And lo he is coming at last, and is bringing
To earth for his true bride a crown, and his throne.

L. C. MCKINSTRY.

"WATCHMAN, WHAT OF THE NIGHT?"

"And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled."—Luke 21: 24.

We believe the time has certainly arrived when the true light should be presented, for the termination of the prophetic measurements of time, found in the prophecy of Daniel 8th and 9th chapters, by the faithful watchmen on "Zion's wall." It is also time that all believers in the divine inspiration of the Holy Scriptures should turn their attention to an earnest and faithful investigation of this highly important prophecy. The time has come when the call should be more emphatic and persistent, "Watchman, what of the night?" "Watchman, what of the night?" Should not the watchman be able to give the time of night, unless he has been asleep? God has given the prophetic periods in the chapters referred to, for the special benefit of his people, and they should have their prayerful study. In Daniel 8, a symbolic chain of prophecy is given, to represent earthly governments, reaching down to the termination of our fallen world; and in connection with this chain of symbols, a measurement of time is given, spanning the duration of the powers symbolized, and ending with the cleansing of the sactuary. The symbols presented in this chapter are, first, a ram with two horns, interpreted by the angel, verse 20, as the kings (or kingdoms) of Media and Persia; 2d, a rough goat, with a a notable horn between his eyes, also interpreted, verse 21, to represent the kingdom of Grecia.

When this goat became strong, "The great horn was broken; and for it came up four notable ones, toward the four winds of heaven," explained verse 22, to represent "four kingdoms to stand up out of the nation." 4th. "Out of one of them came forth a little horn which waxed exceeding great," explained, verses 23–25, to represent a king (or kingdom) "of fierce countenance and understanding dark sentences," whose "power should be mighty, should destroy wonderfully, and prosper and practice, and shall destroy the mighty and holy people. And through his policy also he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand; . . . he shall also stand up against the Prince of princes, but he shall be broken without hand."

The 5th and last symbol is the 2300 days, which period of time measures the duration of the kingdom symbolized, and broken at the coming of Christ to judgment.

Our next point to determine is, when will these 2300 days end. First, we will premise that the Lord revealed to Daniel at three different times a clue for the commencement of this prophetic measurement of time; and it is recorded in three places, namely, Daniel 7: 5; 8: 4; 9: 24.

We will now see what relation these portions of Scripture sustain to the 2300 days of Daniel 8: 14.

We will commence with Daniel 7: 5, where the kingdom of Persia is symbolized by a bear with three ribs in its mouth. These ribs are represented as saying unto the bear, "Arise, devour much flesh." These ribs must symbolize the remnant of some nation, for they are represented as speaking, while occupying a very peculiar position, in the mouth of the bear, between its teeth, yet for a period they exert a controlling influence over the bear. As there is a striking peculiarity and strangeness in this symbol of these "three ribs," we shall expect to find historical facts agreeing in character with them. We understand these ribs to symbolize the remnant of the nation of Amalekites in the days of Ahasuerus, king of Persia. The Amalekite Haman, was by the king of Persia promoted to a "seat above all the other princes that were with him." Esther 3: 1. Flushed with pride by his success, and and the honor conferred upon him in his high position, being a bitter enemy of the Jews (see Esth. 9: 24), he sought their entire destruction in one day, Esth. 3: 8–13. "And the king took his ring from his hand and gave it unto Haman, the son of Hamedatha the Agagite, the Jews' enemy. And the king said unto Haman, the silver is given unto thee, the people also, to do with them as seemeth good to thee. Then were the king's scribes called on the thirteenth day of the first month, and there was written according to all that Haman had commanded the king's lieutenants, and to the governers that were over every province, and to the rulers of every people of every province, in the name of king Ahasuerus was it written, and sealed with the king's ring."

"And the letters were sent by posts into all the king's provinces, to destroy, to kill and to cause to perish, all Jews both young and old, little children and women, in one day."—Esth. 3: 10–13. Here is is a most significant fulment of the prophecy in Dan. 7: 5, of the ribs saying to the bear, "Arise, devour much flesh."

This attempt of Haman to destroy the whole Jewish nation, was in the twelfth year of the reign of Ahasuerus; Esth. 3: 7, synchronizing with the year of the world, from creation, 3700. The length of the vision in Dan., 8th chapter, is 2300 years, as we shall show; this added to the 3700 years, gives us 6000 years from the fall of man in Eden to the time of his recovery in the "restitution of all things." That this effort of Haman in the twelfth year of Ahasuerus to destroy all the Jews, is the date to commence the 2300 days, will appear more evident as we proceed to our investigation.

In Dan. 8: 4, the kingdom of Persia, which is here symbolized by a ram, is seen by the prophet, (after the second or higher horn was up,) "pushing westward, and northward, and southward, so that no life, or living soul might stand before him;" the import here is the same as in chap. 7: 5, "Arise, devour much flesh." The word beasts in chap. 8: 4 is, we think, an improper rendering of the Hebrew word ghahy. It is used in the Hebrew Scriptures 508 times, and is generally translated life or living. The word first occurs in Gen. 1: 20, and is there rendered life (lit. living soul.) Therefore the "pushing" of the "ram" was against the Jewish nation, for its entire destruction. But God in answer to special prayer and fasting, overthrew the council and design of that wicked Amalekite, Haman, and preserved the Jewish nation from slaughter. As this "pushing" is the first action of the ram that Daniel sees in vision, it must properly date the commencement of the 2300 days.

The evidence we have adduced from Dan. 7: 5, and 8: 4 to show that the 2300 days commenced in the twelfth year of Ahasuerus, with the decree to destroy all the Jews, is established by "Gabriel's" instruction to Daniel in the 9th chapter of his prophecy. After the symbols of the beast and the horns of the 8th chapter had been explained to Daniel by "Gabriel," he leaves the prophet for a season without explaining the great measurement of time, namely, the 2300 days, which formed a part of the vision, simply telling him the "vision shall be for many days." After the prophet had recovered from his astonishment, by not receiving the desired explanation of the time, he goes to studying books in reference to the "captivity" and desolations of Jerusalem which was to last seventy years, and from books to prayer and fasting, with special reference to the sanctuary that was desolate.

That the prophet was laboring under a misapprehension of the former instruction of "Gabriel," may be seen from verse 21–23 of chap. "Yea, while I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision, at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation. And he informed me, and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. At the beginning of thy supplications the commandment came forth, and I am come to show thee; for thou art greatly beloved; therefore understand the matter and consider the vision." As much as to say, the desolation of Jerusalem and the Sanctuary for seventy years, was not the import of my instructions on a former occasion; they had reference to the treading under foot of the "host and sanctuary," by two abominations, (namely the Pagan and Papal) to the "last end of the indignation," or the end of the 2300 days. My instruction now is in reference to when the 2300 days will end, and how long your people and city will continue unbroken; and inform you when your Messiah will come, and when he will be cut off, and what desolations will follow, even to the consumation of all things. Gabriel is very particular to turn and rivet Daniel's attention to the former vision of the 8th chapter. Hear him: "Therefore understand the matter and consider the vision." verse 23.

"Seventy weeks (of the vision) are determined (more properly rendered, 'cut off') upon thy people, and upon thy holy city (Jerusalem) to finish (or as in the margin—restrain) the transgression." (Restrain is the true rendering of the Hebrew word kah-lah; it occurs eighteen times in the Hebrew Scriptures, and is never once translated finish except in Daniel 9: 24.) As we have adduced, from the decree of Ahasuerus king of Persia, to destroy the whole Jewish nation, Gabriel informs us the transgression should be restrained 70 weeks, or 490 years. As the 70 weeks, or 490 years, "were cut off" (from the vision of the 2300 years) upon Daniel's people (the Jews), and his holy city Jerusalem, it follows that neither the Jews nor their city Jerusalem could be desolated till the 70 weeks were ended.

Therefore the decree of Ahasuerus could not be carried into execution. The Jews could not be destroyed at that time; but must continue 490 years from that epoch, namely the twelfth year of Ahasuerus, B. C. 426. Having shown that the 70 weeks (or 490 years) were cut off from the vision of the 8th chapter (the length of which being 2300 years), and that they commenced in the twelfth year of Ahasuerus, alias Artaxerxes, B. C. 426, they must consequently end A. D. 65. Josephus says: "The war broke out on Jerusalem in the twelfth year of Nero" (Wars, b. 2, c. 14, s. 3.) Dean Cassius says Nero began to reign Oct. 14, A. D. 53, which fixes his twelfth year in A. D. 65, in which year the war against Jerusalem commenced. Here the 70 weeks or 490 years ended. This is the period of time through which the transgression was restrained from desolating Daniel's people and holy city. It is impossible to end the 70 weeks earlier than A. D. 65, without doing violence and perverting the express language of Gabriel to Daniel. And there is no event recorded in the history of our world, that agrees with the express language of the prophecy in Dan. 7: 5; 8: 4; and 9: 24, ("Arise, devour much flesh.") ("That no life or living thing might stand before him.") ("Seventy weeks are 'cut off' upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to restrain the transgression.") As that awful decree signed by Ahasuerus king of Persia, for the entire extermination of the Jewish race in one day; that was restrained, or prevented from being carried into execution, by a most remarkable providence of God, in answer to earnest prayer and fasting by his people. (See Esth. 4 to 10th chap.

Having, as we think, made it apparent that the 490 years were "cut off" from the 2300 years as specially relating to the Jews and their holy city Jerusalem, and that they ended in A. D. 65, when they were given up of God for destruction by the Roman army, the question naturally arises, when will the remaining part of the 2300 years end? Take 490 from 2300 and we have 1810 left. As we have shown, the 490 ended A. D. 65, then 1810 added to 65 must end in A. D. 1875. "Then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Then shall be witnessed "the last end of the indignation." Then shall the people of God come from their "chambers" (after being hid for the "little moment" while his "indignation" is upon his enemies), and "come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." Then shall Eden be restored, and be filled with God's visible glory. Then shall Christ reign from sea to sea, and from the river even unto the ends of the earth. Amen.

We believe the "seventy weeks" of Daniel 9: 24, to be a great chronological land-mark, fixed with unerring precision, from B. C. 426, to A. D. 65. And the onward march of time has nearly completed the 1810 years, the remaining portion of the 2300 years, the whole length of the vision of the eighth chapter of the prophecy of Daniel. Truly we have arrived at a most momentous period in the history of our world. A few more years at most, will fix the destiny of the whole human race, either for weal or for woe. How important, then, the present passing hour; how fraught with eternal consequences. Then let us awake to the all absorbing thought, are we prepared to meet the great impending event, the coming of Christ to judgment?

PRECIOUS WORDS.

"I am the bread of life; he that cometh to me shall never hunger;" "he that believeth on me shall never thirst." These are the words of our Savior, who, when on earth, was reviled, but reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to Him that judgeth righteously; who bore our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness; by whose stripes we are healed. The Lord is long-suffering with us; he will never leave nor forsake those that put their trust in him; and is a present help in time of need. He has been with me in sickness and trouble; to Him be all the glory.

O, the many precious promises in the word of God. In all the trials and afflictions we are called to pass through; how they cheer us; they are like an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast. Let us put our trust in God, and as we see sin and iniquity abounding, the love of many waxing cold, and the day of the Lord approaching; by the help of his Holy Spirit be watchful and prayerful, keeping our hearts pure, that we may be accounted worthy to escape the things that are coming on the earth, and meet in the kingdom of God, where all is joy and peace; where pain, sickness, death and parting will never come. May we so live, that when He who is our life shall appear, we may also appear with him in glory. R. STRONG.

SPIRITS IN PRISON.

"Being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit, by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison, which sometimes were disobedient when once the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah."—1 Pet. 3: 18–20.

The opinion is very general among christians, that the apostle Peter, in the above scripture, teaches that the Lord Jesus Christ, while his body was dead (as they express it) descended into hell, and preached the gospel to the spirits of the ancient patriarchs, and delivered them from the species of prison where they had so long waited for him. This is an article of faith in the Roman Catholic church, and this, or something like it, is also embodied in the creed, of what is called orthodox christianity. What then does the passage mean? All of God's truth is harmonious, and since he has taught us in plain language that the "dead know not ANYTHING" (Ecc. 9: 5); that, "in death there is no remembrance" of God (Ps. 6: 5; that the day a man dies "his thoughts perish" (Ps. 46: 4; then, certainly, we may conclude, that no one, while a subject of death, could either preach or be preached to. But it may be said, that the passage does not say Christ preached to the bodies of men, but to their spirits; and these spirits were in prison when he preached. This is the inference drawn from the language, but not the language itself, which simply says, he preached to "the spirits in prison," and the meaning may rather be, that although they were in prison at the time Peter wrote, yet they were not in prison at the time of the preaching; and in point of fact, this view receives considerable support from the language of the apostle, especially if we give the word apeithesasi its meaning of "incredulous", which seems to be the radical meaning; the idea would be, that when the preacher had delivered his message, it was not credited. The word ekeruxen, rendered he preached, is derived from kerux, meaning a herald, or one employed to deliver a message, or proclamation. It is evident, therefore, that the disobedience, or incredulity, must be be preceeded by the command, which was disobeyed, or the delivery of the message which was disbelieved.

But is it certain that men are meant by the term "spirits"? It is, to say the least, a very unusual epithet to apply to "mortal man," a creature made out of the dust of the ground, and for which scriptural authority would be somewhat hard to find. I am aware that 1st John 4: 1 has the words, "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits, whether they are of God." But the meaning here may be, try the spirit by which professed teachers are controlled and influenced; especially in regard to their attitude towards sin, which is one of the tests given by Christ himself: "Beware of false teachers;" "by their fruits ye shall know them." With the exception of the above passage, and Heb. 12: 9, which is cited by some, but where, I think the contrast between the "fathers of our flesh," referring to our natural and proper being as men, and "the Father of spirits," referring to the new spiritual nature produced in the believer by the power of God, shows that this passage cannot be relied on to prove men spirits. There are of course many passages which speak of man as having a spirit; but there is quite a difference between a creature having a spirit, and a being who could be properly called a spirit. Beasts have spirits as well as men. This is not merely the assertion of a materialist; in proof of which I quote Doctor Adam Clarke, on Ecc. 3: 21. "The word ruach," says the Doctor, "which is used in this and the nineteenth verse, has two significations, breath and spirit. It signifies spirit, or an incorporeal substance, as distinguished from flesh, or a corporeal one; and it signifies the spirit or soul of man. In this book it is used also to signify the breath, spirit, or soul of a beast." I think, then, it is incorrect to speak of man as a spirit; for, according to the scriptures, he is a creature, made out of the dust of the ground, in the image or likeness of his Creator. I think it equally clear, that the spirits of men are not meant, for the following reasons:

1st. The language is not that which is generally employed when the spirits of men are meant. 2ndly. We are taught in scripture, that the spirits of men, at death, "return to God who gave" them, and not to a prison. 3rdly. This being the destination of spirits of all men, good and bad, in addition to the fact, that they are said to return, which implies that they go back to that place from which they originally came, shows that the spirits of men are not intelligent personalities; and therefore incapable of being preached to.

Again, if Christ preached to the spirits of dead men, we must conclude that the spirits refused to believe his message, or were disobedient; for the passage plainly teaches that the disobedience was in refference to that which was preached to them. What, then, does the apostle mean by the "spirits in prison"? Is there any reference made elsewhere to this subject? I think there is, not only by Peter, but also by Jude. We know, from the word of God, that ANGELS are SPIRITS. If instead of "the spirits in prison," we read the ANGELS in prison, we shall get the apostle's idea, as I will endeavor to show. It will be observed that the apostle alludes to the circumstance, as if it were quite familiar to his readers. He refers in the same manner, in his second epistle, to certain angels (that is, spirits), being in prison, as follows: "If God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness to be reserved unto judgment," or as Dr. Clarke renders it: "But with chains of darkness confining them in Tartaurus." Jude also says: "And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day." Here, then, is a well-known fact; namely, that certain angels, or spirits, had been consigned to prison, where they remain, awaiting the judgment of the great day.

But it may be asked, What has that to do with the days of Noah? for it was in the days of Noah, while the ark was being prepared, that the disobedience referred to by Peter, transpired. Well, let us proceed in our inquiry, and we shall see. What is said concerning these angels? Peter says they sinned. Jude says, they left their own habitation, and also, I think, accuses them of "going after strange flesh." The words are, "Even as Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them, in like manner," or as it may be read, "in like manner to them. To whom does the pronoun refer? to the angels, certainly. How do we know? Because the pronoun tautois is in the masculine dative plural, whereas Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them, are in the feminine. On the other hand, "the angels" are in the masculine gender, thus agreeing with tautois. We learn from Jude, then, that these angels, or spirits, left the habitation which God had assigned them, and wandered in the pursuit of unlawful desires.

Now we shall turn to Genesis 6: 1–4: "And it came to pass, when men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, that the sons of God saw the daughters of men, that they were fair, and they took them wives of all which they chose." "There were giants in the earth in those days, and also after that, when the sons of God came in unto the daughters of men, and they bare children to them, the same became mighty men which were of old men of renown." Now the question is, what are we to understand by the term "sons of God"? Does it mean sons of God, as the term is used now to indicate those who by faith in the Lord Jesus, are born again, "not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God"? So it is contended by Dr. Clarke, and many others. But we object. 1st. Because such a use of the term is not to be found in the Old Testament, unless it may be in this passage. 2ndly, because the conduct of these persons does not correspond to the description of the sons of God, given by the apostle in Rom. 8: 14—"as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." It is manifest, that the persons mentioned in the text, were led rather by the flesh than by the Spirit. 3rdly. The condition of the world at this time, shows an utter absence of the fear of God, or any regard for his law; and that but one individual was found in that generation upon whom God could look with approval. For these reasons, I think pious, God-fearing men, are not meant by the term "sons of God."

There are but four places in the Old Testament where this expression occurs; once in Genesis, twice in the book of Job, and once in Daniel, where it is in the singular number, "son of God." In all these instances it undoubtedly means angels. Dr. Clarke says on Job 1: 6: "All the versions, and indeed all the critics, are puzzled with the phrase, sons of God, beney haelohim literally, sons of the god, or sons of the gods. The Vulgate has filii dei, sons of god. The Septuagint, oi aggeloi tou theou, the angels of God. The Chaldee, kittey malacaiya, troops of angels." Dr. Clarke concludes as follows: "We have here, in the case of Job, the same grand assembly held, as was in that of Ahab 1st Kings 21, the same host of heaven called here the sons of God." Again, on the 7th verse of the 38th chapter, "When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." Dr. Clarke says: "This must refer to some intelligent beings, who existed before the creation of the visible heavens and earth; and it is supposed that this and the following clause speak of the same beings; that by the sons of God and the morning stars, the angelic host is meant." Again, in the 25th verse of the 3d Chapter of Daniel, Dr. Clarke comments thus, refering to the words, "the form of the fourth is like the Son of God." A most improper translation. What notion could this idolatrous king have of the Lord Jesus Christ? for so the place is understood by thousands. Bar elohin signifies a son of the gods, that is, a divine person or angel; and so the king calls him in verse 38, "God hath sent his angel and delivered his servant." I have produced Dr. Clarke's testimony to show that the meaning of the phrase "sons of God," always means the angels of God, because the Doctor scouts the idea of that being the meaning in Gen. 6: 1, where he contends that the "sons of God" are simply men, who have experienced the new birth, and have been made the children of God by the influence of the Holy Spirit..

If the objections which I have advanced against the Doctor's view are valid, and I think that they are, then it seems to me that the fact of the phrase "sons of God," meaning as it does the angels of God in every other place, where it occurs in the Old Testament, should fix that as the meaning in Gen. 6: 1. If to this we add the further consideration, that the result of this connection was a progeny so remarkable as to claim a place in the sacred record, these considerations should place the matter almost beyond doubt. We find, then, that the fact of certain ANGELS or SPIRITS having been confined in prison by God, there to await the judgment of the great day, was well known to the Christians in apostolic times. That these angels had left the particular locality God had assigned them, and wandered in the pursuit of unlawful desires; that the Old Testament scriptures record the fact of the sons of God, or angels, forming marital connections with wowen, and that this happened in the days of Noah. Yes, says an objector, that is all very fine; but do you mean to say that the gospel was preached to angels? No, I do not; neither does the apostle say the gospel was preached. There is nothing about gospel in the text. It simply says "he preached," that is, delivered a message. It may have been just such preaching as Jude reports Enoch, the seventh from Adam, as having preached; namely, the coming of the Lord to execute judgment against evil doers, and among that class will certainly be these "spirits in prison", who are there "reserved to the judgment of the great day."

Noah was just such a preacher, and if our view be correct, he would have among his audience those wandering spirits. And when God's long-suffering was at length exhausted, he "spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell (tartarus), and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment, and spared not the old world: . . . . bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly."

A HINT TO THE CARELESS.

Dear Reader:—The judgment is coming! This is no dream of a lunatic, but a stern reality which every one of us must meet. That it is near is just as evident to the careful and prayerful Bible student, as the fact that God hath appointed a day in which to judge the world; and to any that will take the trouble to look around them, it is evident that something is coming on the earth. Daily the signs are fulfilling that are to precede the great day of the Lord.

Signs in the heavens above and in the earth beneath. Earthquakes in divers places; distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; last-day scoffers; wickedness stalking in the streets at noonday, with the "lovers of pleasure more than the lovers of God." The world seems to have forgotten God in its thirst for wealth and worldly honor and pleasure, and refuses to hear the last solemn message, but is rushing on heedlessly to eternal death.

How is it with you! Are you out of Christ, [illegible] no shelter in the coming day of wrath [illegible] let me entreat you to stop and think [illegible] awful abyss yawning at your feet. [illegible] of judgment with the white throne and Him who sits upon it; mercy, sweet mercy, ceased pleading forever. "He that is filthy, let him be filthy still." "He that is holy, let him be so still." Fixed and unalterable. Where will you stand? with those upon the left hand, who with unutterable despair hear—"depart, ye cursed," and cry to the rocks and mountains to fall upon them, to hide them from the face of Him that sitteth upon the throne? Then will arise your neglected opportunities; but too late; the door is shut; the last sermon has been preached, the last sermon offered, and to your agonizing wail of despair comes back—"I have called, and ye refused." Called you by his Spirit. Called you by the voice of his servants, who shun not to declare the whole counsel of God; who go about despised of men, destitute, afflicted, tormented; of whom the world is not worthy; counting not even their own lives dear unto them that they might win Christ. Called you through the gentle admonition of a mother or sister, who only laid down prayer for you when the destroyer laid them low, and they slept in Jesus, resting in hope that when this night of darkness comes upon the ungodly, the morning of endless gladness shall come to them.

Would you meet them on that morning, as they spring from their dusty beds in imortal beauty, to die no more forever, and hear them sing the song of Moses and the Lamb, and walk the golden streets, drink from the river of life, and eat of the fruit of the tree of life, and roam the fields of Eden restored, see Jesus who died for you, and called you in many ways to come to him, and would that none should perish?

O, then, come to him to-day. Mercy is pleading now. The Savior says, "Come, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest?"

Blessed promise,—"Lo! I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," which has sustained martyrs at the stake, who loved not their lives better than the cause of Christ, knowing that if they suffered with Jesus they should reign with him.

Come to him now. Present time is yours, to-morrow is not. The judgment is coming. Jesus says: "To-day, if ye will hear my voice, harden not your heart." And again: "They that seek me early shall find me." Again: "Ho! every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters." "He that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as wool."

There is salvation, full and free, for all; rich and poor, black and white, high and low; all may come and drink of the waters of life freely, without price,

Which, when you once have tasted,
You ne'er will thirst again."

O, come! The Spirit and the bride say, Come. The few remaining sands of the glass of time are fraught with life or death. Delay not. The Judge is at the door. In a little from this the great white throne and Him who sits upon it will be revealed; and to the waiting saints the morning will dawn which is to usher in an eternal life of bliss, which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither has it entered into the heart of man.

Seek Jesus now. In him you will find rest; peace like a river; joy unspeakable, worth thousands of worlds like this. He will never leave nor forsake thee; he has a balm for every wound; in every trial puts underneath you his everlasting arm, and will carry you through all into the kingdom of God. Love him, serve him; and when the the storm of wrath bursts over a godless world, you will hear him say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father." P. A. WALKER.

JESUS OUR BEST FRIEND.

There is always something to say about Jesus. It is the same old story, yet always new. And we love to speak of him often, because he has proved such a precious friend to us.

When we have waded through the deep waters of affliction and the billows raged so fearfully around us, and we felt almost as though we should sink beneath the waves, who was it that reached down his strong arm from above and placed it so tenderly around us, and brought us safely through the deep waters, placing our feet on the rock? It was Jesus, blessed Jesus! who is always near in seasons of trial and distress.

He looks down upon us at such times and pities us, and longs for us to come to him and lay our burdens at his feet, believing that he will help us as he has promised in his holy word. "I will never leave nor forsake thee," saith the Lord; and, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end."

What precious promises are these! and we can claim them as our own. Let us be faithful until Jesus comes, which will not be long. He will soon come in his own power, to set his earnest-hearted children free. Let us watch through the dark and painful hour, at the end of which we shall be enabled to say that we have not had one trial too much, not one that could have been spared; and we shall see that Jesus has indeed been our best friend; that he stood by us in all our trying hours; when all others forsook us, he was still with us by his comforting Spirit, leading us in his own way, which was for our best good.

Let us trust him, lying passive in his hands, feeling willing to be led by him, knowing that he will lead us through no darker places than he went through before, and that at last we shall come off conquerers through his grace, and reign with him in glory. LIZZIE CHUTE.

EFFECTIVE PREACHING.—All the most efficient, effective preachers of our day are men who talk—yes, that is the word—they talk to the people, and they talk in plain, simple, concise language, and the people understand the talk; and this is the secret of the great pulpit power of such men as Prof. Finney, Newman Hall, Henry Ward Beecher, Mr. Spurgeon, Mr. Knapp, Mr. Earle, and many others, who are found to be sons of thunder in the pulpit.

— Thoughts take up no room. When they are right, they afford a portable pleasure, with which one may travel or labor without any trouble or encumbrance.

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

We see no room to doubt that we are emphatically in the last days of the present dispensation; but we may expect still clearer light and brighter evidence as we approach the end. It is too late to be making compromises with this wicked, Sodom-like world. Let all who wish to be ready for the appearing of Jesus, come out from it, and be separate, as directed in the Bible.

It is now over twenty-seven years since we became interested in the evidences which show that our Savior is about to return to this earth to set up his kingdom; and we think we never had so strong reason to hold fast the profession of our faith as at the present time. The whole series of prophetic events which run to the coming of Christ, seem to be rapidly converging to a focal point not far in the future. What we now see transpiring in the world is just what we have expected would take place a short time before the appearing of Jesus.

We would say to all who are not ready for the great event, and who wish to secure eternal life, that we think they have not a moment to lose. Their condition is perilous in the extreme. Repent now. Do not sleep again till all is given up to the Savior, and salvation secured. Jesus is our best friend; why not love and serve him? Another week's delay, and it may be too late. Do not run the risk another day of losing eternal life. Think of its value and duration. Can any one afford to sacrifice a gift so valuable, for the sake of a few sinful, unsatisfying pleasures of this short life; Why not consent to do right? The Lord asks no more. His requests are most reasonable; and if we will not comply with them, we are not fit to live forever.

The hour in which we are living is a fearful one, quite like that a few days before the flood began, when the careless millions were scoffing at the good man, who was preparing an ark for the salvation of himself and family. Like the ancient Sodomites, men and boys now mock and scoff at those who believe the word of the Lord, and are looking for his appearing. Let all bear patiently the reproach that comes from the enemies of the cross of Christ, and soon our Deliverer will come to give honor, glory, and immortality. "STAND UP FOR JESUS."

RESURRECTION.

It is said by some that there can be no resurrection of the dead, if the soul is not immortal, and the whole man dies. We fail to see the least point whatever in the position, unless it should be assumed that the soul raises the body. If that be claimed, then, of course, there could be no resurrection of the dead, if the one was dead that was to do the work of raising. But does the Bible teach that man has a soul that never dies, and will raise his body? Has any one seen such a passage?

The Scriptures do say: "If Christ be not raised, . . . then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." 1 Cor. 15: 17, 18. Why? Because if Christ, who is to raise the dead, is not raised from the dead himself, he cannot raise others; but Peter said to the Jews: "Ye . . . killed the Prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead; whereof we are witnesses" (Acts 3: 14–15); and to this agree all the apostles.

The body is just as dead, provided man has an immortal soul, as it would be if he had none. It will require as much skill and power to raise the body belonging to an immortal soul, as it would the body of a man who had no immortal soul; unless it should be claimed that the soul remains in the dead body to preserve it like an Egyptian mummy, which we prove is not true.

THE COMING OF CHRIST.

The evidence is overwhelming in favor of the soul-stirring fact that Jesus is soon coming to raise the dead, set up his kingdom, destroy the wicked, and give eternal life to the saints. Dear reader, are you ready? Do you rejoice at this good news? Can you say, like John the revelator: "Even so, come, Lord Jesus"? If not, submit to the Savior at once, and be ready to help crown him Lord of all.

PROVIDENCE TENT-MEETING.—The tent-meeting, lately held in Providence, has been the means of accomplishing much good through the faithful labors of Brn. Morrell and Boutell, Sr. Stoddard and others. The brethren have hired Lester Hall, and intend to have permanent meetings. We found the people anxious to hear the great truths of the Bible, which have so long been obscured by the fog of fables. Thank the Lord that many hearts are open to receive the light. A very large audience was present at the close of the tent-meeting, Aug. 7th. One Methodist minister, a fine man, is deeply interested, and assisted in the meeting.

THE INFALLIBLE POPE.—It is an interesting fact that the decree of infallibility of the Pope, and his loss of the temporal power, as received from France, took place at the same time. The Roman woman can no longer say, "I sit a queen, and am no widow." (Rev. 18: 7.) Her widowhood has commenced. She has no husband now; or in other words, there is no political power on which she can lean for support.

THE 2300 DAYS.—In another column may be found a valuable article on the commencement and termination of the 2300 days, which every one should read with care who wishes light on that subject. We think the positions taken are sound, and well sustained by historic evidence. We see no light in any other exposition of the 2300 days and seventy weeks of Daniel.

NO PAPER NEXT WEEK.—We think it is right that our faithful help should have one week in the year to rest. Appointments for the next paper should be in the office as early as Monday morning, Sept. 5th. Try to get them in as early as Saturday, Sept. 3d.

TREMONT CAMPMEETING.—We learn that the Tremont Campmeeting had an excellent close. Some sought the Lord, and twelve were baptized.

ALTON BAY P. O.—We would say to those who wish to address friends at the Alton Bay campmeeting, that there is now a post office at Alton Bay.

WORCESTER.—We spent the Sabbath, Aug. 24th, in Worcester, and had good meetings. Some four or five requested prayers.

CAMP SONGS FOR 1870.—Bro. George E. Lee has just issued a sheet containing seven choice pieces of music, and three hymns, which will be nice for our coming campmeetings. Price 20 cts., postpaid.

WORTH REMEMBERING.—We have rarely seen any thing outside of the Bible better than the following:—

"One of the most important rules of the science of manners is an almost absolute silence in regard to yourself. It is a great advantage to keep quiet gracefully and naturally. Self-control is the best evidence of a cultivated mind. It is a great pleasure to meet those who wisely listen and observe; who view what is said without prejudice, and with or without advice commit no errors. Nothing is so difficult to do, nothing so rarely done."

Let every reader treasure up the spirit of the foregoing, and endeavor to carry it into effect in every day life. Such will give better light in the world than those who are lovers of themselves.

TEACHINGS OF SPIRITUALISM.

The following, from the Banner of Light, will give some idea of what the spirits teach concerning Jesus. A spirit says:—

"I am willing to accord to my brother, Jesus the Christ, all that is due him, and no more. I believe him to have been both human and divine, organized as other men are organized, divine and human. I believe great spiritual light was given by him. I believe as great light has been given by others—indeed, much of the light that was given by him, had been previously given by Confucius, by Chrishna, and by scores of others. Then wherefore should we place him at the apex of the ladder of wisdom and goodness? It is only the Christian world that does this. It is only our false education that leads us to do this. The Mahometan would not; he would place his prophet there. It is the result of his education. . . . And if these impressions have been stamped upon the plastic mind of our childhood, it is very hard to get rid of them. Indeed, we very rarely do get rid of them in this life. I believe Christ to have been a most excellent man. If you could have read the record of his life that was destroyed by Constantine, and could have believed that it was a true record, you would hardly place him on the highest round of the ladder. Give him all that is his due; he was fallible like ourselves, and our Savior only so far as he could lead us beyond error."

It will be seen from the foregoing, that the spirits do not admit that Jesus was any more divine than any common man. If he was nothing but a mere man, that he was one of the greatest deceivers ever in the world, and was unworthy the confidence of any good being. What shall we think of a system that sets aside the Bible and the Savior of mankind?

PUT OFF MY TABERNACLE.

Said Peter:—"Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance; knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me. Moreover, I will endeavor that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance."—2 Pet. 1: 13–15.

The pronouns "I," "my," and "me," all represent the same person, and that was Peter, as a whole. He was the one speaking, and the one to "decease," or experience "a departure from life" into "death." In David's time, Barzillai, the Gileadite, an aged and noted man, bestowed large favors upon the king of Israel. On this account, David wished him to go and spend the remnant of his days at Jerusalem; but Barzillai said: "Let thy servant, I pray thee, turn back again, that I may die in mine own city, and be buried by the grave of my father and of my mother."—2 Sam. 19: 37. In this example, the pronoun "I" represents the same as the noun "Barzillai," or the word "servant." But all these words represent what was about to "decease," or die, like the case of Peter.

It is believed by some that the pronoun "I" represents an immortal personality, that puts off the mortal body at death; and at the resurrection, the immortal part puts on the body again. But such a view is quite opposed to the Bible. Says Paul: "This mortal must put on immortality." If the soul puts off the body, it is the soul that puts it on again. But the one that puts on is "mortal"; therefore that which puts off is also mortal; thus showing that, when Peter spoke of putting off his tabernacle, and of his "decease," or "departure from life, he meant the same as though he had said: I must shortly die, "even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me. Moreover, I will endeavor that ye may be able after my" death "to have these things always in remembrance."

THE RAINBOW.—Now is a good time to subscribe for the "Rainbow," edited by Dr. Wm. Leask, 34 Sandringham Road, Kingsland, London, Eng. Bro. Leask allows us to make the following announcement:—

"We take this opportunity of informing American brethren that as the value of the greenback is at present three shillings and fourpence in this country, any one sending us two greenbacks, shall have fourteen successive numbers of the 'Rainbow' sent, post free, to his address. We hope many friends in the States, who may not have monetary transactions with England, will adopt this simple mode of subscribing and obtaining the magazine."

THE TIMES—THE PROPHECIES.

We are beginning to believe in prophecy. There is no disguising the fact that the war in Europe is beginning to partake more and more of a religious character, and it looks as if the prophecy made as early as the year 1850, we believe by the Rev. Mr. Fletcher of England, is likely to be fulfilled to the letter. Mr. Fletcher, who was well versed in Bible history, delivered a series of lectures on the prophecies, in which he pointed out those that had been already fulfilled, and then predicted what were yet to take place, which so far have been fulfilled to the letter. He predicted the French Revolution, which occurred within a few months of the time specified. He also at that early period predicted that the next vial would be poured out on the head of the Roman Catholic Church, and that it would commence in the year 1848. Singular as it may appear, in that very year the Pope fled from his subjects in disguise, and after his return he was maintained at Rome by French bayonets. He had been captured and carried off before, but this was the first time he fled from his subjects.

As to the duration of the fulfillment of prophecy, writers disagree, but that depends on the magnitude of the power to be despoiled. Some writers have fixed the period at from twenty to thirty years, and we believe that before twenty-two years passes away from the beginning in 1848, the Pope will be entirely stripped of his temporal power, and all the nations of the earth that contributed to his power weakened, leaving the power of the Pope completely neutralized, and the church, in many instances, may become an independent State affair.

Italy stands ready to wrest the last vestige of temporal power from the Pope, and probably pillage Rome, if the people are not restrained by Italian and English bayonets. Austria has abrogated the Concordat with the Pope, and it is believed that she will prohibit the promulgation of the Infallibility dogma in her dominions. Spain has dethroned Queen Isabella, who was the "Bride of the Church," and declared in favor of freedom in religion. Hungary is already agitating a separate and independent church. Napoleon III. is sick, and the Empress Eugenia has despatched a special train from Paris to bring home the "Imperial Infant," to keep company with the Prince of the Austrias, the exiled son of Isabella of Spain. Tears may be shed, but, alas! we are fearful he will pick up no more spent bullets on battle fields, by the side of the Emperor.

Our readers will recollect that in October last we wrote an article on the anticipated assembling of the Ecumenical Council, from which we make the following extracts:

"His temporal power has gradually dwindled down to a patch, the extent of which can be viewed from the dome of St. Peter's—and with the loss of his temporal power, which is only a question of a short time, he becomes stripped of more than half of his spiritual power, and he must gradually descend to the position of the Greek Patriarch, who is scarcely heard of now in the religious world. As to the time required for the fulfillment of the prophecy from its commencement, writers on this subject disagree. Some predicted 1868—others fixed no definite time for its fulfillment, but stated that it might continue from twenty to thirty years, which, added to 1848, would give 1868 or 1878. It must be evident to all our readers who have watched the signs of the times, and the discussions that have already taken place throughout Europe with regard to it, that the Council now assembled will split the church into atoms, and this will be followed by discussions and recriminations, almost equal to that which followed the great Reformation inaugurated by Martin Luther, which must lead to its disintegration, and consequent loss of power and position."

The Council has assembled—the Infallibility was adopted after a great struggle, and opposition has been made to it in almost every known Catholic country on the face of the globe. The criminations and recriminations have commenced. The Pope's temporal power is now at the mercy of Italy and England, and the day may not be far distant when the Pope may be found protected under the flag of Protestant England, or that of the United States.

This is emphatically the age of the people. The curse of slavery and serfdom has been abolished by the two most powerful nations on the face of the globe—Russia and the United States. Despotism is toppling in Austria, Spain, and France. Liberal Germany is being united into one of the ruling powers of Europe, and the people everywhere seem to be casting off the shackles of slavery and despotism.—Miner's Journal.

TWO NEW TRACTS.
BY I. C. WELLCOME, YARMOUTH, ME.

THE INQUIRER.—CATHOLIC OR PROTESTANT: WHICH?

This tract gives a sketch of the great Roman apostasy, and the dogmas which caused it; the arguments which the early faithful christians used in opposing it; also of original Protestantism, its noble declaration of Bible principles against Romanized Platonism on the immortality of the soul; the relapse of Protestantism to the Platonic dogma; their present driftings towards Romanism, Rationalism, Universalism, and Spiritism, growing out of their dogma of the soul's immortality. To this is added some interesting sketches of the revival and progress of truth in our times, and a statement of the true gospel hope. 48 pp. Price, single, 8 cts.; by mail, 10 cts.; three for 20 cts.; $5 per hundred, by express.

CHURCH SPECTACLES.

This tract raises the questions, "Why do so few attend preaching, prayer, and conference meetings? Why are so few thoroughly converted to Christ?"

It finds an answer in the lack of love for Christ in the church, as manifested in the sinful practices by her members of pleasure parties, levees, fairs, banquetings, games, gambling, dancing, and other immoral conduct, which destroy the confidence of the unconverted in the religion they see exhibited. Many proofs are given, and faithful scriptural reproofs administered. It is a terrible picture faithfully drawn, and the only remedy clearly pointed out.

24 pp. 5 cts. single; three for 10 cts.; 40 cts. per dozen; forty for $1; $2 per hundred, by mail.

IMMORTALITY.—"The Doctrine of Immortality," from the pen of Bro. James H. Whitmore, is a valuable work on the subject, and should be read by every intelligent person.

CORRECTION.

Referring to the "Personal" paragraphs relative to himself, which were copied from Zion's Herald and the Advent Herald into last week's CRISIS, the undersigned deems it fitting to say,—

1. That he has not united with the Methodist Episcopal Church. Zion's Herald has itself voluntarily corrected its misstatement on this point.

2. That he has not changed his views on the final destiny of the wicked; and that he explicitly stated this fact in the remarks which, quite unexpectedly to himself, he was invited to make at the Boston Methodist Preachers' Meeting on the 11th of July.

3. That he has renounced the Materialistic views of the nature of man, which he has preached for ten years, and held for a much longer time; and that he now believes, not only that man possesses a spiritual entity distinct from his corporeal organism, which constitutes his essential personality, but that the survivance of such entity is the only valid basis for the Bible doctrine of Resurrection from the dead. BE CONSISTENT.

Reader! do you profess to be a christian? And if so, do you profess to believe that we are living in the last days, and that soon the Lord will appear in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory? If you do, are you consistent? Does your life agree with your profession?

These are serious questions, which you will do well to ponder. Do not lay this away and think no more about it; but read it, ponder it, and answer it to yourself and before God. Your eternal welfare depends upon your answer to these questions. Be not deceived. Know thyself. It is good to be sure.

The Lord is willing to save us all; but we must all come to him that we may be saved. We must obey his word; for he says, "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him; the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." There is no respect of persons with him. All may be saved if they will but believe, and obey; but all will not do this, therefore all will not be saved. Are you doing it?

You may have been converted, and had your sins forgiven, but that will not suffice. Many have done the same and then have wandered away from the Lord. They have left their first love. Some may keep up a profession, and talk long and loud, and pray, or say their prayers, earnestly; "but not every one that saith Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

Are you doing his will? You say before men that you are; for in confessing yourself to be Christ's, you confess the same; but are you honest? It has been said that a man may be honest and not be a christian; but a man cannot be a christian and not be honest.

We should be honest not only in matters of business, but in all our intercourse with our fellow men; and, as we profess to be looking for the Lord, we should so act that we may prove to the world that we believe what we profess.

Do you see men going to ruin? then warn them faithfully to flee from the wrath to come, and find refuge in Jesus. Neither is this enough (many talk and do not act), but show them by your deeds to them, and to others, that you are in earnest. Has God given to you freely of the bounties of earth? Then, "Freely ye have received freely give." "The poor ye have alway with you."

Do you give a tenth part of all you possess? the Israelites did, and God prospered them, and Solomon said, "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty;" and "the liberal soul shall be made fat."

O how many grow poor and sickly, not only temporally, but spiritually, for no other reason than that they are not liberal enough with the things God has so freely given to them. Or if they spend it, they do not do it in the way God would have them; but spend it for that "which is not bread," and for that which is only an injury to themselves. It may safely be said that there is more money spent by those that profess to be christians throughout the United States for these three needless, and not only needless, but injurious articles, namely, tea, coffee, and tobacco, than there is for the support of the gospel of Christ. Are such things right, especially while there are God's children in our midst who must apply to the world for support, and have not clothing sufficient to attend the worship of God? Will not God hold us accountable for these things? Reader! be careful how you use the things over which the Lord has made you steward.

Does it look consistent to see a man professing to believe the Lord is coming in a very short time, and who has now enough of this world's goods to supply all his wants for a dozen years to come, still continue to hoard up the "filthy lucre," while there are so many ways in which he could do good with it, and thus "honor the Lord with thy substance." Prov. 3: 9. "O Consistency, thou art a jewel!"

Friend, whoever you are, will you meet me in the kingdom? I will endeavor, with the help of God, to be there. But to that end we must be "doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving ourselves." Time is short, and soon our working time will be over; therefore let us give diligence to make our calling and election sure; "for so an entrance shall be ministered unto us abundantly into the kingdom of our Lord." J. RIDLEY.

ORDINATION.

At a recent grove-meeting in Bartlett, N. H., Bro. John B. Deering was set apart to the work of the gospel ministry, by consent of the N. H. Conf. Ministerial Committee, the following brethren officiating: Ordaining prayer by Bro. N. Wheeler. Charge by Bro. Levi Allen. Right hand of fellowship by Bro. L. B. McKinstry.

Bro. Deering is an excellent man, a good preacher; and having recently become interested in the truths we love, is an earnest advocate of the same. He has been invited by the little company gathered in Bartlett to supply them statedly, and will do so. The church is in harmony, and the cause prosperous. L. C. MCKINSTRY.

REMARKABLE ANSWERS TO PRAYER.

In the private journal of the late Rev. Asa Kent, for many years an able and honored member of the New England Conference, there are recorded many very interesting illustrations of special answers to special prayers. From among them I select two, which I give to your readers in his own language.

"Bro. Isaac C.'s daughter, Fanny, had been for some time afflicted in her eyes, and greatly feared she would be blind—entirely so. At this time (Bro. Kent's quarterly meeting), her sight had left her, and her father was in great agony, and spake in the love-feast of his daughter's affliction, at a time when there was a great deal of feeling among us. He said, 'I cannot bear the thought of my child being blind for life, and it seems to me, if we should all kneel down, and our presiding elder (Bro. Kent) should pray for her, the Lord will answer prayer.' We all knelt and I prayed. A gracious influence rested on us, and I found great liberty in coming before the mercy-seat, and freedom and power to ask that her sight might be restored. I felt the Spirit was in this helping my infirmities, and teaching me what to pray for, and made intercession according to the will of God; and if we ask according to his will, he will do it. A shower of salvation came upon us, and Bro. C., on his return home, found Fanny's eyes quite well, and they remained so. I saw her thirty-three years after, and they remained so then. I think it was in answer to prayer."

The other case is related more at length, and some very judicious remarks are added by this devout man of God. He tells us he had prepared an account for publication, which was accidentally lost, but now makes the record from his distinct recollection of the leading facts, as follows:

"There was a remarkable answer to prayer in 1814, in the Winchendon society, which I think ought to be recorded. (Winchendon is a township of Massachusetts, some fifty miles north-west from Boston.) A worthy sister, Nancy Warner, was instantly restored to health, and she walked the room—which she had not done for years before. Her father was a pious man, and an exhorter, but poor, and his family had but little opportunity for learning, and the means of instruction in those days were very limited. Nancy was very much devoted to God; but when, I think, about twenty years of age, became very painfully afflicted with rheumatism. All means resorted to for relief seemed useless. It gradually so affected her joints, that her wrists, hands, ankles and feet, became greatly distorted. It was not long before she could not walk or work, and suffered great pain. Various doctors were applied to, but all remedies failed. But the Lord sanctified the affliction to her, and filled her soul with perfect love. She saw God in all this, and rejoiced in him evermore. I think she suffered about five years, the last two or three of which she could never walk alone, and the bones of her hands, shoulders, hips, and ankles, were strangely out of joint. While thus afflicted, it was strongly impressed upon her mind that she might be healed in answer to prayer. She spoke of it, but it seemed to others as only a notion. However, her confidence became so strong, that she made a particular request, that Bro. Elisha Streeter, who was then on the circuit, and six brethren, whom she named, should come on a certain evening and have a prayer-meeting at her father's, and, she repeated, the Lord would cure her. This being known abroad, some of them did not like to go, as they might be laughed at for going to work a miracle. A part were present and prayed, but no answer came. She told them they must come again, and the others must come with them.

The time was fixed and all were present. She was dressed, and lying on the bed in the room. They began praying, and an uncommon spirit of prayer came upon them—a spirit of intercession, which increased until a tremendous shock seemed to shake the place, and a number of them fell to the floor in an instant. Nancy started up, took her feet in her hands, and wheeled them off the bed. Her mother, kneeling close by, saw her, and laying hold of her said, 'Nancy, what are you going to do?' 'Let me alone, mother,' said Nancy, 'I am well—I can walk;' and across the room and back she walked, and then sat upon the bed, while shouts of glory filled the house. Being so overwhelmed with salvation, but a part of the company knew that Nancy was walking. It was some time before they were sufficiently composed to hear anything except 'glory.' Nancy said when the shock fell upon them, she felt it strike her head and run through her whole body, placing every bone in its socket as it passed. As it went off at the ends of her fingers and toes, she knew she was healed, and immediately started up, praising the Lord. No one could doubt it, for she showed them her hands that had been distorted for years, now in perfect shape; and she could use them with ease. The report spread, and many called to see for themselves. A number of doctors who had attended her, I think four or five, came to see her, and were satisfied. They were requested, and did sign certificates setting forth her helpless condition, and that they were satisfied no medicine could have restored her.

"Nancy was free to tell them how she was cured, and whatever their views of answers to prayer, they had no objection to her declaration and that of the family. She gave me a copy of the doctor's certificate, with her statement of her case. Her piety was undoubted by all who knew her. Her modest humility and meekness of spirit was calculated to endear her to the hearts of all the lovers of Jesus, and surely I could find no reason to doubt the truth of what she affirmed.

The apostle John says (1 Eph. 5; 14),—'This is the confidence, that if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us; whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him.' In order to retain this promise, we must know that our petition is according to the will of God. It is often difficult to know what the will of God is in a given case. His will is revealed in his word, or indicated by his providence in many particulars; but we are passing through such a variety of scenes, we may find ourselves somewhat involved in a strait in which neither the word nor providence of God, enables us to determine the will of God in this particular matter. If it be a favor desired, or an evil dreaded, we are directed to pray, and we may be conscious that 'the Spirit helpeth our infirmities, for we know not what to pray for as we ought'—as we are not sure what the will of the Lord is in this case, but this same Spirit indicates his will by making intercession for the saints according to the will of God. By this the soul is brought very near the mercy-seat, and faith fixes its eye upon the blessing, and uses a language of extraordinary boldness, for it is the Spirit that intercedes for us. Yes, it is God the Holy Ghost pleading in us, unto God the Father through God the Son, for the very things desired; then we know that he heareth us, and faith claims the promise ours. But in such praying there is a special danger to be guarded against. The principle of self-seeking may lurk in the heart, and when we desire an object, it may be that in which self has a special interest, and it may help us so to pray and make intercession also in our selfish hearts, and all our sincerity avail nothing; even if we think we have it, we do not obtain. The faith which asks and receives in this extraordinary way must exclude all self-choosing and centre in God alone; indeed, we must have a consciousness that self is dead, and all our soul is filled with God, then can we say, in the fullness of the soul, "thy will be done."—Methodist Home Journal.

For the World's Crisis.

BE KIND.

There are many reasons why we should be kind. One is, because our Father in heaven is kind even to the unthankful and to the evil. Hence, all alike partake from his great storehouse of kindness and mercy. He first taught us the law of kindness. He taught us not only to be kind to the gentle, but also to the froward, and to those that have never been disciplined by the gospel rule. Kindness is one of the christian's graces. Kindness and charity go hand in hand. Charity suffers long, and is kind. The apostle exhorts us to be kind, and tender-hearted, forbearing and forgiving. An unkind act cannot fail to make us more or less unhappy; but a kind one will be a blessing to us. We feel blessed every time we think of it.

One reason for being kind is, it is right. Duty requires it. Then never unnecessarily wound the feelings of any; but try to be like our blessed Savior, who was kind and courteous to all. Love and pity characterized his whole life. His life was so pure and unspotted, when on trial before the Roman governor, nothing could be found against him. O how wonderful his whole life. Truly, he was the one of whom Moses and the prophets did write. Wonderful, Counsellor, Prince of peace. Dear friends, if we would be like Jesus, let us walk as he walked.

Correspondence.

From Bro. A. N. Seymour.

BRO. GRANT:—I do feel that the "gospel of Christ" is now, as well as in ages gone by, "the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth," yet how unbelieving and skeptical are the masses, touching the heavenly, soul-cheering, sanctifying, and God-inspiring system of eternal redemption. As we rapidly approximate the scenes of the most awful moment, the scenes of the judgment, and the eternal realities and beauties of the world to come; the world at large seem less and less inclined to acknowledge the divine inspiration of the scriptures of truth, or the unfolding of the prophetic word, and are becoming more and reckless and demoralized as regards the things that should most concern them.

It would seem that all should understand definitely that it is for the present good of persons, families, communities, and societies generally to pay special attention to the moral influences of the gospel, which is ever calculated to mould the human mind, and elevate it to deeds of honor, charity, and happiness in this life, as well as to secure the promise of a blissful endowment of endless joy when Jesus returns. But the god or gods of this world, which dazzle, attract, and charm, are bearing the multitude onward to ruin irretrievable, irrespective of the calls and demands of God, and the consequences that await the disloyal; but in this aspect of things we discover most clearly the truthfulness of the declaration, "Nevertheless, when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth? O how true are these words of Jesus. The faith that lives not by bread alone, but by every word of God; the faith once delivered to the saints, that justifies the soul, and works by love; that stands opposed to all sin and error; that overcomes the world, the flesh, and the devil; that looks for, and loves the appearing of the dear Redeemer. O how little of this fruit, comparatively speaking, is known or enjoyed by the children of men. But thank God, he is leading his people by his revealed counsel and blessed Spirit out of the musty theology of heathen mythology, and the conflicting creeds of men, to stand out prominently before the world on the precious Bible alone, as their only creed or support, among the perils of these eventful times, that are soon to usher in the superlative joys of an endless day. And this loving flock of God find that to stand upon the original platform, and to walk in the "old paths," that it energises the whole body, and inspires all of its members with a new zeal and power, that causes darkness to recede, sinners to tremble; and, ultimately, secures their eternal reward. May every heir of promise be undeviating in his plans to do his Master's will, and by so doing, stand ready for translation, when Jesus comes to make up his jewels. Yours, looking for Jesus,

A. N. SEYMOUR.

From Bro. Geo. H. Hauxhurst.

BRO. GRANT:—I am so glad that I attended the campmeeting at Springfield two years ago, and again last year, the only campmeetings that I ever attended, and they were precious seasons to me. There I heard the life-giving word preached as I never heard it before. I have been continually hungering after the word of God since that time. I read the Bible with greater delight than ever before. I have long been in darkness, but here I find light. I am weak, but here I find strength. I am poor, but here is my riches, and I behold the promise: "To this man will I look, even unto him that is poor, and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my words."—Isa. 66: 2. There never was a man who had more prejudice against the Advent people than I, before I attended those meetings, where I received a deeper love of God in my heart, which has subdued all my prejudices. The love of God makes me just what I ought to be. The more the love of God is shed abroad in my heart, the more love I feel for my fellow-man. The narrow bigot may look with an evil eye on all who differ from him; but a real christian is not an unfeeling character. The more he knows, and the longer he lives, the more he feels the impropriety of such a spirit. The religion of Christ, rightly understood, has a tendency to enlarge the mind and make us candid toward others. Those who feel most of its power are most disposed to be charitable and liberal.

There are some professing christians who are ready to condemn all who do not agree with them; and seem to restrict salvation to their own party, and claim the right of thinking for themselves; but will not allow others the same privilege, because they do not see as they do. This is a great evil, into which some christians have fallen. They wish to restrain others from active exertion in the cause of religion, because they have not been educated as they have been; and because they do not belong to their church, and do not worship as they do. Therefore they denie those as christians. O what a wretched spirit of bigotry! what an evidence of the lack of the love of God! Yet some of the disciples of our Lord were guilty of the same thing. "John answered and said, "Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name; and we forbade him, because he followeth not with us."—Luke 9: 49, 50. "It came to pass, when the time was come that he should be received up, he steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem, and sent messengers before his face; and they went, and entered into a village of the Samaritans, to make ready for him. And they did not receive him, because his face was as though he would go to Jerusalem. And when his disciples, James and John, saw this, they said, Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven and consume them as Elias did? But he turned and rebuked them, and said, Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of. For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them."—Luke 9: 51–56.

It is no part of the religion of Christ to persecute others who differ from us. Our Savior said to his disciples, "Forbid it not; for he that is not against us is for us." How much better it would be if this answer of our Lord's were more considered. How much good might be done, if love and harmony prevailed, as it should with God-fearing people. The want of the power of divine love, has been not only the cause of bigotry, but that which is closely allied to it, persecution. We should not have known of the tortures and the dreadful sufferings of so many thousands on account of the difference in their religious opinion, if they had been influenced by the right spirit,—the grace of God in truth. God is our example, and he was all kindness, who came to save and not to destroy. Alas! what havoc should we do, if left to ourselves to carry out our own spites. We sould carry everything by violence and persecution; we should see all around us tokens of vengeance, kingdoms destroyed, and our fellows struck with death before their appointed time. What but the lack of the love of God in the hearts of men, has deluged our world with blood? In the depravity of our hearts, we would throw down the altars of others to erect our own. O, my God, help us to feel the force of christian sentiment and love in our hearts, that we may have no desire to injure another.

When I consider the shortness of time, how my heart laments that there are so many nominal christians, who have a name to live, but are dead; and what is still more distressing, is to reflect how many who are called christian ministers seem never to feel what they preach. I do not wish to reproach them, I would rather pray that they may become animated by divine grace, that they may be a blessing to mankind. Brilliancy of genius, power of eloquence, may show the man, but it cannot make the useful minister of Jesus.

The tendency of our natures in religious services, in these days, is to formality. Instead of letting the Spirit guide and control the form of our worship, we let the form control the Spirit. The word of God, attended by the Holy Spirit, alone can accomplish the work in the hearts of those who hear. It may be well to use sanctified humanity as a help in the Lord's cause; but human productions or authority, should never be taken as a treasury from the pulpit, nor should it enter it. Christian people should not expect to receive great honor from the wicked, for the ungodly are not inclined to prefer those who wield with truthfulness the two-edged sword. Any manner of worship that is not accompanied by the divine Spirit, is nothing but formality. The way to avoid this great evil, is to be sure that we are led and enlightened by the Holy Spirit and the divine word; "for as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." Then let us take the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, and we shall be guided into all truth.

Bloomfield, Conn. GEO. HAUXHURST.

From Bro. A. French.

BRO. GRANT:—As we have no preaching about the coming of Christ, since Bro. P. A. Smith left for the north, I went to hear the Baptist preacher. He preached from Cor. 6: 19, 20: "And ye are not your own; for ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's." He said to glorify God in our body is to visit the widow and orphan, to minister unto them, and to help the poor, which is all right enough. Then he went on to say, when the body dies it becomes decomposed, and wastes away, and goes back to the elements from which it was taken; but the soul immediately takes a spiritual body, and lives on to all eternity, and that the body is no part of the man. He said the body that Jesus Christ took from the Virgin Mary, the hands and feet that were nailed to the cross, are no more a part of Christ, than his [the preacher's] body was a part of Christ; and that the body was only a sort of means that Christ used for transporting himself from one place to another, when he went about teaching the people.

I would rather believe the word of God, which teaches that Christ died for the sins of the world, and that God raised him from the dead, the same body that was pierced with the nails; for he told Thomas, after he had risen from the dead, to thrust his hand into his side, put his finger into the prints of the nails, that he might believe. Jesus went to heaven in the same bodily form, flesh and bones, and he is so coming in like manner as he went away. Your brother in Christ, looking for redemption when he shall come.

ALFRED FRENCH.

SR. HANNAH CURTIS writes from Kingfield, Me.:—"My soul is full of glory. O how my heart rejoices that the day of our redemption draweth near. I love the Lord Jesus. Glory to his name forever. I praise God, too, for the way of life and salvation; that I ever learned to believe the truth of God's word. It is but a short time since I first saw the light. I feel strong in the faith, and though we are surrounded by the ungodly, I mean by the grace of God to do all I can to spread this glorious light. I believe that the Lord is coming, and that he will come soon. I love to think that he is coming to give life to the dead, cleanse and purify the earth, and destroy the devil, and all his works, and death itself shall die. I love to think of the new made earth, where no farewell tear is shed; no sigh heaves the immortal bosom; where sickness, sorrow, pain and death can never come; and where we shall see Jesus as he is, and behold him face to face, and dwell at God's right hand."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, Aug. 15. We have news to-day of a battle fought before Metz in which the Prussians were victorious, and also of a severe repulse sustained by the Prussians in an attempt to prevent the crossing of the Moselle by the French. I believe these reports to refer to two separate engagements. It is certain that the main body of the French army is moving to the Meuse and toward Chalons. Their whole position is most critical and it will be very difficult for them to retrieve themselves. The Prussians are believed to have now nearly one million of soldiers in the field.

LONDON, Aug. 16. The Telegraph believes that two great battles were fought on Sunday,—one at Ponge, eight miles east of Metz, and the other at Longueville.

LONDON, Aug. 16. The Daily News, in its issue of to-day, contains a telegraphic dispatch from its correspondent at the neutral city of Luxembourg, which says that a great battle was fought yesterday, and the whole line of the German army was defeated. The correspondent adds that this intelligence lacks confirmation. No further advices had been telegraphed relating to the affair.

PARIS, Aug. 16. The Journal Officiel to-day contains a decree declaring that the cities of Cherbourg, Brest, L'Orient, and Rochefort are in a state of siege.

The Moniteur to-day says that during the battle on Sunday, Marshal Bazaine had in position a masked battery of mitrailleurs, and as four regiments of the Prussian Royal Guard were approaching, unmasked, and two of the regiments were completely annihilated.

PARIS, Aug. 16. The Moniteur du Soir published yesterday an article full of confidence and resolution. The following is an extract, and is a fair exhibit of the tone of the French press: "Everything progresses well. The enemy makes haste to finish his work. He knows full well that the prolongation of the war exhausts his forces. His tactics alone show that we have only to gain time to divert the Prussians from their base of operations, while defending our ground inch by inch.

The passage at arms which took place yesterday under the guns of Metz is the first act in the new drama. Eight days hence the energy which has marked the first operations of the invaders will have given way to discouragement and exhaustion. Our fortified towns all hold out. Bitsche, Pfalzbourg and Verdun are all defended by an army, and their inhabitants answer with their guns to the arrogant summons of the enemy.

The national defence commences, but just commences. Frenchmen are ready to answer to the call of the country. See your National Guard Mobile and the volunteers who are on their way to the Vosges. In the mountains there shall the Prussians find their graves. They have asked for a war of races, and such shall they have."

LONDON, Aug. 16. Advices from Madrid give more authentic information of Republican outbreaks, and there is no doubt that Italy is threatened with immediate trouble. The Prefects of Sienna, Arezzo and Ancona have telegraphed to Florence for troops.

It is denied to-day that Mazzini has been arrested in Palermo.

LONDON, Aug. 16. Six hundred thousand German soldiers are now in France, carrying the needle gun, and after them come the reserves of the entire male population of able-bodied Germany.

This mass is distributed in three parties, viz: The Army of the Saar, the Army of the Rhine, and the Army of the South.

Frederick Charles commands the Army of the Rhine as leader of the centre; on his right, advancing southeast of Luxemburg is the First Army or that of the Sarr, under Gen. Steinmetz; on his left is the Third or Southern Army, led by Prince Frederick William, heir to the crown.

Under the latter are 250,000 men, under Frederick Charles 250,000, and under General Steinmetz 70,000; total, 570,000. Steinmetz has nearly 200 guns, the Crown Prince 660 guns, and Frederick Charles 660; total, over 1500 guns. In other words Steinmetz has 60 battalions of infantry, 48 squadrons of horse, and 31 battalions of artillery; Prince Charles has 197 battalions of infantry, 52 squadrons of horse and 110 batteries; the Crown Prince has 192 battalions of infantry, 164 squadrons of cavalry and 116 batteries.

"VERDUN, Aug. 16. No news from Metz. Nothing is known to have occurred to-day. All day yesterday the roar of cannon was heard between Metz and Verdun.

Persons who reached here from that direction say that a great battle was fought, opening at daybreak, and that the Prussians lost more than forty thousand men in the combat, and have been completely defeated. During yesterday morning at the extremity of my arrondissement, twenty-eight kilometres from the fortifications of Verdun, the enemy has been seen directing his retreat to the south."

PARIS, Aug. 16. The Journal Officiel publishes this morning the following notification of the blockade of the coast of the German and Prussian States:

The undersigned, Vice Admiral, Commander-in-Chief of the naval forces of the Emperor of France in the North Sea, considering the state of war between France and Prussia, as well as the States of the North German Confederation, in virtue of the power in us vested, declare that from and after the 15th day of August, 1870, the coasts of Prussia and the North German Confederation, extending from the Island of Barkum to the north of Elder, with all the ports, harbors, rivers, roads, etc., are in a state of effective blockade by the naval forces placed in our command, and that friendly or neutral vessels shall be allowed ten days in which to finish loading and quit the blockaded ports. Proceedings will be instituted against all vessels which shall try to break through said blockade, according to international laws and treaties now in force neutral powers.

Given on board the French Emperor's iron clad Magnamire, stationed between the English Island of Heligoland and the Prussian coast, the 12th day of August, 1870.

(Signed) Vice Admiral, Commander-in-chief,
FONIECHON.

PARIS, Aug. 17. A.M. Count Palikao has officially announced that he has received dispatches from the headquarters of the French army to the effect that the Prussians yesterday relinquished their attempts to interrupt the line of the French retreat and to prevent the junction of the corps of McMahon and Bazaine.

The Prussian army under Prince Frederick Charles, after repeated and fruitless assaults on the French line, have abandoned their attempts to disrupt the French army and delay its union. The Prussians are now retreating upon Commercy, southwesterly from Metz, after three or four sanguinary and well contested engagements.

The Prussian forces suffered a serious check in their efforts to pierce the French centre. The new French army will be under the sole command of Marshal Bazaine, and will co-operate with the army of the Rhine, by which it is ready to be supported.

PARIS, Aug. 17. The Gaulois (newspaper) announces that Count Palikia has received despatches of a cheering character from Marshal Bazaine, dated yesterday. The government has granted permission to all peaceful Germans to remain in France.

Thirty thousand troops of Marshal McMahon's corps, who were cut off from the French army and believed to have fallen into the hands of the Prussians, have arrived at Strasbourg in safety.

The Arch Bishop of Paris has surrendered all the diocesan schools, and other institutions under his charge, to the French authorities for hospital uses. Over 300 beds have been set up in these places.

BERLIN, Aug. 17. Advices from the front report the town of Metz as completely invested by the Prussian army. The Prussian cavalry have penetrated the enemy's country to a point beyond Bar le Duc, being almost within one hundred miles of Paris.

LONDON, Aug. 17. The correspondents of the various London papers confirm the reports previously published, that the French army entered the last conflict in a starving condition.

Advices from Paris state that the Emperor is actively organizing large forces at Chalons.

PARIS, Aug. 17. Count Palikao, the French minister of war, has received official intelligence from the army dated headquarters, 11 P. M., yesterday, stating that the army was in excellent condition, and continued to execute combined movements after a brilliant engagement.

LONDON, Aug. 17. The blockade of the German ports having been established, Austria is permitted by the Russian Government to pass merchandise, duty free, through the ports of Riga. The name of the consignee is required to be shown on the bills of lading.

PARIS, Aug. 17. The following official dispatch has just been made public:

METZ, Aug. 17–3 P. M. We had a serious engagement yesterday, the 16th, near Gravellotte. We gained the advantage, but lost heavily.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18. The World's London letter of last night says: It is believed on the best authority that the French will concentrate at Chalons with 300,000 men and 1000 guns, and that the Prussians will attack them with 500,000 men and 1400 guns. All actions of to-day, yesterday and Monday must be considered preliminary to one of the greatest conflicts that the world has ever seen.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18. The Courier des Etats Unis has a special dispatch this morning from M. Gaillardet, Paris, last evening, as follows:

"The victory I announced yesterday is confirmed on all sides. The Minister of War has received official news. The dispatch announces that the strategic movement continues with perfect success."

LONDON, Aug. 18. The following official dispatch was published at Berlin this morning:—

PONT-A-MOUSSON, Wednesday evening.

Gen. Alvensleben advanced yesterday with the Third corps toward the east side of Metz, on the line of the enemy's retreat toward Verdun. He encountered severe fighting with the divisions of Gens. Decaen, Lamerault, Frossard and Canrobert, and the Imperial guard. Gen. Alvensleben was sustained successively by the Tenth army corps, and by a detachment of the Eighth and Ninth, commanded by Prince Frederick Charles. The enemy was driven in upon Metz, in spite of his great superiority of forces, after a severe combat of twelve hours. The losses on both sides are very heavy. The Prussian Gens. Doering and Widel are killed, and Gens. Rausch and Gruscher were wounded.

A Paris dispatch says that different battles around Metz have been fought by the troops of the third and fourth corps. About 40,000 French troops were engaged. The Prussian loss is computed at 20,000. The French loss is comparatively small, owing to the aid afforded by the cannon of the adjacent fortresses.

The Journal Officiel preserves the same persisten silence, and the people are accustoming themselves to the reserve with which the Government feels obliged to guard the news of military events. Everywhere perfect confidence reigns, and the wise counsels of the press have contributed not a little to this resignation. The defeat of the enemy and his retreat has developed perfect confidence in the final result of the war. The morals of the entire army is excellent, and the confidence and courage of the soldiery without bounds. Their constancy has not abandoned them for a moment.

Gaillardet also states that news of the affair at Gravelllatte was received with great rejoicing, and that the enthusiasm of the people has been greatly augmented, if it were possible, by the proclamation of Marshal McMahon, and says that it is hoped that a junction of Marshals McMahon's and Bazaine's corps will be accomplished, and that this news, together with the advantages gained in the last few days, has caused us to forget our first reverses.

The investment of Strasbourge is so slack that French troops have entered and reinforced the garrison. Provisions have also been caraied there, without an attempt at capture. The paymaster of the French army left there with a large amount of treasure without any hindrance. It would seem that, as the Prussians have no siege trains, they have given up the idea of a regular siege, having attacked Pfalsburg unsuccessfully.

The French forces are increasing constantly and the Prussians decreasing. The hour of complete victory for France is near."

Passing Events.

☞ Chang and Eng, the Siamese twins, arrived on the Cunard steamship Palmyra, from Liverpool. On the second day out Chang was attacked with paralysis, which affects his left side and has almost entirely deprived him of the use of his limbs and the power of speech. Eng has thus far felt no symptoms of the illness which affects his brother. They were accompanied by three of their sons, and will proceed to their home in North Carolina as soon as Chang's health will permit.

☞ The number of Chinese in the country at the end of 1869 is estimated at 90,000, among whom were but 5000 women and 2000 children. Since immigration began in 1848, 138,000 have come to the United States, of whom 38,000 have returned to China and about 10,000 have died. Of the number at present in the country, about one-half are in California, 25,000 in other Pacific States and Territories, while fully 15,000 have crossed the Rocky Mountains.

☞ Bishop Thompson says he saw in India the religious devotee sitting cross-legged on sharp stones, who had sat there for seven years, under the belief that mental and physical suffering would improve his spiritual condition.

☞ The Free Methodist Church of America was organized in August, 1869, and now numbers 109 preachers, 6000 communicants, and a church property worth $2,134,050. They have four conferences, the Tenessee, Illinois, Susquehanna, and Michigan.

☞ Since the first indications of war with Prussia the French Emperor has apparently taken a new lease of life. All symptoms of gout, with which he has been tormented for some time past, have entirely disappeared, and he is all animation and vivacity.

☞ The Roman Council is neither broken up nor adjourned, but notice has been given to the Bishops that they may quit, or stroll off informally, or without any special license, but be ready to answer to their names at the call of the roll on the 11th of December.

☞ Many commercial failures have been announced in London and Liverpool since the war was declared between France and Prussia.

☞ The crop reports continue favorable except from Mississippi, where caterpillars have done some damage.

Members of, and delegates to, the Advent Christian Association, are members of this Society. It is hoped there will be a full attendance of members to this meeting. ABIAL W. SIBLEY, Secretary.

Notice.

The Union Female Missionary Association will hold its annual meeting at Springfield, Mass., commencing Aug. 24th, 1870, at one o'clock P. M. All laboring members are requested to be present, as there are some matters of importance to be attended to. Should any be unable to attend this meeting, will they please send their reports to the Secretary at Stoneham, Mass., by Aug. 14th? We kindly invite our brethren and sisters, who are interested in the mission work, and desire to help the women who labor in the gospel, to meet with us. We hope to have a good meeting in the name of the Lord. M. MCKINSTRY.

The Vermont Campmeeting.

This meeting will commence Sept. 11th, and hold over the following Sabbath. It is to be held in a pleasant grove at the mouth of Camp Brook, in West Bethel, at a place known as Finley's Bridge. It is easy of access. Come, brethren, one and all, to this meeting. Come prepared to work for the salvation of souls.

Arrangements have been made with the Vermont Central R. R., by which those taking the cars from Bellows Falls, and intermediate places for Bethel, or from the north, any station on the road, will purchase regular tickets at the offices. Free return passes will be furnished to all such on the camp-ground. The mail train will stop on Monday the 12th, and Saturday 17th, both ways, so that those coming on these days can stop at the crossing near the camp-ground. The train will also stop the 19th to take all the passengers on their return home. Teams will be furnished to take passengers to and from the depot other days during the week, at low rates.

Bro. J Couch, S. J. Mathewson, and others are expected to preach the word. The King of glory is soon coming. Our new Advent Mission Tent, will be pitched to hold meetings in, in case of wet weather, and evenings.

N. B. Our annual Advent Christian Conference is to be held at this meeting on Thursday, 15th, at 4 P. M.

For the Committee, R. N. STETSON, Sec.

Conn. Campmeeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a campmeeting in a beautiful grove, on the land of Chauncey Dunham, two and one half miles south of the H. R. Station at Plainville, Ct., commencing Monday, Sept. 12th, 1870, and continuing over the following Sabbath. Plainville is at the junction of the H. P. & F. and N. H. & N. railroads. Conveyance from the station to camp-ground not to exceed twenty-five cts. for each person. As far as practicable, reach Plainville by noon trains. We shall endeavor to provide wholesome food for all who wish, but do not propose to invite saint or sinner to patronize Vanity Fair on ground consecrated to God. Provision will be made for those coming with horses.

Our object is to worship and glorify God, to strengthen the weak, promote brotherly love, and win sinners to Christ. To this end, we invite all who love our Lord Jesus Christ to join with us, from far and near. The deep, dark clouds of national distress, together with the muttering thunders of the final conflict, are the startling summons to meet the Bridegroom. Let us come, then, as pilgrims and strangers to prepare for the event, instead of fashionable devotees to eat and to drink. Come, brethren and sisters, consecrated to God, ready to work for him, that in the great judgment day many sheaves may be gathered as fruits of this meeting. Amen.

Notice.

The seventh annual campmeeting of the Adventists of the Interior will be held at Amboy, Ill., commencing Saturday, Sept. 3d, 1870. This point has been selected as the most eligible that could be obtained, and as combining more advantages than any other location at our command. It is quite easy of access, and an excellent ground. All possible preparations will be made for the convenience and comfort of those who attend.

Amboy is situated upon the Illinois Central Railway, between Dixon and Mendota. At Mendota excellent connection is made with the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Road, every day about noon, trains from the east, west, north and south, arriving within a few moments of each other. Be sure and take a train that will bring you to Mendota about noon. At Dixon, connection is made with the Northwestern Road. At La Salle, with the Rock Island and Pacific Road. At Bloomington, with the Alton and St. Louis Road. At Freeport, with the Racine and Milwaukee Road. We cannot now give the connections at these junctions, but may do so hereafter.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R.

Persons coming to camp on the Illinois Central Road, will pay full fare in going to Amboy. On the camp-ground, they will receive a certificate which will enable them to return on payment of one-fifth fare.

C. B. & Q. R. R.

Passengers by the Burlington and Quincy Railroad will inquire for "return campmeeting tickets to MENDOTA." They will pay one-fifth extra in going, and receive a ticket which will enable them to return FREE. ☞ Be sure and ask for a "return ticket for campmeeting." Any who wish to come, who have not yet sent in the name of their station, must attend to it soon. The stations from which the return tickets may be obtained, are as follows: Chicago, Bristol, Sandwich, Leland, Earl, Wyanet, Buda, Wyoming, Neponset, Galva, Altona, Oneida, Wataga, Galesburg, Burlington, Camp Point, Quincy.

C. & N. W. R. R.—GALENA DIVISION.

We expect a reduction of fare on this road, though the arrangements are not yet fully completed. If successful, passengers from the following stations will ask for "Campmeeting return tickets" to DIXON, and pay one fare and a fifth. The ticket, countersigned on the camp-ground, will entitle them to return free. The following are the stations from which we expect reduced fare: Chicago, Junction, Geneva, DeKalb, Malta, Rochelle, Fulton, Clinton.

HALF PRICE. The committee have decided to issue no free tickets for board at this meeting. Ministers and their families and the poor will be provided with board at half price. This applies to all who eat at the public table. No exceptions will be made only in the case of hired help, whose board is included as part of their wages. Half price for board will be somewhere from 30 to 40 cents a day. Our free boarding list has proved a great leak hitherto, and the only way to reform it is to abolish it.

Lumber for tent-frames will be furnished free. Straw also will be furnished free. Hay and feed for horses will be furnished at cost. Board, at the most reasonable rates, will be furnished; and if there should be profits accruing in this department, they will be applied to the expenses of the meeting. J. M. SNOOK, Secretary.

New York State Quar. Conference.

By divine permission, the Advent Christian Conference of N. Y. State will assemble in quarterly session with the church in Darien, on Friday evening, Sept. 9th, 1870, and remain over Sunday. This will be the tenth annual meeting of the church in Darien; and a general and cordial invitation is extended to all who love the appearing of Jesus. Come praying; come to take bolder, higher ground for Christ and the interests of his coming kingdom.

Leave the cars at Craft's Station, six miles west of Batavia, Central Road. Teams will be in waiting on Friday P. M.—perhaps on Saturday. Trains arrive from the west at four P. M., and from the east at two P. M.

Will the churches which have received the Secretary's letter please take immediate action, that the treasury may be replenished and the conference prepared for work. Brethren, the "signs of the times" are ominous. Let us strengthen our hearts and hands for earnest and efficient labor. WHO WILL? WM. E. BROWN, Sec.

Notice.

The Maine Westerly Quarterly Conference will be held in the Bowdoin meeting-house, in Bowdoin, Thursday, Sept. 15th, at two o'clock P. M., and hold over the next Sunday.

Per order, C. GOUD.

P. S.—Will our preaching brethren arrange to be there to preach the word? Come, brethren and sisters, and work for and in the name of the Lord, for the salvation of our fellow men. C. G.

Campmeeting at Mechanic Falls.

The committee chosen at B. Pond last year, have thought proper to locate a campmeeting, to be held permanently at Mechanic Falls, Me. A beautiful spot is found, and nearly prepared, which we believe will fully meet the expectations of the people. Now what we wish is a general rally of the brethren and sisters, that our meeting may prove a success. Prepare your tents, ye companies in the armies of the Lord, and be ready for a march to camp, about Sept. 12th. Particulars about railroads and other matters will be given by the full Board of the committee soon.

J. ALBERT LIBBY.

Grove Meeting in Fairfield, Ohio.

There will be a grove meeting in Fairfield, Ohio, in woods belonging to Israel Weeks, adjacent to the Second Advent Bethel Chapel, two and a half miles east of Steam Berg, commencing Thursday, Sept. 1st, and continuing over Sunday, the 4th. Bro. McCullock, pastor of Nevada church, Ohio, and other preaching brethren, are expected to meet with us. Now, brethren, as we have no campmeeting near us, let us all turn out in northern Ohio, and make this a good substitute. Preaching on the ground at 10.30 A. M. and 1.30 P. M., and in the chapel in the evening. Come with baskets well filled for noon lunch, and hearts prepared, and voices tuned to make that grove vocal with the praises of God. Provision is made for the entertainment of strangers.

GEO. W. STETSON, Pastor.

Notice.

The next regular conference for Fairfield, Ohio, will be held Sept. 3d and 4th, and will probably be a grove meeting. Let all be duly prepared.

G. W. STETSON, Pastor.

We hope the disciples of Jesus will come and help in the meeting. This is the time to awake. Startling events may be expected, making even more certain that the Lord is at hand. Bro. Couch and others may be expected to labor at this meeting. By order of the Committee,

L. BOUTELL.

A BRIGHTER DAY.

"Lift your heads" with faith; the morrow
Dawneth brighter than to-day;
Angel hands will lift the shadows,
Chase the gathering gloom away.
Cho.—"Lift your heads," the day is breaking,
Soon the morning will appear;
Soon the earth from slumber waking—
"Lift your heads," the day draws near.

Art thou lonely, sad and weary,
Watching through the silent night?
Dry thy tears, the orient glistens
Like a thread of silver light.

Does the night seem long and weary,
Dangers threat'ning 'long the way?
Joy will soon return to bless thee,
Soon will dawn the brighter day.

Look! e'en now the morn is breaking,
Soon the shades will flee away;
Soon the earth from slumber waking,
Brings to light the brighter day.

WHAT DIFFERENCE DOES IT MAKE?

Those who preach the Bible doctrine of the sleep of the dead, the literal resurrection, and the inheriting of the earth by the saints, are often met in reply by the question, "What difference does it make?" The idea to be conveyed by this question is, that it makes no difference whether we sleep and wait the resurrection, or go to glory at death. We get glory at last either way, and one is as good as the other, and therefore we should not be so very particular in this matter. And also the inheritance of the saints will be good enough, wherever it is, and all the efforts made to prove its whereabouts is labor for nought, since it makes no difference with us where it shall be. We ought not to be so very particular as to blame those who do not locate it on the renewed earth, since it really makes no difference with us.

Now, all this seems very plausible at first glance, but when we come to look at the facts connected with it, I think we shall find it makes a vast difference in the result.

Firstly, it makes a difference with all christians. For it must be admitted by all of them that the only hope we have of any inheritance whatever, is derived from revelation; and if God's actual and only promises contained therein fail to be fulfilled, then all fails. Revelation, or in other words, the Bible, does not say to the saints, "your inheritance may be on the earth, or it may be in heaven, or perhaps it will be beyond the bounds of time and space," but it says it shall be the earth, or language unmistakably applying to the earth every time it speaks on the subject. The saints are confined to this one promise, and to say that it makes no difference whether they receive this or something else, is to say that it makes no difference whether they get any inheritance at all, for if they lose this one, they lose all, as there is no other.

Secondly, it makes a vast difference to the unconverted world whether they believe the Bible doctrine of man's mortality, and whether they admit the resurrection as the only hope of a future life for the dead. Just look at it a moment. Why are the majority of unconverted persons so very favorable to the theory of universal salvation, and why are there so many Universalists? Because of the doctrine of eternal hell-fire, which is a result drawn from the dogma of immortal-soulism; or, what is the same thing, the "not-die" doctrine of the serpent in Eden, which involves the conscious state of the so-called dead. (See note.) Why are there so many Spiritualists? Because of the "not-die" doctrine. Why so many Roman Catholics, Sweedenborgians, Mormons, and followers of every other false religion in the world? Simply because the world clings to the belief of the "not-die" doctrine. Here are a vast majority kept far from Christ and Christianity by the theory of the conscious state of the dead. For, if these should but admit the sleep of the dead, they are then shut up to the one only hope of the resurrection for a future life, and this would lead them to seek and serve Jesus. Now, does it make any difference whether we preach the mortality of man, or his immortality? The "not-die" doctrine was preached to Eve in Eden, and she believed it. Did it make any difference in the end?

Thirdly, it makes a difference with a man whether he speaks falsely, or tells the truth. A falsehood may be spoken ignorantly or intentionally. In either case the falsehood is the same. Thousands of men professing to be Christ's ministers are heralding the "not-die" doctrine; and although they may do it ignorantly, yet its effect is not for Christ, but against him. Whatever good is done by these men is not the result of this doctrine. The doctrine is plainly false, and can result in no real permanent good, any more than a thistle can produce figs. And are not ministers responsible for what they teach? Can they mix up truth and falsehood with perfect impunity? If they convert one, and needlessly pervert ten at the same time, will God overlook their perversions entirely for the sake of the one saved? And then to think that there are many proclaiming the immortality of the soul, who are convinced it is an error, or mistake, to say the least, but who dare not oppose it for fear of loss of temporal support, is enough to make one tremble in view of the awful responsibility resting upon such. Even in my short and not extensive experience in the ministry, I have found several who, by their own confession, are willfully ignorant, and intentionally opposers of the truth; and there are doubtless many more. Does it make any difference with such what they do? I would not stand in their place for a million of worlds like this. No, let me stand on the side of God's truth, if it makes me a martyr in a day. If it shortens my life to an hour, let me have the satisfaction at its close, that for one hour, at least, I gave no place to the devil or his lie.

Lastly, it makes a difference with God whether man is immortal or not, and whether he gives him a home on the earth renewed, or not. The Almighty has told man that he shall die, and if man never dies, his word is a failure. In all the word of inspiration, from Moses to John inclusive, we find no place where God has said to man that he is any part immortal and can never die. Does it make any difference with God whether it be true or false? The Almighty has promised to the saints the renewed earth for an eternal home. Will it not make a difference with him if he fails to perform this word? It is said that God cannot lie. Shall we suffer his character for veracity to be impeached, and then say it makes no difference? Such a feeling as this, if carried out, would lead one to say that it would make no difference if God were dethroned, and the devil ruled in his stead, provided man could have his own way. Away with such dishonor to God and his sacred word. Let God be true, let his word be held sacred by us; and let us glory in the cross of Christ; for it will make a vast difference in the end on which side we are found, whether of truth or error.

F. Burr.

Note. I speak of the conscious state of the so-called dead, because I cannot conceive of any consciousness in actual death. The terms consciousness and death cannot be applied to the same state. Consciousness implies life, and as far as death reigns, unconsciousness must go with it. Man-made theology has coined the expression "the conscious dead," and its synonyms and popular language has adopted them, but they are perfect absurdities, and I only use them that I may reach those who are led away by such erroneous opinions.

ASTONISHING ACCURACY OF THE BIBLE.

An astonishing feature of the word of God is, that notwithstanding the time at which its compositions were written, and the multitudes of the topics to which it alludes, there is not one physical error—not one assertion or allusion disproved by the progress of modern science. None of those mistakes which the science of each succeeding age discovered in the books of the preceding; above all, none of those absurdities which modern astronomy indicates in such great numbers in the writings of the ancients—in their sacred codes, in their philosophy, and even in the finest pages of the fathers of the church—not one of those errors is to be found in any of our sacred books. Nothing there will ever contradict that which, after so many ages, the investigations of the learned world have been able to reveal to us on the state of the globe, or on that of the heavens.

Peruse with care our scriptures from one end to the other, to find there such spots; and whilst you apply yourselves to this examination, remember that it is a book that speaks of everything, which describes nature, which recites its creation, which tells us of the water, of the atmosphere, of the mountains, of the animals, and of the plants. It is a book that teaches us the first revolutions of the world, and it also foretells its last. It recounts them in the circumstantial language of history, it extols them in the sublimest strains of poetry, and it chants them in the charms of glowing song. It is a book which is full of Oriental rapture, elevation, variety, and boldness. It is a book which speaks of the heavenly and invisible world, whilst it also speaks of the earth and things visible. It is a book which nearly fifty writers, of every degree of cultivation, of every state, of every condition, and living through the course of fifteen hundred years, have concurred to make. It is a book which was written in the centre of Asia, in the sands of Arabia, and in the deserts of Judea; in the court of the temple of the Jews, in the music schools of the prophets of Bethel and and Jericho, in the sumptuous palaces of Babylon, and on the idolatrous banks of Chebar; and finally, in the centre of the western civilization, in the midst of the Jews and of their ignorance, in the midst of polytheism and its idols, as also in the bosom of pantheism and its sad philosophy. It is a book whose first writer had been forty years a pupil of the magicians of Egypt, in whose opinion the sun, the stars, and the elements, were endowed with intelligence, re-acted on the elements, and governed the world by a perpetual alluvium. It is a book whose first writer preceded by more than nine hundred years the most ancient philosophers of ancient Greece and Asia—the Thalses, and the Pythagorases, the Zaluctuses, the Xenophons, and the Confuciuses. It is a book which carries its narrations even to the hierarchies of angels—even to the most distant epochs of the future, and the glorious scenes of the last days. Well, search among its fifty authors, search among its sixty-six books, its 1,189 chapters, and its 31,173 verses, search only for one of those thousand errors which the ancients and the moderns committed when they spoke of the heavens or of the earth—of their revolutions, of the elements; search, but you will find none.—Rainbow.

TO YOU.

Retailers and Circulators of Slanders, and Gossip-Mongers generally:—

Among all the pests with which society is infected and cursed, scandal-mongers are the most loathsome. Their hearts and natures are generally as base as their morals are corrupt. Under a coward's shield they attack the innocent, and lacerate the hearts of the pure and good. The robber and the assassin are no greater criminals than the creatures who strive to rob of what is more valuable than riches, or even life itself—a good name.

As a general rule, the circulators and retailers of malicious slanders, are but little better than the authors. They are living, moral pestilence, to be shunned and abhorred as a deadly poison to the very air they breathe. In a majority of cases they are actuated by base and selfish motives, and when scandal is fastened upon them, they cringe and skulk under the flimsy pretext that they meant no harm, and only reported what they had heard. There is no punishment severe enough for these gossip-mongers; they should be scorned by society, and deserve to be hunted down and be driven beyond the pale of civilization, as outcasts, utterly unworthy to mingle in the society of a christian community.

Many of these circulators of slander are known in society, and for a time are tolerated by persons who are accessories to their wicked acts, simply for the purpose of making them the willing instruments to gratify a feeling of revenge, or some mean and petty envy, or personal malice of their own.

There is altogether too much licence allowed to idle, gossiping men and women in society. These slaughterers of character should not be permitted indiscriminately to assail whomsoever they please, either through a chance habit of gossiping or from some private hatred of their own. They should have administered to them on the instant, such a stinging rebuke as would mantle their checks with shame, if they possessed one particle of delicacy or charitable or christian benevolence.

Many happy homes have been made miserable, many hopes blighted, many domestic circles darkened, many poor, broken-hearted, innocent, sensitive creatures have had their lives embittered by these thoughtless, gossiping men and women, who go from house to house and from place to place, tattling, collecting tales, and retailing scandal.

Now, if every high-souled man and true woman would administer to these libellers and flippant scandal-mongers a proper rebuke, by letting them know that they totally abhor and detest them, society would very soon be purged of these growing, noxious nuisances, that have taken root in our midst.

We do honestly and earnestly desire that every christian man and woman examine themselves and look into their own hearts, and review their daily lives, for the purpose of ascertaining if the sins to which we here point, are among theirs, to be answered for at the last great day of account.

There are always a class of individuals, in every community, whose lives are aimless, and who are but too glad to give ear to the poisonous voice of the slanderer; and if they do not become retailers of slander, they give it a kind of endorsement, by a shrug of the shoulder, or shake of the head, or knowing wink of the eye, or by a—"O, indeed! is it possible? well, I thought so." This class are generally beneath contempt. They are a species of gossip-mongers, and should be despised and shunned.

MY CROSS.

It seemed at first a gilded mite,
For I had sought it long;
So when I found it seemed so bright,
My sighing turned to song.

It paints to us a rugged path
Before we gain the crown;
And none but those who endurance hath,
Shall e'er with Christ sit down.

The path encircles Zion's hill,
From base to summit winds;
Press onward, then, for he who will,
True peace and comfort finds.

With eye on goal, and cross on breast,
Oh look not back to earth,
Lest while you dally there to rest,
Unholy thoughts have birth.

List not for praise from earth's proud sons,
Earth's joys are but a weight;
Then on, outstrip all grovelling ones,
Pass through the pearly gate.

AN AGE OF LIARS.

"Dare to be true; nothing can need a lie."

"Wherefore, put away lying, speak every man the truth with his neighbor.—Eph. 4: 25. Cheating and lying, lying and cheating. It is cheating here, cheating there; it is lying here, lying there.

"A little theft, a small deceit, Too often leads to more."

"He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much; he that is unjust in the least, is unjust also in much."

Lies are of various kinds, of various degrees of aggravation. There are black lies and white lies, lies of vanity, pride, ambition, flattery, convenience, interest, fear, wantonness, cruelty; lies of first, second, and third rate malignity. There are also passive or practical lies—lies acted out. Point your finger in the wrong direction to an inquiring traveler—you give him the lie.

Again, some are habitual liars—lie at nearly every breath; like the common swearer, who swears and knows it not. "A righteous man hateth lying; but a wicked man is loathsome, and cometh to shame"—Prov. 13: 16. "Lying is my trade," said an auctioneer; "I live by falsehood and deception; it is my meat and drink; when I speak a lie, I speak of my own."

"A London professor lectured recently on adulterations of food. He handed around coffee, which was pronounced excellent, then told the audience that they had been regaled with a mixture of bullock's blood, chicory, sheep's liver, dried, and old coffee grounds. He gave them capital porter, too, made of spirits of wine, gum-arabic, and burnt sugar."

The ingenuity of the age is taxed to its utmost capacity to invent ways and means to cheat people without being detected till after the purchase of the spurious articles. All such should remember that they can have no part in the coming kingdom. None but honest men can be there. . . . . The Scriptures inform us that no "covetous" man "shall inherit the kingdom of God."

We have become a nation of liars. Most people love to read and to hear of lies, quite as well as other people like to write and to utter them. Indeed, the one is a pretty fair gauge of the other. The market and the supply of lies are economically adjusted. The public will have lies, and the man who must get his bread and butter by writing, must have no scruples about lying. One of the most popular writers of a New York journal, said, pathetically, "I detest this coloring of the truth, this eternal exaggeration of lying; but the people will have it, and I must furnish it or starve." Another popular writer, on recovering from a dangerous illness, told his physician that he should not be able to pay him until he had got his returns from furnishing the public another of his lucrative stories. That is, a pack of lies in the form of novels, romances, silly love-tales, to curse the rising age, pushed into public favor by religious editors, and some professed gospel ministers!

These dealers in intellectual poisons, that intoxicate the mind, corrupt the heart, pollute the soul, will sink lower than the grave! "He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption." "They have sown to the wind, and they shall reap to the whirlwind."—Hos. 8: 7. Such writers, in the pulpit or out of it, are considered smart. They wake up our imaginations, rouse our sympathies, play charmingly upon our passions, and we pay them well for it.

The public hankering for something extraordinary, startling, high-colored, and exaggerated, has crept into our churches, invaded the pews, and to some extent given laws to the pulpit. There is now a great demand for smart preachers. The question is not whether a preacher is pious, prayerful, faithful, sound in faith, and a winner of souls: one who rightly divides the word of truth, and gives to every man his portion in due season—all this is behind the times, and old fogy. Is he smart? That's the question. Does he stretch the india-rubber to its utmost tension, and hammer out the precious grain of gold so thin, that it has but one side? Can he do a splendid business on a small capital? Does he sparkle well? O then he is an angel standing in the sun. We must have him at any price. What's the use of going to the theatre when we can have what we want at church? But will he also, as occasion may require, let off good round whoppers, thumping stories, and rouse us all up? Then he is the man for us. He will fill the house, sell the pews, youthfulize the congregation, and make us a good speculation.—Sword that Cuts.

Self-denial.—Never preach self-denial with tobacco in your mouth.

HINTS TO PREACHERS.

Never fail to meet your appointments. If by uncontrollable circumstances you are compelled to fail, treat it as a serious misfortune, calling for special explanation and justification on your part. Your moral power will depend much on your faithfulness to your word. Let not bad weather, or bad roads, or slight indisposition be pleaded as an excuse for such failure.

Be always on time. If you wish the people to be punctual, set them an example. Never be a minute behind time. It is better to have a reputation for promptness than for smartness.

Don't go about among your auditors shaking hands and talking aloud, or indulging in merry congratulations. It encourages irreverence and gossipping habits in your hearers, and your example will soon fill the house with a style of gossiping and tittering entirely at war with the quiet and solemnity belonging to the house of worship. After the close of the worship is a more fitting occasion for greetings and friendly demonstrations.

When you go to the pulpit be dignified in all your movements. Do not lounge on the sofa, nor tilt a chair against the wall, nor stand with your legs crossed. Avoid clownishness and boorishnesss.

Avoid a sanctimonious drawl or whine. Be natural. Let no levity or flippancy, on one hand, and no affected sanctity of tone or manner on the other, mar the propriety and dignity of your demeanor. Be a man—let manly sincerity and earnestness possess you. Be humble. Do not project yourself before the people when in the presence of the Holy One, to preach Jesus Christ crucified, to dying sinners. There is no such insane trifling as to exhibit a self-importance or supreme self-consciousness, when the tremendous realities of eternity alone should engage us.

Avoid wordiness and tedious circumlocution. Why not say "Let us pray," rather than "Let us endeavor to call on the name of the Lord!" "Let us praise God," or "Let us sing hymn 41st," rather than—"We will make use of a hymn, of the common measure, which you will find in the forty-first number." It is better to say, "There will be preaching here this evening," than to bore your tired auditors with the tedious announcement, "No preventing Providence, you may expect preaching here by your humble servant at the usual evening hour." Better to dismiss your audience with a few simple words of scriptural benediction, than to dilute and corrupt the beautiful and vigorous language of the Bible with verbose and declamatory utterances of your own, such as, "May the matchless love of God, our heavenly Father, and the saving grace of our divine Redeemer, and the sweet and comforting influence of the Holy Spirit, be, remain and abide with you all, now and to the day of eternity, world without end." Better, with Jesus, to say, "Our Father," or "Righteous Father," than to pile up needless adjectives, such as "Great, and Mighty, and ever-to-be-adored Lord God, our heavenly Father." Let thy words be few.

Be careful about sliding into the use of pet words and phrases. Do not repeat the word individual more than twenty times in a sermon, as, "I saw an individual yesterday." "The individual said to me," etc. "If any individual wishes to turn to God," etc. Individual is opposed to the whole, and is used in regard to collectives, and distinguishes one from many.

There is no need in a religious assembly to address your hearers as "Fellow citizens." It smacks too strongly of stump oratory.

Avoid slang phrases. Do not "fight it out on that line" before a religious assembly, nor tell your audience that you "can't see it," nor talk to them in the language of the prize-ring, about "coming to time."

Many good preachers, for want of judicious criticism, unconsciously contract vicious habits of speech and of action which greatly interferes with their usefulness. A hint to the wise is sufficient.—Ex.

GOING TO CHURCH.

I've a good mind to say I'll never go to church again!" said Mrs. Ball, wife of an industrious mechanic, that day, at the evening meal.

"What's up?" inquired her husband, who was not, like his wife, a member of the church.

"Oh, well, nothing that ought to be noticed, I s'pose, said she. "I dare say it's all my wrong feeling; only I worked all the week as tight as I could spring, every spare minute I had, to turn my old cloth sack, and to fix over my bonnet, and went to church feeling as if I looked spruce and a little like folks. But you ought to have seen the ladies in their winter rigs!" she continued. "I wish you could 'a seen Mrs. Holton come into church, everybody looking at her, and she was dressed so elegant. Of course I know it to be wrong to covet, and I don't covet, as I know of. She is welcome to her silks and her velvets, and her front pew, and sich, for all of me. But I know one thing," continued Mrs. Ball, warmly; "it is ridiculous for me to belong to the same church with her, and go there Sunday after Sunday just a purpose to be made ashamed of myself every Sunday of my life. Husband," she said, earnestly, "I do wish there was some church where poor folks were as good as rich folks! "I don't mind it week days; but Sundays I should like to feel that the Lord loves me as much as he does anybody—if I could!" "Better do like me," replied her husband—"not go at all. All churches are alike—they ain't meant for 'one horse folks' like us."

Mrs. Ball did not like this conclusion; but, not knowing how to overthrow it, she dropped the conversation.—Advance.

CHURCH TOILETS.

Harper's Bazaar thus denounces the display of dress so common in houses of worship:—

"The best bred people of every Christian country but our own, avoid all personal display when engaged in worship and prayer. Our churches, on the contrary, are made places for the exhibition of fine apparel, and other costly and flaunting compliances with fashion, by those who boast of superior wealth and manners. We shall leave our gewgawed devotees to reconcile humiliation in worship with vanity in dress. How far fine clothes may effect the personal piety of the devotee, we do not pretend even to conjecture; but we have a very decided opinion in regard to their influence upon the religion of others. The fact is, that our churches are so fluttering with birds of fine feathers, that no sorrow fowl will venture in. It is impossible for poverty, in rags and patches, to take its seat, if it should be so fortunate as to find a place, by the side of wealth in brocade and broadcloth.

The church being the only place on this side of the grave, designed for the rich and poor to meet together in equal humility before God, it certainly should always be kept free to all. It is so in most of the churches of Europe, where the beggar in rags and wretchedness, and the wealthiest and most eminent, whose appropriate sobriety of dress leaves them without mark of external distinction, kneel down together, equalized by a common humiliation, before the only Supreme Being. The adoption of a more simple attire for church on the part of the rich in this country would have the effect—certainly not of diminishing their own personal piety, but probably of increasing the disposition for religious observances on the part of the poor."

"Fight the good Fight of Faith."—The command is, "fight the good fight of faith." Blessed be God, though there are many warriors who enter into battle with doubts and fears as to the issue of the conflict, it is not so among the soldiers of the Lord Jesus Christ. Victory is declared before the combat commences, and as sure as they begin to fight, faith tells them they shall be made "more than conquerors."

PRACTISING DECEPTION.

There is a large class of deceptions which are pleaded and extenuated, such as telling lies to children and telling lies to sick persons. I set myself against the whole of this miserable tribe of wickedness. A lie told to a child is a monstrous thing. I abhor it. And yet lies are told to the children as thick as cloves are stuck in hams when dressed for a public occasion. Your child is sick, and you bring him a potation and say, 'It is good, my dear, it is good," when it is as bitter as gall. You are not only a liar, but a fool. The child learns, after a little time, not only that the medicine is not good, but that the truth is not to be regarded. You not only give the child an odious dose of medicine, but you give him a more odious dose of morals. You innoculate him with the spirit of lying from the beginning.

I think we cannot be too careful to speak the truth, and above all to the children. As to the sick I do not believe it necessary to tell them all the truth. But a doctor is not justified in lying to his patients. It is easy for him to say to the person whose case he has undertaken: 'You must have confidence in me.' But, if he says anything, let him say the truth. It may excite the patient or it may not; but if the excitability is a reason for not telling the truth, then it is a reason for silence—it is not a reason for deception. I think that such persons are oftentimes injured by being deceived. I think there is a great deal of cruelty practised toward sick people in this way. And I think it is a shame to let sick people go blindfolded down to death, and drop off without a single word, for fear that they will be injured if the truth is told them. I think if a person is going to die, he has a right to know it. I do not, therefore, believe in telling lies to sick folks.—Beecher.

COME UNTO ME.

Come unto me, the Savior said,
And I will give you rest;
I'll soothe your sorrows, calm your fears,
And still your troubled breast.

I'll keep you from the tempter's snare,
I'll give to you my grace;
I'll smoothe your way through every care,
And be your hiding place.

And when your work on earth is done,
If you have faithful been,
I'll open wide those pearly gates,
And bid you enter in.

JEWELRY, ETC., ETC.

Much is said about wearing jewelry, rag-roses, false hair, etc., etc. None of these superfluous ornaments do any good to the wearer, or anybody else. Dress up in all the finery you can rake and scrape, and you will see some poor street girl that out-dresses you. Put on all the chignon you can carry, and you cannot outdo other poor mortals. What do you use these things for? Is your health any better for it? Does any sensible person like the looks of you, all fixed up in your Parisian fashion, any better for your "agonizing" appearance? Do you wish to create envy in the minds of others as weak, or weaker than yourselves? Do you sleep any sounder at night for all this "fuss and feathers"? You need not say you are not proud, and that you do not feel any different in having such an abominable lot of trash. Just leave it off, and dress decently, as common sense dictates, and you will feel differently, and much better, I think. Try it. Put on all the gold and jewelry you can scare up, and you cannot begin with a half civilized lady, as the following will show:—

"India Ladies—How they are Dressed.—The ornaments worn by the native women of India are something wonderful. Commencing at the toes and going up, or commencing at the head and coming down, it is a maze of mystery. The hair is filled with all kinds of silver arrows and gold darts, and bound with bands of gems and precious stones. The ears are pierced for not only one set of earrings, but for several, the usual custom being seven holes in the right ear, and six in the left, which, in a full dressed belle, are filled with rings. The nose is usually pierced in the left side, and a ring with pendant jewels hangs around the mouth, dangling upon the chin. The neck is heavily laden with necklaces of metal, precious stones, corals, or pearls. The bracelets on the arms are of silver or gold, according to the means of the wearer, some of the fair sex wearing as many as twenty-five or thirty bracelets on either arm. The fingers are covered with rings in the same profusion, with the addition of a seal ring on each thumb, which is generally the finest and most ornamental. The anklets of the higher classes are of solid gold, set with precious stones, and are extremely beautiful. Little bells are attached, so that in walking or dancing time is kept to the motion. The toes are frequently covered with rings, the seal being worn on top as upon the outside of the thumb. An India belle in full costume may wear several pounds of jewelry and not be overdressed."

Just give this matter a few thoughts fairly, and without prejudice, and see if you cannot decide it to be well to abandon such useless and vain luxuries.

OUR FRIEND.

When our hearts are overwhelmed with anguish, and the dark flood of despair seems about to engulph us; when those who once were our friends have forsaken us, and this beautiful world seems like a barren desert, with not one bright green spot; when there is no friend to speak words of kindness and pity, then solitude has its charms. And though there is no earthly friend to speak words of comfort, we may raise our eyes toward heaven, and with holy joy exclaim, "Our Father!" "my Father!" "my Friend!" And from the everlasting throne of God comes the response—"My child!" And methinks a messenger leaves the court of heaven's King and wings its flight to earth, and approaching the friendless one, pours into his ear words of love and hope; then quickly speeding away up through the blue vaulted sky, and passing through the emerald gates, approaches the throne of Him who is "alive forevermore," and announces to the assembled angels that one more of earth's sorrowing ones has sought and found a friend in Jesus.

Having Patience.—"I remember," says the celebrated Wesley, "hearing my father say to my mother,—

'How could you have the patience to tell that blockhead the same thing twenty times over?'

'Why,' said she, 'if I had told him but nineteen times, I should have lost all my labor.'"

HOW TO BE A GENTLEMAN.

"You see I am a gentleman," said Will Thompson. "I will not take an insult." And the little fellow strutted up and down in a rage. He had been throwing stones at Peter Jones, and he thought that his anger proved him to be a gentleman.

"If you want to be a gentleman, I think you would be a gentle boy first," said his teacher. "Gentlemen do not throw stones at their neighbors. Peter Jones did not throw stones at you, and I think he is much more likely to prove a gentleman."

"But he's got patches on his knees," said Will.

"Bad pantaloons don't keep a boy from being a gentleman," said the teacher, "but a bad temper does. Now, William, if you want to be a gentleman, you must be a gentle boy."

A little further on, the teacher met little Peter Jones. Some stones had hit him, and he was hurt by them.

"Well, Peter, what's the matter between you and Will this morning?" asked the teacher.

"I was throwing a ball at one of the boys in play, sir, and missed him and hit Will Thompson's dog."

"Why did you not throw back?"

"Because, sir, my mother says that to be a gentleman I must be a gentle boy, and I thought it was best to keep out of his way till he cooled off a little."

The teacher walked on, after praising Peter's conduct, but kept the boys in his mind; and he lived to see Will Thompson a rowdy, and Peter Jones a gentleman, loved and respected by all.

Remember, a gentle boy makes a gentleman.

LEANING ON JESUS.

A little girl lay near her death. She had been brought low by a sad and painful disease. Not long before, her step had been as light and her heart as joyous and gay as any of her companions, but now her body was racked with pain, the icy hand of death had touched her, and she was about to go into eternity.

"Does my little one feel sad at the thought of death?" asked her papa, as he watched the look of pain on her face.

"No, dear papa," said she, smiling, "my hand is all the while in the hand of Jesus, and he will not let it go."

"Are you afraid, dear child? asked her attending clergyman, at another time.

"No, I cannot fear while Jesus supports me," she replied quickly.

"But are you not weary of bearing pain?"

She said, "I am leaning on Jesus, and don't mind the pain."

And so this one of Christ's lambs fell asleep, leaning on the Good Shepherd who "gathers the lambs in his arms."

We, too, must all die. Shall we be found leaning on Jesus, so that we shall not mind the pain or fear of death?

A LIE STICKS.

A little boy, to sell his paper, told a lie. The matter came up in the Sabbath-school.

"Would you tell a lie for three cents?" asked a teacher of one of her boys.

"No ma'am," answered Dick, very decidedly.

"For ten cents?"

"No ma'am."

"For a dollar?"

"No ma'am."

"For a thousand dollars?"

Dick was staggered. A thousand dollars looked big. Oh, would it not buy lots of things? While he was thinking another boy cries out, "No ma'am" behind him.

"Why not?" asked the teacher.

"Because when the thousand dollars are gone, and the things you have got with them are gone too, the lie is there all the same," answered the boy. Ah, yes! That is so. A lie sticks. Everything else may go, but that will stay, and you will have to carry it round with you whether you will or not; a hard and heavy load.

REGRETS FOR A LOST LIFE.

A young man was converted during an illness which proved fatal, though this was not apprehended when he gave his heart to Christ. When his physician announced an unfavorable change in his condition, he expressed entire resignation, and requested his friends to sing a hymn expressive of that feeling.

An hour or two after, in the silence of the room, he was heard to say, "Lost, lost, lost!" This surprised the mother, and caused the immediate inquiry, "My son, is your faith in Christ feeble?"

"No, mother; but oh, my lost lifetime! I am twenty-four; and, until a few weeks ago, nothing has been done for Christ, and everything for myself and my pleasures. Oh, that I could live to show my sincerity, and to redeem my lost, lost, lost life."

HINTS ON TABLE MANNERS.

Young friends, never keep folks waiting; be prompt to get your seat quietly before the blessing is pronounced.

"In silence take your seat,
And give thanks to God before you eat."

Come with clean hands, clean faces, combed heads, and thankful hearts.

Sit still; be quiet; wait patiently till others are helped.

Never stretch your arm across the table for food; this is impolite. When you wish for an article, ask for it politely.

Never find fault with your food; be thankful for the simplest, plainest food.

Eat such things as are placed before you, asking no questions, making no wry faces.

Some little folks render themselves ridiculous by making remarks while older persons are talking.

If need be, help others to any dish or article that stands nearest you.

Eat slowly; masticate well your food.

Be careful that you spill nothing. A beautiful white tablecloth looks badly, soiled with liquids or things from your plate.

"The tablecloth you must not spoil,
Nor with your food your fingers soil."

Never leave the table without permission. Some little boys and girls eat hastily, jump and run.

Keep your seats till all arise from the table.

Children truly polite at the table, are almost sure to be polite everywhere. D. F. M.

HARD TO BE GOOD.

"Henry," said I to one of my most weary scholars, "you have been a very good boy; I hope you will do as well all the time."

"I'll try, teacher," said Harry, with an audible sigh; "I'll try, but it's awful hard work to be good."

"Ah, Harry," I thought, as he turned away, "you are not the first one who has found this out. To be good is up-hill work for all, and the hill is so high and so steep that none can climb alone. If you try ever so hard, you will fail."

"Who will help me?" says one. "Who can help me better than myself? Why not depend upon myself in this as in other things?"

Because you cannot do this alone. Because there is one who will help you to be good, who longs to help you if you will but ask him. Jesus your Savior, is his name. He says, "Without me you can do nothing." It is hard work without him, but go to him, and you will find his yoke easy and his burden light. It will not then be so "hard work to be good."

LUCK AND LABOR.

Two boys left last week their country home to seek their fortunes in the city.

"I shall see what luck will do for me," said one.

"I will see what labor can do for me," cried the other.

Which is better to depend upon, luck or labor? Let us see.

Luck is always waiting for something to turn up.

Labor will turn up something.

Luck lies abed wishing.

Labor jumps up at six o'clock, and with busy pen or ringing hammer, lays the foundation of a competence.

Luck whines; labor whistles.

Luck relies on chances, labor on character.

Luck slides down to indolence.

Labor strides upward to independence.

Which is likely to do most for you, boys?

LITTLE HEARTS AND VOICES.

Little hearts, O Lord, may love thee,
Little minds may learn thy ways;
Little hands and feet may serve thee,
Little voices sing thy praise.
Holy Jesus,
Come and bless us;
Bless us while this hymn we raise.

Lo! the Sabbath comes to cheer us;
Lo! their gifts our teachers bring;
Great Redeemer, be thou near us,
Make us grateful while we sing.
Loving Jesus,
Come and bless us;
Guard our weakness 'neath thy wing.

Young Christian.

NOT FOR MYSELF ALONE.

A young New Zealand girl was once taken to England and educated, and became a true christian. When she thought to return home, her companion undertook to dissuade her.

"Why go back to New Zealand?" said she. "You have been accustomed to England. You love its green fields and its shady lanes. The climate suits you. You might be shipwrecked on your return. You might be murdered and eaten by your countrymen. Every body will have forgotten you."

"What," she replied, "do you think I have received the gospel for myself alone? Do you think I can be content, now that I have obtained pardon, peace and eternal life, without going back to tell my father and mother how they may secure the same. I would go, even if I had to swim all the way."

GOD COUNTS.

A brother and sister were playing in the dining-room, when their mother placed a basket of cakes on the table and went out.

"How nice they look!" said the boy, reaching to take one. His sister earnestly objected, and even drew back his hand, repeating that it was against their mother's direction.

"She did not count," said he.

"But perhaps God did," answered the sister.

So he withdrew from temptation, and, sitting down, seemed to meditate.

"You are right," replied he, looking at her with a cheerful, yet serious air; "God does count, for the Bible says the hairs of our heads are all numbered."

A Little Fellow, on being asked what he thought fire-flies were made for, answered: "I think God made them for candles to light the little frogs to bed; because the poor little frogs wouldn't want to go to bed in the dark, would they? And God is good to all the animals."

WAITING.

Long years we have been waiting,
Since first we heard the cry,
"Behold, Messiah cometh, Redemption draweth nigh."
Long years of pain and trial,
Long years of hope deferred,
But still, though faint and weary,
We've trusted in his word.

We've watched the signs that tell us
The Lord will soon appear,
Plainly as budding fig trees
Foretell the summer near;
We've seen the scoffer walking
In unbelief and pride,
And heard from lips unholy,
The word of God denied.

Now wrong and evil triumph,
And make their haughty boast,
While right and truth and justice,
Are trampled in the dust.
We've reached the days of peril,
By holy ones foretold,
When men have turned to fables,
And faith and love grow cold.

Long years we have been waiting,
And still we wait in hope,
While earth is wrapped in darkness,
And men in blindness grope;
Still shines the word prophetic,
A light upon our way,
To warn us of its dangers,
And guide us to the day.

Long years we have been waiting,
And we will wait until
Messiah reigns in glory,
Enthroned on Zion's hill;
We'll watch the signs around us,
With truth our hearts we'll gird,
And while we walk in peril,
We'll trust his holy word.

THE LAST CONFLICT APPROACHING.

"Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain; let all the inhabitants of the land tremble; for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand.... The earth shall quake before them; the heavens shall tremble; the sun and the moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining; and the Lord shall utter his voice before his army; for his camp is very great; for he is strong that executeth his word; for the day of the Lord is great and very terrible; and who can abide it?.... Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles; prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up; beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning hooks into spears; let the weak say, I am strong. Assemble yourselves, and come, all ye heathen, and gather yourselves together round about; thither cause thy mighty ones to come down, O Lord. Let the heathen be wakened, and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat; for there will I sit to judge all the heathen round about. Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe; come, get you down; for the press is full, the fats overflow; for their wickedness is great. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision; for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision. The sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining. The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake; but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel." Joel 2: 1, 10, 11; 3: 9, 11–17.

"And after these things I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Allelia; salvation, and glory, and honor, and power, unto the Lord our God; for true and righteous are his judgments; for he hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand. And again they said, Alleluia. And her smoke rose up for ever and ever. And the four and twenty elders and the four beasts fell down and worshiped God that sat on the throne, saying, Amen; Alleluia. And a voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great. And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia; for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints. And he saith unto me, Write, Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, These are the true sayings of God." Rev. 19: 1–10.

From the foregoing Scripture testimony, it will be seen that in connection with the great day of the Lord, the nations of the earth will be in great commotion with anger and rage; in this condition they will be given to the sword and slaughter. Preceding the slaughter will be witnessed the downfall of mystic Babylon and the false prophet; but when this takes place the whole church will be above (having previously been resurrected and translated), engaged in the song of victory and triumph, acquiescing and rejoicing in the downfall of the great "harlot," and the prospective marriage of the Lamb. This takes place at the inauguration of Christ our King, recorded in Rev. 19: 1–10.

We stand on the threshold of this glorious scene, surpassing in grandeur and sublimity any thing ever witnessed by mortals. This announcement should thrill the hearts of the expectants of Jesus' coming with ecstatic joy as they see the omens of coming glory thickening in every direction.

We have certainly arrived at a period of unprecedented interest and importance to the waiting church of God. Prophetic chronology can be extended but to a very brief period in the future with any consistency of argument; while the signs foretold—morally, politically, and physically—are everywhere apparent to the most superficial observer.

The 2300 days of Daniel 8: 14, commencing B. C. 426, in the twelfth year of Ahasuerus king of Persia (when the king signed the decree for the destruction of the whole Jewish nation, at the instigation of Haman, his prime minister in the court of Persia, he being an Amalekite, a bitter enemy of the Jews; this decree God so overruled that the purpose of Haman was frustrated, and the transgression of Dan. 9: 24 restrained from accomplishiug its purpose on the Jewish nation, as God had decreed their continuance 490 years from that epoch, to give his church a clue to reckon the 2300 days), will end in A. D. 1875. The 490 years ended in A. D. 65, when the Jewish nation was given up of God for destruction by the Roman armies. 490 from 2300 leaves 1810, which, added to 65, carries us to A. D. 1875, when the sanctuary will be cleansed.

It is evident from various portions of Scripture that the Lord will come previous to the cleansing of the sanctuary. His first work will be to raise the righteous dead, and change the living saints to immortality, separating the nations "as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17; Matt. 25: 32. This is in harmony with what the Holy Spirit says by the prophet (Isa. 26: 19–21),—"Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead. Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For behold the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity; the earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain."

From the above Scripture, it will be seen that there is to be a time of trouble on the nations after Christ appears, and his people are taken away from the earth; as the nations are to be gathered to the "valley of Jehoshaphat," which will comprise the "multitudes in the valley of decision." See Joel, third chapter. "Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe." Also in Rev. 14: 14–20,—"And I looked, and behold, a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle. And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle, and reap; for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe. And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped. And another angel came out from the altar, which had power over fire, and cried with a loud cry to him that had the sharp sickle, saying, Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe. And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great wine press of the wrath of God. And the wine press was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the wine press, even unto the horse bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs."

As this work of destruction in reaping and cleansing the earth is by the Son of man, and takes place after his coming (the chief agency in the destruction of the wicked being the sword and fire, see Jer. 25, Ezek. 38: 21, 22), it will necessarily require some considerable time to accomplish this work of cleansing the sanctuary. As the 2300 years reach to the last end of the indignation (see Dan. 8: 19), and as this cannot be reached till the wicked are destroyed off the earth, it follows as an absolute necessity that Christ must come some considerable time before the cleansing of the sanctuary of Dan. 8: 14.

It is susceptible of the clearest demonstration that the 2300 years cannot be terminated previous to A. D. 1875; and as we have proved that the Lord will come previous to that time, have we any data that is reliable to show when he will come? We answer, we think we have.

From a careful reading of Daniel 12: 11, 12, we think it will appear evident (1.) that the period of time to elapse, including the taking away of the "daily" abomination, and the setting up of the abomination that maketh desolate, is 1290 years. The conversion of the ten kings of western Rome to Christianity took place as soon as A. D. 508. This caused the persecution of the church by pagan Rome to cease; and the transition period to the setting up the abomination that maketh desolate, was thirty years, which took place in A. D. 538, by the overthrow of the Ostrogoths in Rome and Italy. We think the 1290 years are to be dated at A. D. 508, when the "daily" was taken away, and ended in 1798, by taking away the dominion of popery, and modifying its character by the French Emperor.

2. As the taking away of the "daily" dates the 1290 years, the setting up of the abomination that maketh desolate dates the 1335 years. The last event mentioned by the angel to Daniel, in verse eleven, is the setting up of the papal abomination; then he says, verse 12, "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days"; i. e., 1335 years from the last mentioned event in verse eleven. This will carry us from 538 to A. D. 1873, as the time for Daniel to stand in his lot, at the end of the days. We think this is the simple and natural construction of the language, in connection with historical facts and dates.

The language in Daniel 12: 11, requires us to date the 1290 years from the taking away of the power denominated the "daily." The fact that the religion of the Roman empire, previous to the conversion of the ten kings to Christianity, was pagan, it follows that the term "daily" means the pagan abomination. And we think Bro. Miller was right in his application of the 1290 days, in dating them in A. D. 508; also the 1260 years, the period of the dominion of the little horn, in 538. If, instead of dating the 1335 days in A. D. 508, he had dated them in 538, we think the church would have met with no disappointment.

In view of this evidence, and the apparent corroboration of this position by the signs of the times, especially in this sudden outburst of war and conflict by two of the most powerful nations of Europe, and the withdrawal of the French troops from Rome, just after the little horn had spoken its last "great words" (see Dan. 7: 11), have we not the best of reasons to lift up our heads, knowing our redemption draweth nigh, and that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand?

Again, we think the developments of the past few weeks show most conclusively that Louis Napoleon is not the "antichrist," nor the destined monarch of the world; but that he, with all the present rulers, will soon be overthrown, and our Christ will have the dominion of this earth, and that very speedily.

We also expect the present conflict to continue till the mighty colossal power of the north shall move down upon Constantinople, and drive the Turks out of Europe into the holy land, to fulfill the closing verses of the eleventh chapter of Daniel, when "Michael shall stand up." "And there shall be a time of trouble [on the world] such as never was since there was a nation.... And at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book."

Glory to God! the prospect is bright to the weary-worn pilgrim. We shall soon see the King in his beauty, and be made like him, and enjoy his presence, beholding his glory throughout eternal ages. Amen. Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

THE KINGDOM A GLORIOUS GIFT.

"Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."—LUKE 12: 32.

These endearing words were addressed to the disciples of our Lord by himself. It will apply also to the children of God in all parts of the world. "Fear not." God is your friend. He will care for you. "Consider the ravens;... God feedeth them. How much more are ye better than the fowls." The disciples of Jesus love God, and love each other, and God loves them; hence they have no reason to fear. "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear, because fear hath torment.' "He that feareth, is not made perfect in love." 1 John 4: 18. "God is love; and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him. Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment; because as he is, so are we in this world." 1 John 4: 16, 17. "The wicked flee when no man pursueth; but the righteous are bold as a lion." Prov. 28: 1. Fear not to trust your heavenly Father under all circumstances. He "knows what ye have need of before ye ask him." He loves you to the end. "His rod and his staff will comfort you."

LITTLE FLOCK.

The flock of Christ is comparatively small, "For wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat. Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Matt. 7: 13, 14. When the world was condemned with an overthrow, but few were saved,—a little flock. So it was with the cities of the plain, and with Jerusalem. But Father is careful to save the righteous, though few, in a little flock.

"It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." God has an affectionate regard for all his creatures. "The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." 2 Pet. 3: 9. But God cannot look upon sin with the least degree of allowance. He has promised that none but the pure in heart shall see God; none but the meek shall inherit the earth. "And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God.... And there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." Rev. 21: 2, 3, 27.

If God should admit unholy people into the holy city, it would not make them holy, but they would continue in sin, destroying the happiness of God's dear children, who would be sadly disappointed, and God's word would be broken. It would be a very unhappy state for the children of God to have sin marring their peace and happiness eternally. I think no one would be willing to have it so. It is necessary that God should be very strict with sin and sinners. He is desirous that all should come to repentance that they may be saved, and have a right to the tree of life. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3: 16. "God commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Rom. 5: 8. O sinner! if you could but realize the power of the love that God and the holy angels have for you, the care and anxiety they manifest for your present, future and eternal welfare, I think you would come to Jesus at once, and accept his offer of salvation.

"I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons which need no repentance." Luke 15: 7. Think of this, ye who have not given your heart to God. Ask yourself, "How can I act so careless about that which pertains to my best interest, while my dearest friends in heaven and earth are so persuasive? A hundred fold in this life, in the world to come life eternal, and a glorious and everlasting kingdom is offered as a reward or motive for our obedience to Christ. Oh, what a reward! Will it not pay for a few days, weeks, months, or years of service? Remember that you are fighting against God, and are under condemnation while out of Christ. Jesus said, "He that gathereth not with me, scattereth abroad. Flee, then, to him for refuge, and lay hold on eternal life, that you may share in the kingdom which God delights to give to his children in the age to come, which is so near at hand.

The angel of the Lord said to the prophet Daniel, "The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Dan. 7: 27. That is, serve and obey the Most High. When the people of God are crowned with glory, honor, and immortality, they will be fully prepared to receive and eternally retain the everlasting kingdom with Christ their elder brother. Paul says to Timothy, "It is a faithful saying; for if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him; if we suffer, we shall also reign with him; if we deny him, he also will deny us." (This is "grace for grace." John 1: 16.) So we have the promise that if we are dead when Jesus comes, he will quicken us to live and reign with him. "For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them; even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." John 5: 21. The angel of the Lord said to John the Revelator, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." Rev. 20: 6. John says of Christ: "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 2: 15. Yes, the glorious kingdom is to be on the earth, where the saints are to reign. If they "live and reign with Christ, and Christ reigns on the earth, they will also reign on the earth. But what saith the Scriptures? "And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the EARTH." Rev. 5: 9, 10. "Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." Matt. 5: 5.

When the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began, shall be ushered in (Acts 3: 21); oh what a glorious revolution will take place on this sin-polluted earth! A remnant of all nations will survive the great revolution, and "beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Happy effect of the reign of the Prince of peace. The laws of these United States go forth from the city of Washington; but when the saints take and possess the kingdom under the whole heaven (Isa. 2: 3, 4), "out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; "and they shall beat their swords into plowshares," etc. Zion is where New Jerusalem is to be located, in which are many mansions.

Oh, what a delightful kingdom is soon to be given to the little flock. Dear brothers and sisters, let us be faithful, that we may enter in through the gates into the city; and that Jesus, when he comes in the clouds of heaven with shining angels, may say to us, "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." Then "fear not, little flock, for it is your father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Bright rays of the dawning day are now flashing up in the east. Let us lift up our heads and rejoice. Soon, if faithful, we shall feel no more pain, nor sorrow, no want nor anxiety. No death shall break our ranks; but the flock of Christ, now scattered over the world, will soon be gathered, "and there shall be one fold and one shepherd." Then cheer up, lone ones and afflicted; hope and pray for the grand, immortal consummation of our hope.

For the World's Crisis.

JOSEPH MADE KNOWN TO HIS BRETHREN; OR, JESUS REVEALED TO THE SOUL.

When Joseph, after long years of separation from his brethren, beheld them once more, and, afflicted with trembling and fear, his heart was filled with compassion toward them. He could not forbear from weeping. But at first his behavior was rough; for he wished to bring before their minds their past sins, in order to humble them; and when he thought they were humbled enough, he hastened to show himself kind. How little they thought it was their brother whom they had ill treated and sold; and how great was their confusion as soon as he had told his name to them.

I'm Joseph your brother, he said,
And still to my heart you are dear;
You sold me, and thought I was dead,
But God, for your sakes, sent me here.

When charged with purloining the cup, they were greatly distressed and confounded, and not one of them dared look up. In tones of anguish and bitter remorse they cried,

Can Joseph, whom we would have slain,
Forgive us the evil we did?
And will he our household maintain?
O this is a brother indeed.

And thus the sinner, dragged by conscience and laden with guilt, comes to the Lord, surrounded with terror and shame, unable to utter a word. At first, he looks stern and severe; then how the heart is pierced with anguish, expecting to hear the dread sentence—Thou cursed, depart. But oh! what surprise, when he speaks in such tones of tenderness and love; the heart is then overwhelmed and confounded by grace.

Poor sinner, I know thee full well,
By thee I was sold and was slain;
But I died thy life to redeem,
And raise thee in glory to reign.

I'm Jesus, whom thou hast blasphemed,
And crucified often afresh;
But let me henceforth be esteemed,
Thy brother, thy bone, and thy flesh.

Go publish to sinners around
(That they may be willing to come),
The mercy which now you have found,
And tell them that yet there is room.

O sinner, the message obey,
No more vain excuses pretend;
But come without further delay
To Jesus, your brother and friend.

BLOODY RELIGION.

Is the religion of Jesus Christ a bloody religion? This may seem at first an idle question. But it is the natural exclamation arising from circumstances and lessons around me. For instance, even while I write, and you read, men called christians are going out by hundreds of thousands to engage in each others' mutual destruction. They literally cut each other to pieces by machinery, and know not what it is for, only they have studied the "bloody science," and now the command is given for action. And when a large slaughter is made it is deemed an occasion for bonfires and rejoicing. Should a stranger from another planet take a bird's eye view of the slaughter on the Rhine, and then see the victors running to Berlin to sing Te Deum and light their fires, would he not think he had got to the infernal regions, or to some heathen land whose God delighted in blood. But christians are on both sides, and if not attended by the ministers of their religion, they at least receive their sanction and prayers from the pulpits at home. And more than two hundred millions of people who have received more or less instruction from the teachings of Jesus Christ, are consenting to this thing. Hence the question, "Is the religion of Jesus Christ a bloody religion?"

Again the question arises with double force, when we remember that for the past ten centuries the most terrible wars of the world have been waged by christian nations.

The first missionary India sends to Christendom, Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen, teaches us a lesson of peace. He says, "I belong to a mild, peaceable race, and by nature, religion, and education, am opposed to all war. As a Hindoo, I really cannot tell how followers of the Prince of peace go to war."

One of our foreign missionaries writes:—"The heathen say that wherever christians go they whiten the earth with human bones. We don't want your bloody religion."

The soldiers of christian (?) England have planted the British flag around the world, and now the sun never sets on the queen's domains. Our own quiet and largely christian land sends abroad one of her sons to witness the work of war that he may become more perfect in the art of killing men. Is this science one of the legitimate fruits of christian thought? Is "Prince of peace" a delusive title applied to one who delights in war? Is the religion of Jesus a bloody religion?

"What," asks Carlyle, "is the net purport and upshot of war? To my own knowledge, for example, there dwell and toil in the British village of Durndrudge, usually some five hundred souls. From these there are selected thirty able bodied men. Durndrudge, at her own expense, has suckled and nursed them; she has, notwithstanding difficulty and sorrow, fed them up to manhood, and even trained them to crafts, so that one can weave, another build, another hammer, and the weakest can stand under thirty stone avoirdupois. Nevertheless, amid much weeping and swearing, they are selected; all dressed in red, and shipped away at the public charges, some two thousand miles, or say to the south of Spain, and fed there till wanted. And now to that same spot in the south of Spain are thirty French artisans from a French Durndrudge in like manner wending, till at length after infinite effort the two parties come into actual juxtaposition, and thirty stand fronting thirty, each with a gun in his hand. Straightway the word "fire!" is given, and they blow the souls out of one another; and in place of sixty brisk, useful craftsmen, the world has sixty dead carcases, which it must bury, and anew shed tears for. Had these men any quarrel? Busy as the devil is, not the smallest! They were entire strangers. How then? Their governors had fallen out, and instead of shooting one another, had the cunning to make these poor blockheads shoot.

This is a fair and true picture of war. And yet no evil which has ever cursed a fallen race has received so many apologies from christians as has the masterpiece of the evil. Surely war is surrounded by a deceitful lustre, for "the monster unveiled in all its deformity is seen steeped from head to foot in human gore, gorging his insatiable maw with the yet quivering limbs of mangled victims, and feasting his ears with the wailings of disconsolate widows and helpless orphans. Such is the idol whom the votaries of war adore." And when the blood-stained apostle of Mars passes by, beauty waves a salute, the poet sings his praise, and the historian records his fame. Now and then a christian, with a half sigh, ventures to say: "War is a great evil, but it is a necessary evil."

Necessary evil! Necessary evil!! A very easy word to speak after its pronunciation has been familiarized to us by the unthinking thousands, who use this easy apology for an evil which they have not enough faith and bravery to remove.

War is a voluntary act of man; and what man voluntarily does he may voluntarily leave undone. The early christians did not find war a necessary evil so far as they were concerned, for they did not fight. For two centuries after Christ no christian ever went to war, except with those weapons which "are not carnal." "There is no power this side of the heavens that can make a christian fight if he refuses," says Malcom.

War is not therefore a necessary evil in the sense that man must fight. It is not a necessary evil in the sense that it cannot and should not be removed.

Another circumstance which prompts my question, and impels the writing of this article, is the opinion held by ministers, of what are termed the evangelical churches, in regard to war.

An hour ago I talked with a clerical gentleman who freely expressed himself as believing war was in harmony with the gospel. He [illegible] the ruler declares war the subject must fight—Obey commands. "But," said I, "christian men have been engaged on both sides of all the late wars. They have been thus killing each other. Is this right?" He replied:—"The responsibility is with the rulers. We preach peace except when it is necessary to preach war." Thus you see I am told by an expounder of the religion of Jesus, that I may join an army and engage in slaughtering my fellow men about a difference of political opinion, or the maintainance of a given form of government. And this man is one, who from the faithfulness of his devotion and extent of his wisdom, is appointed bishop of the churches, and president of a divinity school. Do you wonder that as I walked away from his presence the question arose, "Is the religion of Jesus a bloody religion?" And when I remembered that this man is the third minister who has expressed similar sentiments to me to-day, and that he represents a very large class among the five hundred ministers with whom I have talked in some ten different states, I cannot refrain—I am impelled by a sense of duty to my race, to the church, and to God, to ask this ugly question of the church in the face of the world, Is the religion of Jesus Christ a bloody religion? QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

In the "Crisis" of August 3d, there are some questions asked by Bro. D. N. Smith, and I avail myself of the opportunity given of answering them, by writing some things on points of interest to the Adventists.

The first is concerning the sealing mentioned in Rev. 7th. I suppose it is generally admitted that "winds" in prophecy symbolizes war. This being the case, the holding of the winds that they "should not blow," evidently signifies the restraining of the war elements that they should not rage. The fact of their being powerfully restrained shows that the elements are eager for strife. The time of this restraining is somewhere in the time of the events of the sixth open seal, which seal brings time down to the judgment; and as the "winds" or wars are restrained until all the servants of God are sealed, it is evident that wars are restrained, and the war powers kept in check until the work of converting sinners is completely finished.

The sealing of the servants of God is the work of the Holy Spirit at conversion. See Eph. 1: 13, and 4: 30. The sealing or conversion is not all said to be done while wars are restrained, but near the close of the dispensation wars are to be kept in check until the dispensation closes, and all the sealing is finished.

This being true, and as we are now living in the time of the sixth seal, we must find scenes to fulfill this prophecy. And it is so. The war powers of the Roman "earth" are, and have been for many years, eager for conflict. For many years they have been preparing munitions of war to a vast extent. But they seem to have been held in check by some unseen power, and, although they have partially broken loose from the restraint at times, as in the Crimean, Austrian, and Italian wars, yet these were very short, and terminated so very suddenly and unexpectedly as to astonish the world. Just so with the "Luxembourg" affair a year or two since. Just so it will be with the Franco-Prussian war. Why? Because it is written in prophecy. No more lengthened wars in the Roman earth until the end.

The second question relates to the battle of the great day of God Almighty, and asks also when it is to be fought. Evidently it is to be fought in the great day of God Almighty. It could not be the battle of that day if it were at any other time. But that is the day of judgment! Of course it is, and the day of judgment is the time when it is to be fought. You cannot get it this side of that time, and still have it the battle of the great day of God Almighty. Besides, it is not fought between the kings of the earth by their being arrayed against each other, but they are all on one side. So says the "word." Just read Rev. 19: 19, and 17: 14, and also Joel 3: 9–14, and see if this is not so.

But who is on the other side? Christ and his army—the King of kings, with his called, chosen, and faithful ones. Behold the scene! Christ has come. His chosen are gathered into their chambers, and with Christ and the city they have come down upon Judea. Zech. 14: 4; 1 Thess. 3: 13. "In the days of these kings" he sets up his kingdom. The armies of earth, recovered from their fright, come up to "make war." Mark those words—"to make war." Headed by the "beast"—the eighth head," the Napoleonic power—they march to the onslaught, but are totally "overcome." Thus the saints join Christ in ruling the nations with a "rod of iron." Rev. 2: 27.

It is not necessary for this purpose that Napoleon should have any more power than he has now. Some think he will yet control all nations. This cannot be. Only four great dominions. No further consolidations. It is not necessary. Lord Raglan led the allied powers at the Crimea, but he did not rule all Europe. So in this case. The eighth head is leader in the battle—that's all.

As one result of this battle Satan is bound at the commencement of the "thousand years" of Rev. 20. Is this battle yet future? Then where is your "thousand years" in the past? This is a strong argument. It is not a milk-and-water gospel" argument, by any means. Much more might be said with profit, but I refrain, at least for the present.

Bro. Smith, I think your questions are answered. If any can answer them better, let them do so. FRANK BURR.

EXPLANATION.

Sometimes persons write to us that they ordered their paper discontinued when the subscription expired, but it was not, and they think we want to force the Crisis upon them, and then force them to pay. We wish to force none. Post-masters, in returning papers to be discontinued, often send them with no post-office or State marked upon them, and we cannot look our large list all over to hunt up the name; and then there may be several of the same name on our list.

When any one orders a post-master to return a paper, always see that he puts on the post-office and State.

NATIONAL CAMPMEETING.

Our great National Campmeeting at Springfield, has been a glorious success. It was the common saying of those present, "It is the best campmeeting I ever attended." We can say Amen to this statement. One important feature of the meeting was the hungering and thirsting after clean, pure hearts, in order that they might be ready for the coming of Christ. We have not seen this feeling so prominent before for twenty-six years. It looked like getting ready for "the marriage of the Lamb." The prayer and conference meetings were of special interest, and received constant and faithful attention. Nearly all the brethren and sisters were anxious to be in them, instead of spending their time in visiting and gossipping, as is sometimes the case. Unusual harmony prevailed in consequence, and a great number received very rich blessings. Backsliders were reclaimed, sinners sought and found the Lord, and twenty-six were baptized in the Conneticut river. The preaching was timely, faithful, and well calculated to build up the church.

The business of the Association was transacted very pleasantly, giving general satisfaction to all interested. The omens for the future are bright and cheering.

The first Sabbath, Aug. 21st, was a day of more than ordinary interest. Some five thousand people were present to hear the word preached by Brn. S. G. Mathewson, H. Pratt, and the writer. The best of order prevailed. The morning love-feast was a precious season. We had preaching every day during the week at 10½ A. M., 2 and 7 P. M. The following Brn. and Srs. preached during the campmeeting:—O. D. Woodruff, H. H. Dickenson, A. A. Phelps, A. Ross, B. Hitchcock, M. Batchelor, J. Couch, A. Sibley, S. S. Brewer, H. L. Hastings, L. Boutell, Wm. Sheldon, H. Munger, W. Pile, E. Owen, E. Morrill, J. G. Hook, J. Wilber, Sr. Towsley, Sr. Warren, and Sr. Hastings. Interesting meetings were held for the children, by Sr. Hastings and others.

A committee from the "Life and Advent Union" tent have made a mutual arrangement with the campmeeting committee, by which those who advocate the non-resurrection views agree not to hold any more separate meetings on the ground. We parted pleasantly, like Abraham and Lot, without speaking an unkind word, or indulging any but brotherly feelings toward each other. Their committee showed themselves to be true christian gentlemen, and worthy of our special esteem.

Mr. Pease, the City Marshall of Springfield, watched over the interests of the campmeeting like a father. We were highly favored in receiving the good wishes of the people in the city, and the surrounding country. We lay down and slept quietly at night, with no more fear or danger of disturbance than we would have at home. It seemed almost like paradise. We felt that the Lord was smiling sweetly upon us, and filling our cup with very rich blessings. At times our cup of joy ran over.

The last Sabbath, it was estimated that fifteen thousand persons were present. The love-feast in the morning, at nine o'clock, was the best one we ever had. It surpassed any meeting we have ever enjoyed since our conversion in 1842. As expressed by those who spoke, it was "good, better, best," "sweet, sweeter, sweetest," "rich, richer, richest," "high, higher, highest," till language failed to express our feelings. There were three hundred and fifty testimonies in an hour and ten minutes. Some shouted, some cried, and others danced for joy. The scene will be remembered during life by those who were present. During the day we had preaching at six different places at the same time. There were about eight thousand people in the great congregation at the stand. Good order and attention prevailed. In the evening, we had a heavenly communion season, when several hundred sat down to the sacramental table to commemorate the sufferings of our dear Savior. Thus closed the most blessed campmeeting we have ever enjoyed. We parted in strong assurance of soon meeting in the everlasting kingdom.

The Springfield Republican says: "It is by all odds the quietest, serenest, most religious campmeeting ever held by the Adventists in this vicinity, with no uproarous demonstrations; no fanatic excresences, no refugees for the riff-raff of the city. Indeed, so thoroughly is the camp policed this year, that the roughs find it too uncongenial a place for even their temporary occupation."

MISSIONARY WORK.

We wish to say a word to our readers about missionary work. We think the time has come when an earnest effort should be made to preach the gospel of the kingdom to the people in the Southern States, as it is now proclaimed in the northern, to all classes; especially to the white population. We learn from those who are well acquainted in the south, that there is a great anxiety to hear about the coming of Christ. Before the war scarcely anything was done in the south to spread light on the Lord's speedy coming. Now their doors and hearts are open; but in consequence of the late war, their means are scanty. Besides, there must be a sacrifice at first to introduce the truth in new places. This is the case at the north, and still more so in the south, in the present state of things. The south is now the best field in the world for missionary labor. More can be accomplished there, with judicious labor, in a given time, than in any other part of the world. The fields are white for the harvest. Shall the reapers receive encouragement?

We wish those who are willing to assist in this great and important work, would send in their money and pledges at once. Let us send out faithful men the coming winter to sound the alarm in the principal southern cities and villages. Who will help in this glorious work?

CHRIST IS COMING.

All things indicate that our Savior is coming soon. Is the reader ready? If not, what excuse could be given? Has there not been ample time to prepare; and if opportunities already enjoyed have not been improved, where is the evidence that any additional light would receive more attention? There is much danger that such will be found at last with no oil in their lamps when the Bridegroom cometh. It is a perilous hour for careless souls. Many are sleeping at ease, unaware of the dangers that surround them. Let those who are awake, cry aloud, and spare not. It is too late to make a compromise with this wicked world. Let all the friends of Jesus come out from it and be separate.

THE WAR IN EUROPE.

Since our last issue, the war aspect in Europe has not changed very materially. The Prussians have made some advances towards Paris, but have met with a stern resistance from the French forces. There has been some very severe fighting, and heavy losses on both sides. Both the French and Prussians have claimed victories; but on the whole, it is thought the Prussians have been the most successful. Both nations are tremendously in earnest. The French are now united in the defense of their country, and have made Paris a strongly fortified city. There is a general arming of both French and Prussians. Their all is at stake in this war. In the principal battles fought, the Prussians have had a great advantage as to numbers. Napoleon found them much better prepared for war than he expected. In Prussia every man is a soldier.

ORDINATION.

During the campmeeting we had a very pleasant ordination of three brothers: Wilbur, Samuel and Damon Nichols, of Sturbridge, Mass. When they received the light on the "blessed hope," they were all studying for the ministry in the Methodist church. They are now ready to proclaim the glad tidings of the coming kingdom. They are highly esteemed where they are known. Let them be well sustained, and receive the heartfelt support of those where they may be called to labor in the vineyard of the Lord. Take good care of the young preachers. They are easily discouraged. Stay up their hearts and hands. Do not sit as critics upon them; but surround them by prayers and sympathies. It is no light burden for a young man to leave all, and go forth to proclaim an unpopular truth, that will bring upon him the scorn and contempt of the world and a lukewarm church. Give such a warm spot in your christian affections. Let them feel your friendship, enjoy your counsel, and receive your aid "after a godly sort." Many have been asking the Lord to send more laborers into the vineyard. When he does send them, he wishes the church to take care of them.

LLOYD'S WAR MAP.—Those who wish a superior map of the war, and of Europe, will do well to send fifty cents to E. Lloyd, New York, Box 4540. Mr. Lloyd stands at the head of the map-making business. He has the same map mounted and varnished for $1.25.

THE WAR NEWS is contradictory. There was heavy fighting at Beaumont, in the department of Ardennes, Wednesday and Thursday, Aug. 30th, 31st, and Sept. 1st. A part of the time the Prussians were victorious, and then the French. The scales appear to be quite evenly balanced at present; excepting the Prussians have the advantage as to numbers. The French fight terribly; and show no signs of yielding. Great numbers have been slaughtered on both sides, and the vacancy is immediately supplied by others. There is reason to believe that a decisive blow will soon be struck, which will effectually turn the war scales; yet it may be a long time before the bloody strife shall come to a full end.

MEDICAL COLLEGE FOR WOMEN.—We see by the eighth annual announcement of the New York Medical College for Women, that the regular session of 1870–71, will commence on Tuesday, Nov. 1st., and continue twenty weeks. A short preliminary term will commence Oct. 4th, at the College, 187 Second Avenue. Those who feel an interest in this matter, can call on Mrs. C. F. Wells, the Secretary, or send for the announcement, at 389 Broadway, N. Y.

QUOTING.—If those who quote passages of Scripture in their articles for the Crisis would always turn to the texts, and quote them word for word, it would save us much labor. Please remember this request. It affords us much pleasure when we receive articles thus carefully prepared. If any words are omitted in the quotation, put in periods, thus: . . . . . to indicate the omission.

THE AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST is a superior monthly, on the subject of Agriculture, and should be in the hands of every farmer. Next January it will enter upon its 30th year. ROME.

Just now, but little is going on at Rome, but a terrible storm is gathering, that may suddenly burst upon the "city of the seven hills." The Ecumenical council is very quiet, and they know not what step to take next. Since the Pope has been declared "infallible," his authority seems to have suddenly fallen down to zero. His word has but little influence at present. His power and dominion are nearly all taken away. The Roman woman is now a "widow." The following shows the current of feeling in Italy at the present time:—

"A Herald dispatch from Rome announces that there is a general movement of Italian troops to the pontifical frontier under Gen. Cosenz. It is the belief that Victor Emanuel will be unable to control the feeling in Italy for the possession of Rome."

Great events must soon transpire. It is truly sublime to be living in these last days; so near the time when Christ will appear to raise the dead, and set up his kingdom. Those who would be ready for his coming, must keep "pure in heart."

THE WAR FORCES.

The following is from the Boston Post, Aug. 31st:—

"Late advices declare that nearly 900,000 men are operating in the triangle formed by Rethel, Rheims and Vouziers, and the meeting of such immense forces in a two or three day's battle cannot fail to result in frightful carnage. To the French every incentive to valor which can come to men fighting on their own soil, and for their homes and their government, is present; to the Prussians defeat means ruin and a crushing of their invading force between the upper and nether millstones of the French armies. The splendid gallantry of the French arms can not but be more than ever conspicuous, and whatever the result, the Prussians must suffer an irreparable loss of their trained soldiers, who cannot be replaced in a day. The French Emperor is still in command of the army, and though invited to accompany the ministry to Tours, declined, saying his place was with his troops. This decision on his part and his presence among his men must inspire them, and despite the cavils and sneers of inimical writers, his part in the active campaign will not appear contemptible when dispassionately put side by side with the royal state and the divine right proclamations which attend the march of King William."

COURTESY.

The following is worthy of careful consideration. We think there is a great lack of courtesy in many churches, which serves to keep people away from meeting. We are often grieved to see what utter neglect is manifested towards strangers. Let this matter receive due attention:—

"COURTESY TO STRANGERS IN CHURCHES.—The Christian World is acquainted with a congregation in Baltimore, one of the most aristocratic of the city, in which the members and officers seem to vie with each other in welcoming and caring for the strangers and visitors who attend service there. As a consequence the church is generally crowded, and although the seats on the floor are rented, and a great many in the galleries, yet there is always room, and often have we noticed the officers and most prominent members sitting upon the pulpit steps and upon the little cushioned space at the altar rail while their seats were vacated for strangers. The church has a reputation for cordially welcoming strangers, and from an attendance there of more than a year we were convinced of the fact that they deserve it, and the consequent remarkable success is not at all to be wondered at."

THE NEW GREEK CONCORDANCE.

The critical Greek and English Concordance, prepared by Bro. C. F. Hudson, with great care, and just published by Bro. Hastings, is a valuable work. It contains 510 pp. The following, from the preface, will give some idea of its character:—

"It differs from other concordances in various respects. It leads the English reader to the Greek original and its various readings. It leads the Greek scholar to the common English translation, as given both in the text and in the margin. It saves space by omitting extended quotations, referring inquirers to the passages themselves for further information. It furnishes the Greek alphabet, with rules of pronunciation, which may be mastered by an hour's study, and thus obviates the necessity of an imperfect representation of the Greek words in English characters. It classifies the passages where each Greek word occurs, reveals the number of ways in which is is translated in the New Testament, shows in what senses it is most frequently or more rarely used, exhibiting in their order, first the primary, and afterwards the several more remote senses of the different terms. It presents all the important various readings of the four best critical editions of the Greek Testament, confirmed by references to the Sinaitic manuscript. It combines with these peculiarities a cheapness of cost and convenience of form which bring it within the means of the student and enable him to have it always at his side."

THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

The Advent Christian Association, at its late annual meeting at Springfield, discussed the question of the continuance of the Young Pilgrim. Upon motion, the subject was referred to the Advent Christian Publication Society, which Society took the subject under consideration; and after discussion referred the whole matter to a Sub-Committee, consisting of the Editorial Committee, Business Agent, and Editor of the Pilgrim, who make the following report and appeal:—

1. That our duty to the children, in these days of abounding wickedness and error, and of corrupt and demoralizing reading, demand the continuance of The Young Pilgrim.

2. That The Young Pilgrim, like all other Sunday School papers of limited circulation, is published every year at a loss of several hundred dollars, and, until the circulation is very largely increased, cannot be published, at the present subscription prices, without loss. If, therefore, it is sustained at all, it must be, as other Sunday School papers are, by the aid of donations to make up the deficiencies. For this purpose a Young Pilgrim Fund is opened, and contributions called for.

3. That it shall be the endeavor of its Editor, and of the Society as far as in them lies, to make The Young Pilgrim all that a Second Advent Sunday School paper should be,—keeping always in view its great object: to bring the children to Jesus, instruct them in righteousness, and prepare them for the kingdom of heaven.

We therefore appeal to the friends of the children everywhere for help. Their little paper needs, first of all, your prayers, for its editor and its writers, that the Holy Spirit may guide and bless them in all they write, that every thing in it may be for God's glory and the children's good.

It needs a greater interest on the part of those who write; short, pithy articles, full of life and truth; letters, Sunday School intelligence, stories, anecdotes, and incidents of religious experience, written in a style that shall interest and impress the minds of its young readers.

It needs the hundreds of dollars now due on subscription, unjustly or thoughtlessly held back by those who are amply able to pay; and it needs generous and liberal contributions from the stewards of the Lord's money to meet the deficiencies.

It needs, also, a greater effort to increase its circulation. It ought to be a visitor in thousands of families where it is not now taken; and Sunday Schools that now take from ten to fifty, or more, ought to double the number.

Brethren and sisters, these are its needs—your prayers, your efforts, your communications and contributions. Will you give them?

Our preaching brethren, superintendents and teachers, are especially urged to take this matter into their own hands, and interest their congregations, Sunday Schools and classes, in adding to the circulation, support and value of The Young Pilgrim.

SALUTATION.

Without apology, I salute the readers of the Crisis, not as a new writer, hitherto unknown to its columns, but as an old writer, in a new capacity—as a Corresponding Editor. And though I may not be able to contribute as much to make the paper interesting as the well-known and long-tried senior Editor, I shall endeavor, by the help of the Lord, to do as much good, and as little harm as possible. I have no other pledge to make. My work must speak for itself. My aim is to please God, and benefit the church in all I do—to unite, and not distract the body. I am fallible, and liable to misjudge, but my purpose is to help, and not hinder the work of the Lord. I bespeak the co-operation of all my friends, and ardently hope that none will doom themselves to disappointment by expecting too much at my hand in point of talent, for my election to office will not augment my talent in the least. I shall be the same writer as in other days, save perhaps the addition of a little experience, and an increase of caution, enabling me, in my uncompromising warfare with error, to use the hardest arguments in the softest words.

My residence will still be Brodhead, Green Co., Wis., as I have no thought of removing to the east; but may possibly visit the New England States again, sometime during the coming season, if the Lord will. All productions for the paper will be sent to Bro. Grant, as usual. Hereafter only my initials (W. S.) will be attached to my articles in the Crisis, by which they will be distinguished from those of the Editor-in-chief. Hoping that harmony and prosperity may characterize the present relation between editors and readers, the ensuing season, and praying that we may be guided by heavenly wisdom, that the flock of God may be fed with proper food, and thus be prepared for the heavenly kingdom when it comes, I enter upon the work assigned me, feeling my inability, but trusting in the Lord. WM. SHELDON.

SCATTERING TRACTS.

The importance of this work is greatly underestimated. It is not every tract that makes a convert, nor is it every sermon that converts a soul. Often, however, the seed that we sow springs up long after we have forgotten that we sowed it, both as regards preaching and tract distribution; so we will do well to keep at work, even if we do not witness present results in every case. About nineteen years ago, I went into a new place to preach in the State of New York, and gave three sermons, which called out strong opposition, unmixed with sympathy. I left, supposing that nothing had been or could be accomplished, and for long years I thought that my labor was lost. After twelve years had rolled away, I was met by a man in the west, who attended that meeting, and joined others in opposing me at the time; but after moving west, the truth that he had heard kept troubling his mind till he came out and embraced it, with his whole family before seeing or hearing another Advent preacher; and finally one of his sons became an Advent preacher.

So with tract distribution. We cannot always tell just where, nor just how soon they will take effect. I had the pleasure of perusing a letter to-day, giving the cheering information that a single copy of a tract from my pen had recently led a Baptist minister, and fifteen of his members, to embrace the truth it contained. Perhaps a hundred copies of the same tract may have failed to take effect, the result may not yet be apparent; but even then, the great benefit of tract distribution is apparent. Sow the seed, and water it with showers of prayers, and much of it will spring up. These tracts are weakening confidence in popular errors, even where they do not lead to their present renunciation, and thus pave the way for future good. We ought to scatter them by thousands, where we now scatter only by hundreds, provided we can scatter those that are telling documents. Some write who do not understand the work, using all shot and no powder, or all powder and no shot. But tracts cannot be printed without money. Who will wake up to this consideration, and send in a little of the Lord's money? Can not $2000 be raised it two months? W. S.

OUR DANGERS.

Called, as we are, to a specific work,—the spread of Bible truth—we are exposed to dangers that we need to understand, and guard against:

1. We are liable to promulgate and defend God's precious truth in a combative spirit, and thus awaken combativeness in others before investigation, and so forestall the good we might otherwise accomplish. Better act the part of a kind teacher, than the part of a defiant pugilist.

2. From the opposition that our message receives, and will continue to receive, from every quarter, we are liable to imbibe a sour spirit. Human nature, unless continually sanctified, will resent the low vein of opposition which we often encounter. Keep human nature subdued, and proclaim God's truth in the spirit of its Divine author.

3. We are also in danger of proclaiming the truth for the sake of the mastery. Rather do it from a motive of love, to teach men "the way of the Lord more perfectly," and to perfect that which is lacking in their faith. Let us avoid combativeness, sourness, and a thirst for mastery, "speaking the truth in love" on all occasions. W. S.

THE SPREAD OF TRUTH.

Despite all the opposition which theologians aim at the truth we proclaim, it is gaining a foothold everywhere, and men of thought, not willing to longer wear the galling shackles of sectarianism, are daring to think for themselves. Over the briny deep, as well as on this continent, attention is being turned to an investigation of the theme of immortality through Christ, the only source through whom endless life can come to perishing man. It is too late in the day to frown this great truth into oblivion, or to scoff it out of existence. The most telling opposition ever brought to bear against it by its enemies, has been the let alone policy—that is, to pay no attention to it; but such inroads are being made upon their theories by this practice, that many are aroused of late to defend their favorite dogmas, to oppose the truth; but every effort of this kind tends to show the weakness of their system. Thus truth let alone will not die out, and truth opposed will spread more rapidly. W. S.

FREE MASONRY DEVELOPED.

The prospects of death and coming judgment appear to act thoroughly upon the consciences of some of the Free Masons. They cannot die without revealing the terrible principles which combine the brotherhood, and which work such evils among men as no other secret combination does or can do. The revelations made by Prof. Finney were enough to shock the hearts and chill the blood of all christian men; but "The Broken Seal," by Samuel D. Greene, makes the most startling disclosures of facts relating to the "abduction and murder of William Morgan," and of its justification by the fraternity. We think no christian, nor sincerely honest, thoughtful man can read "The Broken Seal" without feeling assured that Free Masonry is an outrage upon humanity; a system of blasphemy against God, corrupting to society, dangerous to civil institutions, a mockery of Christianity, and injurious to all who are ensnared by it. Mr. Greene cannot die in peace without enlightening his fellowmen on this subject, and warning them to escape the evils which he had been drawn into. All who are in danger of being led into masonry should read it.

RETRACTION AND CONFESSION.

As I have repeatedly stated in the State of Maine, and elsewhere, during the last year or more, that Bro. Hastings was not the author of the tract published by him, entitled "Bethlehem," I hereby wish to retract the statement, believing it to be unfounded, and therefore does him great injustice. My authority for the statement is a brother of strict integrity, sound judgment, and one less likely to be misled by prejudice than myself. But he seems unable to produce the tract which he thought he had seen as the substance of "Bethlehem," and I must therefore doubt the correctness of his impressions, and fully allow the claim of Bro. Hastings that he is the author of "Bethlehem." My charge that he was not the author of "Calvary" I find to be not strictly correct, and I thereby wish to retract that too.

I must confess, also, that the prejudice which I have indulged toward him has led me to view his policy and general course with a severity and uncharitableness unbecoming my profession; and my expression of these feelings toward him I regard as "evil speaking," if not worse than that.

I very much regret the injury which I have done Bro. Hastings, and the cause of God in this matter; and hope that in the future I may be kept through grace from this besetting sin. I desire, perhaps more than I deserve, the mercy of God and the forbearance of my friends. I. K. LOMBARD.

REPORT OF THE A. C. CONFERENCE OF CONN.

Met at Bristol, according to call. Report of preachers and delegates indicated a good degree of union and harmony prevailing, with a desire to see the work of God revive. Some places had been favored, and good been done in the name of the Lord. The preachers seemed to feel like laboring more earnestly in the cause for the salvation of sinners, and felt the need of divine aid. All matters connected with the conference as business was disposed of harmoniously, and with despatch, and the religious exercises were good from beginning to end. All felt it to be the best conference we had ever held.

The subject of a campmeeting was considered, and a committee of five brethren were appointed to take the matter into consideration, and decide whether we should have one; and if so, when and where? The committee chosen were Brn. B. Hitchcock, I. B. Potter, O. D. Woodruff, W. A. Durand, G. L. White.

The committee appointed to consider the case of Elder A. D. Flagg, reported as follows: Whereas, A. D. Flagg, a member of this conference, has proven himself unworthy of our fellowship, by his improper and immoral conduct, in matters heretofore brought to the notice of this body, as also by report from Springfield, Mass., through Bro. James Morgan, of a trial had this week before a committee of six brethren, in Springfield; therefore Resolved, That we hereby disfellowship said A. D. Flagg, and withdraw all authority from him as a Christian minister, and caution the church at large against him.

Reported accepted, and the preamble and resolution adopted, with instructions to have the same published in the Crisis. The conference closed Friday forenoon, with vote of thanks to the church at Bristol. Adjourned to the time of the annual conference in October. The tone of the meetings was excellent, and love was manifested for each other, and for the cause.

REMARKABLE DELIVERANCE.

Sr. Helginson experienced a somewhat remarkable deliverance from drowning on last Thursday morning. She had just placed her neice on board of a steamboat at the Arch Street wharf, in this city, and when re-crossing the plank from the steamboat to the wharf, the plank slipped from the wharf and precipitated her into the deep water between the wharf and the boat. She sank beneath the waters, and on coming again to the surface, her clothing enveloped her head so that she could not see, and confined one arm so that for awhile she could not use it. With the other arm she sought for some object to lay hold on, and fortunately touched a piece of timber that projected from the wharf. In seizing it at first, her hand slipped, for the wood was covered with slimy matter. She seized it the second time, and imbedded her finger nails in the soft wood. By that time she was nearly suffocated by the clothing that enveloped her head, and prayed to the Lord to disentangle her other arm. In a minute the other arm was free, and with it she was enabled to pull the clothes away from her face so that she could breathe. A large concourse of people gathered on the wharf, and after Sr. H. had been in the water twenty minutes, her head only being kept above the surface by her hold upon the timber, she was rescued by means of boat, and ropes used by the people above on the wharf.

When the plank gave way, she committed herself to the Lord, supposing that she was to end her days by drowning. While in the water she felt perfect peace and confidence in the Lord, whose angels were guarding her. The people on the wharf said that she was the coolest drowning woman that they ever saw. We praise the Lord for this deliverance of our sister from death. She has been an efficient, yet modest and unassuming laborer in the mission cause in this city for years. Her work is not yet done. We pray that this deliverance may redound to the glory of God and to the good of his cause. And may his people praise him who has delivered and who will deliver. Yours in Christ,

F. H. BURBANK.

CHARITY.

Of the three great attainments, we are told by Paul that charity is the greatest, and the most to be sought for. True charity, like consistency, is a jewel; alas! how rare it is, how little of the genuine we find. "Charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up; doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, endureth all things." Such is true charity; then let us strive, with God's help, to be more Christ-like, loving our neighbors as ourselves. Deal kindly with the erring, for we know not what circumstances, or what strong temptations may have assailed them. None of us are safe from the power of sin; and being but human, are as liable as any of our fallen mortals to fall. Then let those of us who are striving to serve God with all our might and power, so live and pray, that we may have that strength which is divine; then we shall be able to resist the adversary of souls, if we keep our armor bright; being ever vigilant, we shall not be tempted more than we can bear. We have the assurance of help, if we will but trust in Christ Jesus our Lord, taking him for our guide, keeping his commandments, and forsaking our sins.

Sinner, will you not come to that Savior who died for you? Will you not trust and acknowledge him as your leader, your all and in all? It is fearful to delay; then come now. There can be no better time. He is abundantly charitable, having been tempted in all points as we are. He is ready to forgive you, only feel your need of him. Come just as you are, and you shall receive the pearl of great price. God grant that we may be better christians, abounding in faith, living in hope of the soon return of our King, being full of charity to all, hating sin, but loving the sinner; doing all we can to lead others to the paths of righteousness; then shall we live in the new earth for ever.

O may we thus be found
Obedient to thy word;
Attentive to the trumpet's sound,
And looking for our Lord.

Obituaries.

CHANDLER. Died in North Foster, R. I., June 5th, 1870, Mary Emma Chandler, aged seventeen years.

Her disease was consumption. Wearisome days and sleepless nights were allotted her, yet she never murmured. Although deprived of nearly all religious privileges, she was ever cheerful. To a dear young friend who was with her the day before she died, and who expressed the wish that she could bear her distress, she said: "O, it will be but a little while." For her death had no terrors, the grave no gloom. She expected to sleep until Jesus comes. Her hope was in the resurrection, and our hearts are comforted by the assurance that we, if faithful, shall meet to part no more. Funeral at the Advent Chapel, in Abington, Ct. Discourse by Eld. M. R. Phetteplace. S. B. HOPKINS.

BAILEY. In Worcester, Mass., Aug. 7th, 1870, Sr. Clarissa E. Bailey, wife of Bro. Geo. Bailey, aged sixty years and eight months.

Her disease was cancer in the breast. Long and distressing was her sickness; but the "blessed hope" imparted to her divine comfort and support until the last. She was ready to meet the enemy, and rejoiced with strong faith that her Savior would soon come and give her victory over the tyrant death. She had been a Christian some thirty-five years, and a member of the Advent church in W about four years. May God bless and sustain her surviving husband in his declining years and feeble health, who must greatly miss his heretofore ever-faithful wife, who has proved to him one of the best companions ever since she was sixteen years of age, at which time they were married.

A discourse was delivered at her funeral founded on Job 14: 10, and 1 Cor. 15: 53–55. O, come, Lord Jesus! and then thy people will say, "Death is swallowed up in victory."

T. M. PREBLE.

EMERY. Died in Kennebunk, July 20th, 1870, Benjamin Emery, aged seventy-seven years and five months.

For more than half a century, our brother has been a follower of the meek and lowly Savior; and, since 1842, has been looking for his speedy return, hoping to live to witness the grand and glorious event; but it seemed the will of our heavenly Father that he should sleep awhile in earth's cold bed, and so, on the afternoon of the 20th, he he calmly fell asleep, leaving a beloved wife, children, grandchildren, and a large circle of friends, to mourn; but not without hope do they mourn; for at the return of the long-absent Savior will he awake to put on immortality. An appropriate sermon was preached on the occasion of his funeral by Eld. G. W. Burnham, from Isa. 3: 10. May the blessing of God rest on all the mourning friends. W. H. MITCHELL.

SWETT. Fell asleep in Jesus, July 26th, 1870, Solomon Swett, of Brewer, Me., aged sixty-three years, ten months and nineteen days.

This dear brother in Christ, with whom I had an intimate acquaintance for a quarter of a century, sustained the deaconship of the Advent Church in Bangor and Brewer, and was dearly beloved by the brethren, who are looking for the blessed hope. He was rich in every good word and work. The struggling church of this place feel deeply their loss, while the community will miss the worthy example of a judicious citizen; but no one so much as his much-loved companion, with whom he had lived in perfect peace and harmony for many years. That the mantle of this exemplary father may fall upon and rest with the dear fatherless children, is the fervent prayer of the writer and sympathizer.

THOMAS SMITH.

WHITMORE. Died in Auburn, Me., July 28th, 1870, Benjamin Whitmore, aged seventy-six years.

He leaves a widow and large family of children to mourn the loss of a kind and affectionate husband and father; but they mourn not without hope, for he died with the full belief of the power of Jesus to raise the dead to life at his second coming. May the day not be far distant when the enemy, death, will be destroyed; and when the sleeping saints will come forth to live on the new earth, restored to its Eden beauty, where the inhabitants will not say, I'm sick. T. J. C.

BATES. Died in West Greenfield, N. Y., July 4th, 1870, Henry Bates, in the sixty-seventh year of his age.

The deceased was carried to Castleton, Vt., for interment, where he had formerly lived.

SARAH J. BATES.

DAVIS. Died at Lee, N. H., August 15th, of typhoid fever, Joseph B. Davis.

Bro. Grant will remember, as well as very many readers of the Crisis, the younger son of Bro. Weir Davis, of Lee. The loved young man has been taken from us very suddenly, and we deeply sympathize with all the bereaved family, including the estimable widow of our young and much respected friend. A. C. C.

PULCIFER. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Candia, N. H., Aug. 1st, 1870, Sr. Emma C., wife of John Pulcifer, aged twenty-four years and four months.

Sister Pulcifer waited many years for her release from this world of suffering. She longed for the rest of the grave, till Jesus her Savior appears to give her immortality and eternal life, in his glorious kingdom. ENOCH MORRILL.

SCOVILLE. Died in Wolcottville, Ct., Aug. 15th, 1870, Sr. Maria M. Scoville, wife of John Scoville, aged sixty-three years.

She was a patient sufferer for a hundred and twenty days, and died in hope of a glorious resurrection from the dead.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

PARIS, August 27. The following official intelligence has been made public:—

On the 25th inst., at nine o'clock in the morning, Verdun was attacked by the Prussians 10,000 strong, commanded by the Crown Prince of Saxony.

After an ardent combat, which lasted three hours, during which time 300 shells were thrown into the city, the Prussians, much injured by our artillery, were repulsed. The loss is considerable. The Garde Nationale served our guns. We have five killed and twelve wounded.

The enemy fired on an ambulance train, which was struck seventeen times. Two persons belonging to it were killed. The citizens made a vigorous defence. The movement of 100 Prussians along the Aube seems to have been arrested. They are falling back on St. Diezer. Large bodies of infantry are passing through Luneville and Bayon.

PARIS, August 28. Returns and estimates which have been made and prepared with some care, although perhaps slightly exaggerated, go to show that there have been 170,000 Prussians and other German soldiers killed and wounded since the war with France was commenced.

The Constitutionnel says:—The army of the Prince Royal, reinforced by part of the army of Frederick Charles, is marching on Paris, through the valleys of the Aube and Seine. The Prussians must know how adventurous is such an attempt, and must be aware of the peril into which they are leading their main army.

MacMahon may cut off their communications and place them between two fires.

To avoid this danger the Prussians made great efforts. They three times attacked Bazaine with overwhelming forces, which the French army successfully resisted.

LONDON, August 28. On Thursday at Epernay the National Guard repulsed a Prussian force. An attack on Verdun was also repelled by the Mobile Guards. Prussian scouts are at Arcis-sur-Aube, and near Dijon.

The Opinion Nationale says battles were fought on the 23d and 24th, which resulted in the "wholesale slaughter of the Prussians.

The same paper says Steinmetz was beaten on the former date and Frederick Charles on the latter.

The Paris journals say the advance of the Crown Prince "is fatal to the Prussian campaign."

Immense preparations are made at Paris for defence. Fifteen hundred guns are in position and provisions accumulated for three months.

The Prussians attacked Epernay, but were repulsed.

Ten thousand Prussians attacked Verdun yesterday and the Guard Mobile drove them back with serious loss.

Prussia cannot afford a long campaign. France can.

LONDON, Aug. 30. [Special to the New York Herald.] A special dispatch from Berlin says that Austria is secretly arming. All the officers and soldiers now on furlough are being recalled and other warlike preparations are being made. The object of this policy is unknown.

A dispatch dated Brussels, to-day, says McMahon is about to make a desperate effort to force his way from Sedan, along the line of the Montmedy and Thionville Railroad, with the object of attacking from the north whatever Prussian forces may be gathered in the tri-angle formed by the fortress of Metz, Verdun and Toul, regardless of their numbers. McMahon hopes to have co-operation at all those places. The attempt is a bold and desperate one, as there is no escape from destruction in case of a defeat. It is believed that the Emperor and his son will await the result of this movement at Sedan, and be ready to cross at Bouillon into Belgium in the event of a defeat.

The forced marches of the Prince Royal have used up many of his men, who are foot-sore and have to be transported in carts. Thousands have been left behind.

ATHENS, Aug. 29. Two French men-of-war yesterday entered Syra with a prize loaded with coal. The Greek Government immediately demanded the French vessels to quit Greek waters.

LONDON, Aug. 30. [Special to the New York Herald.] A dispatch from Copenhagen to-day says the French iron-clads Armide and Rochambeau are anchored this morning off Frederickhaven, Jutland. An attack on the Baltic fortresses is expected immediately.

PARIS, Aug. 30. The following official news has just been promulgated by the Minister of the Interior:

The march of the Prussians on Paris seems to be arrested.

Marshal McMahon continues his movements.

There has been no serious engagement yet.

Chalons has been evacuated entirely by the Prussians. Railroad trains go freely now as far as Rheims.

The National Guard of the Seine, Marne and Aisne are organizing to offer vigorous resistance.

A Prussian vessel has just been captured and brought into Sunkerque.

Paris is now fully prepared to resist an attack. The authorities are exceedingly active. The workingmen declare that they will defend the city street by street, should it become necessary. The democratic and republican journals are as ardent as others in urging defence; political differences are forgotten in presence of the enemy. A private party who had purchased 300,000 old muskets from the Government has returned them, and they will be distributed at once.

Our special correspondent writes from Paris Sunday evening: "The Government promises that 200,000 of the National Guard shall be armed and equipped in five days. There are now not more than thirty thousand uniformed soldiers in the city and 20,000 regulars, about 20,000 of the Mobile and 100 cannon."

The Government has no real purpose to arm the people.

PARIS, Aug. 31. An official dispatch comes from McMahon, which reports close fighting on Wednesday. The Prussian advance was met and driven on the Belgian frontier to the northeast of Mezieres.

LONDON, Aug. 31.—Midnight. Paris has no reports of serious French reverses on Tuesday, as claimed by the Prussians. McMahon reports himself victorious on Wednesday.

LONDON, Sept. 1. Later accounts of the battles of Tuesday and Wednesday have been received, here, from which it appears that the Prussians attacked McMahon's army on both banks of the Meuse, assailing both wings with the greatest fierceness simultaneously.

The first battle was fought southwest of Carignan. The Prussians upon the bank met McMahon's right, marching from Vaux toward Montmedy. The Prussians driving the French to and beyond Carignan, which latter town was taken by the Prussians.

PARIS, Aug. 31. The chief municipal officers of Paris have addressed a letter to the Minister of the Interior declaring that the people are ready to encounter the enemy.

LONDON, Sept. 1. The Vienna Telegraph denies that Bazaine was ever caged at Metz.

The Independence Belge of Brussels, yesterday, says that Marshal McMahon, while on the hights of Vaux, on Tuesday, advancing to Montmedy, was attacked by the Germans, and flung back with dreadful carnage. This region of the country is now absolutely dispopulated.

The Bavarians are returning home and disbanding. Mutiny has occurred among some of the regments of the Bavarian Landwehr.

PARIS, Sept. 1. Three hundred thousand old muskets, discovered in the hands of dealers, have been seized and distributed to the forces now collected for the defence of the city.

Le Public says there was no fighting yesterday. The Government, however, has good news. McMahon's march has been undisturbed.

M. Gallairdet repeats his statements of the unity of Paris and the devotion of the people in the cause of defence and preparation for a siege.

Trochu works without noise and is organizing new armies with dispatch. At present there is a much more hopeful view of the French situation than last night's news would justify, showing evidently that the Parisians are ignorant of the true situation of affairs in the northeast.

The long marches of the Prince Royal's army were telling seriously on his strength, his route being marked by a long line of sick and exhausted soldiers. Strasbourg holds out heroically, and is reported as having been reinforced by the way of Besancon.

Capt. Von Plouski, son of the Governor of Cassel, was captured by a body of sharpshooters near Vitry, and has not been heard of since.

PARIS, Sept. 1. [Special to the Herald.] Newspapers state that on the 26th Bazaine gained a substantial victory over Prince Frederick Charles' cavalry, and that on the 30th the Prussians obtained the advantage over De Failly's corps, but yesterday McMahon gained an important victory.

London, Sept. 1. A letter from Paris of the 21st inst. has been received here, of which the following is an extract:

"The people of Paris are perfectly calm, sedate and united. This is actually the condition, morally, of the capital and there is not the least appearance of alarm or distress."

BRUSSELS, Sept. 2. A dispatch from Florenceville last night says: "On Wednesday the French were repulsed at Sedan, the Prussians keeping the advantage they had won.

On Thursday morning the French took the offensive, and pushing forward steadily, forced back the Prussians, winning the ground approaching Carignan. The battle-field is near Douzy. Great events are anticipated within the next few days."

LONDON, Sept. 2. Telegrams received this forenoon from Belgium reiterate that the French have been successful in the recent battles. Bazaine is driving the Prussians toward Sedan, whilst MacMahon gained a victory between Douzy and Bazielles.

Paris telegrams announced dispatches from the front reporting hard fighting with various results, and heavy losses on both sides, within the past week.

On Tuesday the Prussians were drawn by McMahon into an angle formed by the ramparts of Sedan and the heights upon the left bank of the Meuse, and they were very heavily punished.

NEW YORK, Sept. 2. The following private dispatch has just been received:

LONDON, Sept. 2. Dispatches have been received from Paris this morning claiming that the Prussians were repulsed in their attack on McMahon, after ten hours' hard fighting. The Prussians attacked the French from front to rear. The French captured 30 guns and a great many prisoners. The Prussians are reported to have been driven towards Belgium.

LONDON, Sept. 2. Another dispatch says that the Prussians were victorious, but it is not yet generally known.

BERLIN, Sept. 3. The following highly important dispatch has just been made public here:

BEFORE SEDAN, FRANCE, Sept. 2, 1:22 P. M.
From the King to the Queen:

A capitulation whereby the whole army at Sedan are prisoners of war, has just been concluded with Gen. Wimpfen, commanding instead of Marshal McMahon, who is wounded.

The Emperor surrendered himself to me, as he has no command, and left everything to the Regent at Paris. His residence I shall appoint after an interview with him at a rendeznous to be fixed immediateiy.

What a course events with God's guidance have taken.

PARIS, Sept. 4. The Council of Ministers have issued the following proclamation:

TO THE FRENCH PEOPLE.

A great misfortune has come upon the country. After three days of heroic struggles, sustained by the army of Marshal McMahon, against three hundred thousand of the enemy, forty thousand men have been made prisoners. Gen. De Wimpffen, who took command of the army in place of Marshal McMahon, badly wounded, has signed the capitulation. This cruel reverse will not shake our courage. Paris is to-day in a complete state of defence. The military forces of the country will be organized. In a few days, a new army will be under the walls of Paris. Another army is forming on the banks of the Loire. Your patriotism, your union, your energy will save France. The Emperor has been made prisoner in the struggle. Government, in accord with its public powers, will take all measures required by the gravity of events.

(Signed) COUNT PALIKAO.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Sept. 1. It was discovered yesterday that the safes of the Methodist Book Concern, in the Methodist building, at 805 Broadway, had been robbed of all the contents available to the thieves, property to the value of one hundred or one hundred and fifty thousand dollars having been removed. The largest single loser is one of the Secretaries of the Missionary Board, who was robbed of fifteen thousand dollars, while a number of pastors who had deposited their savings of years in the safes lost all.

The Rev. Mr. Deprew's silver service and considerable silver ware belonging to other clergymen were taken. Registered United States bonds, which would be useless to the thieves, were thrown on the floor in great profusion. The money of the Methodist Publishing Society and Book Concern was deposited in another part of the building, and remains safe. There is no clue whatever to the burglars, who, after opening and plundering the safe, closed and fastened it again, so that the safe manufacturers had to be summoned to open it. The Methodist officials are very reticent as to the affair, and the affair, and the exact loss will not be known for some time.

Passing Events.

☞ A dispatch from Rome announces that there is a general movement of Italian troops to the Pontifical frontier under General Cosenes. It is believed that Victor Emmanuel is unable to control the feeling of Italy for the possession of Rome.

☞ Quite a jute panic has prevailed in Bangor lately among the ladies, and many are the switches, chignons, etc., which have been sacrificed as a holocaust. Microscopes have been in demand, and numerous and hideous were the discoveries made, and the result has been that the articles have been almost wholly discarded as articles of wearing apparel.

☞ Mosquitoes, which until recently have been almost unknown in England, have made their appearance in some localities there of late, much to the annoyance of the inhabitants, who at first mistook their sonorous horns for music. Seaports were first infested, and the Englishmen therefore suppose that they were imported from America.

☞ The past summer, by actual meteorological observation, has been proved to be the hottest for ninety-two years.

☞ One of the granite steps of the new Boston Post Office, weighing 17 tons, and drawn by seventeen horses, was yesterday taken to its destination.

☞ In a recent test for rapidity of firing, the Chassepot rifle gave twenty rounds in one minute, forty-two seconds. The bullet of the Chassepot weighs but 380 grains.

☞ Prussia applied through Lord Granville for the consent of the French commanders to allow her wounded, to the number of 85,000 men, to be sent home through Belgium and Luxemburg, and Marshal Bazaine positively refused.

☞ Napoleon is reported to be a large holder of real estate in New York, which be bought when prices were down, in the early years of the rebellion.

England it is believed cannot arm an expeditionary force of more than 50,000.

☞ The first act of resistance against infallibility has occurred. Dr. Michaelis, a Roman Catholic priest and professor in the clerical seminary, at Braunsburg, Eastern Prussia, has, in the Augsburg Allgemine Zeitung, declared the pope a heritic and destroyer of the church in arrogating to himself this wicked authority.

— The largest Sunday-school in the world is said to be at Stockport, England, numbering five thousand scholars.

— A man who has a strong mind can bear to be insulted, can bear offences, because he is strong. The weak mind snaps and snarls at a little; the strong mind bears it like a rock, and it moveth not, though a thousand breakers dash upon it, and cast their pitiful malice in the spray upon its summit.

— Four things come not back—the broken word, the spent arrow, the past life, and the neglected opportunity.

Notice.

To the young men and women in Christ:—Thinking that more ought to be done than is being done for the good and advancement of our young people, and believing that the only way to secure that most desirable end is to be united, and work in harmony the one with the other; and knowing that united labor and the spirit of harmony can be obtained only by organized operation; therefore, we, the undersigned, would issue a call for a meeting of all young men and women, who are waiting for the "blessed hope," to be held at the Alton Bay campground, Thursday, Sept. 8th, at 9 A. M., to see what can be done in this direction. A cordial invitation is extended to all those interested to be present. Conn. Campmeeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a campmeeting in a beautiful grove, on the land of Chauncey Dunham, two and one half miles south of the R. R. Station at Plainville, Ct., commencing Monday, Sept. 12th, 1870, and continuing over the following Sabbath. Plainville is at the junction of the H. P. & F. and N. H. & N. railroads. Conveyance from the station to camp-ground not to exceed twenty-five cts. for each person. As far as practicable, reach Plainville by noon trains. We shall endeavor to provide wholesome food for all all who wish, but do not propose to invite saint or sinner to patronize Vanity Fair on ground consecrated to God. Provision will be made for those coming with horses.

Our object is to worship and glorify God, to strengthen the weak, promote brotherly love, and win sinners to Christ. To this end, we invite all who love our Lord Jesus Christ to join with us, from far and near. The deep, dark clouds of national distress, together with the muttering thunders of the final conflict, are the startling summons to meet the Bridegroom. Let us come, then, as pilgrims and strangers to prepare for the event, instead of fashionable devotees to eat and to drink. Come, brethren and sisters, consecrated to God, ready to work for him, that in the great judgment day many sheaves may be gathered as fruits of this meeting. Amen.

REDUCTION OF FARE.

The following arrangements have been effected, good from Sept. 10th to the 20th, inclusive: On the H. P. & F. R. R. campmeeting tickets at thirty per cent discount can be obtained at stations between Waterbury and Willimantic, for Plainville. No reduction of fare east of Willimantic. On the N. H. and N. R. R. regular tickets must be bought at Plainville, and free return passes will be furnished on the camp-ground. Those coming from Mass. will go to Westfield, thence direct to Plainville.

"FAINT, YET PURSUING."

Bound for the better land,
Why should we slumber,
Or in the vineyard stand,
Only to cumber?
Sands of life are running fast,
Let us be doing,
Be like heroes of the past—
"Faint, yet pursuing!"

What though we wander here,
Midst doubt and dangers?
Soon shall the shore appear,
Where these are strangers,—
Where the pilgrim's broken staff
Needs no renewing;
Wine for wormwood shall we quaff—
"Faint, yet pursuing."

For the World's Crisis.

BABYLON.

Bro. Grant:—As there are many in our day who claim that the Protestant churches are daughters of the harlot woman of Rev. 17: 5, and constitute "Babylon," who also affirm that the application of the term to Rome is of recent date and a modern invention, without authority, and pure fiction; and as it may prove salutary to all such to learn from whence the custom originated of calling Rome Babylon, you will please insert the subjoined extract from "Gibbon's History of Rome," vol. I., pp. 262, 263:—

"The ancient and popular doctrine of the millenium was intimately connected with the second coming of Christ. As the works of creation had been finished in six days, their duration in their present state, according to a tradition which was attributed to the prophet Elijah, was fixed at six thousand years. (Note by Millman. This tradition may be traced as high as the author of the Epistle of Barnabas, who wrote in the first century, and who seems to have been half Jew.) See Burnett's 'Sacred Theory,' part 3, c. 5.

By the same analogy it was inferred that this long period [6000 years] of labor and contention which was now almost elapsed (Note 2. The primitive church of Antioch computed almost 6000 years from the creation of the world to the birth of Christ. Africanus, Lactantius, and the Greek church, have reduced that number to 5500, and Eusebius has contented himself with 5200 years. These calculations were founded on the Septuagint, which was universally received during the six first centuries. The authority of the Vulgate and of the Hebrew text has determined the moderns—Protestants as well as Catholics—to prefer a period of about four thousand years), would be succeeded by a joyful Sabbath of a thousand years; and that Christ, with the triumphal band of the saints and the elect who had escaped death, or who had been miraculously revived, would reign upon the earth till the time appointed for the last and general resurrection. . . . . .

The assurance of such a millenium was carefully inculcated by a succession of fathers, from Justin Martyn and Iræneus, who conversed with the immediate disciples of the apostles, down to Lactantius, who was preceptor to the son of Constantine. Though it might not be universally received, it appears to have been the reigning sentiment of the orthodox believers; and it seems so well adapted to the desires and apprehensions of mankind, that it must have contributed in a very considerable degree to the progress of the Christian faith. But when the edifice of the church was almost completed, the temporary support was laid aside. [I think Gibbon would have come nearer the truth, if he had said, When the apostasy began, then the apostolic tradition was laid aside. G. W. S.] The doctrine of Christ's reign upon earth was [then] at first treated as a profound allegory, was considered by degrees as a doubtful and useless opinion, and was at length rejected as the absurd invention of heresy and fanaticism. A mysterious prophecy, which still forms a part of the sacred canon [the Apocalypse], but which was thought to favor the exploded sentiment, has very narrowly escaped the proscription of the church. While the happiness and glory of a temporal reign were promised to the disciples of Christ, the most dreadful calamities were denounced against an unbelieving world.

The edification of the New Jerusalem was to advance by equal steps with the destruction of the mystic Babylon; and as long as the emperor who reigned before Constantine persisted in the profession of idolatry, the epithet of Babylon was applied to the city and to the empire of Rome. A regular series was prepared of all the moral and physical evils which can afflict a flourishing nation; intestine discord, and the invasion of the fiercest barbarians from the unknown regions of the north; pestilence and famine, comets and eclipses, earthquakes and inundations.

All these were only so many preparatory and alarming signs of the great catastrophe of Rome, when the country of the Scipios and Cæsars should be consumed by a flame from heaven, and the city of the seven hills, with her palaces, her temples, and her triumphal arches, should be buried in a vast lake of fire and brimstone. It might, however, afford some consolation to Roman vanity, that the period of their empire would be that of the world itself; which, as it had once perished by the element of water, was destined to experience a second and speedy destruction from the element of fire.

In the opinion of a general conflagration, the faith of the christian very happily coincided with the tradition of the east, the philosophy of the Stoics, and the analogy of nature; and even the country which, from religious motives, had been chosen for the origin and principal scene of the conflagration, was the best adapted for that purpose by natural and physical causes; by its deep caverns, beds of sulphur, and numerous volcanoes, of which those of Etna, of Vesuvius, and of Lipari, exhibit a very imperfect representation. The calmest and most intrepid skeptic could not refuse to acknowledge that the destruction of the present system of the world by fire, was in itself extremely probable. The christian who founded his belief much less on the fallacious arguments of reason than on the authority of tradition and the interpretation of Scripture, expected it with terror and confidence as a certain and approaching event, . . . and considered every disaster that happened to the empire as an infallible symptom of an expiring world."

PLAIN PREACHING.

From many years observation and experience I am convinced that many good and true men in the ministry, of excellent conversational talents, fail to preach the gospel effectively and interestingly, because when they attempt to preach, they read, and read in a reading tone, or put on airs of the orator, speak in an artificial, declamatory and unnatural manner. This is a great mistake. Preaching the gospel, as to manner, should always be in the plainest diction possible. I am convinced we should preach to, and not for or over the hearers. Earnest men addressing their fellows to persuade them, look them directly in the face, and talk to them in concise, simple, plain, luminous language. And this is the way to preach Christ and the resurrection. In the first place let the preacher get his own heart warmed up with the theme, and his mind thoroughly filled with a scriptural, logical digest of the topic, and then he may go into his pulpit with or without his manuscript, and casting himself upon the Lord for his blessing, may hope to preach a sermon that will not be dull, or lull his hearers to sleep.

When you attempt to preach the gospel, brother, having carefully looked over the subject, and adopted a good, logical arrangement, and turned and prayed the matter over until your heart and mind are thoroughly surcharged with the subject, you may safely ignore your manuscripts, and cast to the moles and bats all artificial airs, and tones, and attempts at playing the orator, and speak in your plainest, simplest, most concise and conversational manner. If you will do this, you will find that you have suddenly become effective, interesting, and even eloquent to your people.

It is amazing that good men can ever become dull in preaching the blessed gospel; and they never would if they could only be emancipated from the miserable bondage of professional airs and tones, and tell the story of the cross in a plain, simple, natural and earnest manner. Men always become interested when they find themselves addressed by one with a full heart and a luminous mind, talking earnestly and affectionately to them. Their minds are at once put into sympathy with the speaker, and the mind of a speaker and hearer travel on together in sympathetic union to the end. But when the preacher speaks with airs and artificial tones, and does not seem to be simple hearted and earnest in his Master's work, the hearer naturally takes the place not of a learner, but of a spectator who is witnessing an exhibition, and he feels that he is there not to feel and act, but to look on the farce and criticise the performance.—Ex.

JESUS THE SAVIOR.

"Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins."—Matt. 1: 21.

"How precious is the name! brethren, sing;
How precious is the name
Of Christ our paschal Lamb,
Who bore our sin and shame on the tree."

Dear reader, I hope you are fully assured that there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." Acts 4: 12. There are many who assent to this, who still feel that they are not saved. All that has been said fails to reach their case; and, although there is a balm for every wound, and a Physician abundantly able to heal and save all that have need of healing, yet they are not saved. O how many are in this condition! Bread enough and to spare, yet they perish with hunger. Multitudes of those who have promised to serve the Lord, find themselves to-day unsaved; that is, they have no assurance of salvation. Why is this? Have you wandered away from Christ? Have you cast off fear and restrained prayer?

Whatever your condition may be, freely confess every fault, and return with full purpose of heart, "repent and do the first works," and you may find pardon, peace, and free and full salvation. What I mean by the use of the words "full salvation," in this connection, is not the full enjoyment of the bliss of saints glorified, but the full measure of the blessedness prepared for believers here. Then your joy may be full. Your assurance may be as complete as you desire. You may have a good hope of eternal life. But perhaps you know what has prevented your progress and hindered you, "that ye should not obey the truth." Why is it that "Christ is become of no effect unto you?" Have you trusted in anything else but him? In your brethren, or in your own works, or prayers? Or have you been ensnared by the enemy, and led astray by the world, the flesh and the devil? "Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord." Go, even now, at the eleventh hour, into the vineyard, and whatever is right thou shalt receive. Verily, the time is short. As Jesus stood in that great and last day of the feast and cried, saying, "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink;" so now the invitation is given, while we are standing at the portals of the great day of wrath, "Come now, for all things are ready;" "escape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain; escape to the mountain lest thou be consumed." Gen. 19: 17. "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else." Brethren, hasten to extend the invitation. "Let him that heareth, say, come." This is the time for the compelling message; "compel them to come in, that my house may be filled." "And whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely." F. H. Chamberlain.

Webster, Mass.

THE WORLD DEEP-ROOTED IN THE AFFECTIONS.

How often, when reading the history of the children of Israel, going up out of Egypt, have I condemned their longing for the flesh-pots, and other things wherewith they had been entertained in the land of their bondage, when they had Canaan before them. But now I may turn from them, and leave my complaint upon myself, since guilty of the same sin. If my hopes are fixed in eternity, why take I pleasure in the things of time? Will I by profession seek after immortality, yet practically pursue dying vanities? O, when shall the world cease to allure me, cease to find reception in my soul? When shall the beautiful field, while I behold the better country, become as a barren wilderness to me; and the fine flower garden, as the top of a rock that is neither plowed nor sown? When shall honor be to me as disagreeable as the din and confusion of great cities, and fame as the tumultuous noise of an enraged mob, when the most part know not wherefore they are come together? When shall my well-informed judgment esteem riches no better than wild brier, whose single flower a-top is attended with innumerable prickles round about below? When shall I possess unenvied solitude, and retire into mine own breast, counting it a happiness neither much to know, or to be known, in a vain, a transitory world?

Can an old man, who is half blind, and half deaf, be delighted with the harmony of sounds, the neatness and richness of attire, and the frolicsome amusements of youth? and should not the growth of grace (how sad my condition!) give a greater disrelish to the pleasures of the world, than the decays of nature? Henceforth may I use the world as not abusing either it or myself. How would it look in one sent on express from his prince, on matters of the last importance, to sit down by the first pleasant grove he came to, and forget his dispatch, till the night had wrapt him up in darkness, when he could not pursue his journey? So I am on the express of salvation, by order of the Prince of the kings of the earth, who has commanded me to run while I have the light, and work while I have the day; not to quit my pilgrim-staff, ungird my loins, or forego my traveling posture, till got within the veil; nor to let my affections sit down on anything below, lest the shadows of the everlasting evening be stretched out, and thickest darkness cover me. As men look on children, in all their gay imaginations and sportive jollity, with pity and disdain, so should I look on the grandeur of the world, which is more so, in comparison of diviner glories, of sublimer bliss.

But, when Israel came near the promised land, the pleasant inheritance, there was not one word of Egypt and all its dishes; so, as a sign that I am drawing near the better country to inherit it for eternity, let the things of this world not once be named by me, as becomes an expectant of the vast reserve of love. O happy day! when all shall be tasteless and insipid but Christ; when this struggle between my carnal desires and renewed affections, shall issue in complete victory over the creature and its enchanting charms.—From "Solitude Sweetened," by James Meikle.

"MANY MANSIONS."

Our adorable Savior left the brightness of his Father's throne in heaven, and suffered death by the cross to save fallen man, and raise him to a beautiful mansion, which he promised to prepare for him in glory. How very touching are these words, "Our Father's house." How suggestive of home, peace, safety, and happiness. He assures us that within its bright jasper walls are shining mansions, one of which awaits every faithful follower of Jesus. He gently bids us dispel our fears, and not let our hearts be troubled, for with him we shall dwell in the other life. "I go," says the Savior, "to prepare a place for you," and will come again and gather up all my precious jewels. Let us wait in joyful anticipation, for he assures us that in "my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you." O precious truth. "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens."

As we look forward and homeward, we find all prepared, all made ready for our coming to that blissful abode; and how cheering to know that a Friend will guide us, on whom we have leaned, and in whom we have trusted in this life, and through all this lonely vale of tears. What friendly greeting will burst forth from ten thousand lips, louder than the voice of many waters, and sweeter than softest music, when we meet in the mansions. How joyful will be that gathering of happy and redeemed ones, and the angelic escort to the mansions prepared for us. The welcome of our Savior will be the crowning one of all. We shall see him as he is, and hear his voice saying, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the mansions prepared for you. Here sorrows and afflictions may press heavily; the way may often look dark; but when we look to Jesus, who redeemed us, we are cheered and sustained; and with joy we look forward to yonder heavenly mansions, which soon will be made our peaceful home in paradise. O who would not struggle a few short years to inherit so rich, so beautiful a mansion in glory? Isabell Plummer.

HATING FATHER.

"If any man come to me, and hateth not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple."—Luke 14: 26.

Thinking this text might be misunderstood by some, as it was by my own little son, that I found weeping one day, and inquiring into the cause, he referred to the text above, saying, he did not know why God wanted him to hate his father, and mother, who were good. I thought I would pen a few lines, as they flowed into my mind this morning, while musing upon the love of God, until my whole being seemed to fall before him in adoration, with all my heart could I say, Let all that hath life praise him. While in this frame of feeling, the contrast presented itself to my mind between things present, and things to come; between those we call friends here, and our Father, his Son, and the holy angels in heaven; between fallen men on earth, and the redeemed of earth restored. One so far surpassing the other, that it might be expressed in the language of Paul, when speaking of the two covenants. He says, "For even that which was glorious had no glory in this respect, by the reason of the glory that excelleth."

Just as the stars give no light when the sun shines, the light being swallowed up, or overpowered in that which excelleth; so it seems to me is the love of the christians towards their kindred; not that they love them less than others do, or are required to; but they love God infinitely more, so that, comparatively speaking, it might even be called hatred. Perhaps none but those who have felt a little of the joys of the world to come, can fully understand this way of expressing it; but be that as it may, I think the time is not far in the future when faith will be lost in sight, and our love eternally satisfied.

THE AXE IN THE BUNDLE OF RODS.

The axe carried before the Roman consuls was always bound up in a bundle of rods. An old author tells us, that "the rods were tied up with knotted cords, and that when an offender was condemned to be punished, the executioner would untie the knots, one by one, and, meanwhile, the magistrate would look the culprit in the face, to observe any signs of repentance, and watch his words, to see if he could find a motive for mercy; and thus justice went to work deliberately and without passion." The axe was inclosed in rods to show that the extreme penalty was never inflicted till milder means had failed: first the rod, and the axe only as a terrible necessity.

Reader, if you are unconverted, I beg you look at the symbol and learn a lesson. The Lord is gracious and full of compassion toward you. He has waited, lo, these years, untying the knots very slowly, and seeing whether you will, by his long suffering be led to repentance. Hitherto, few and feeble have been any tokens of good in you. Beware! for mercy tarries not forever, and justice will not long delay. The rods you have already felt. Those burials of dear ones were all rods to you. That fever, that broken arm, that loss in business—all put together have been warnings to you, which you cannot despise without committing great sin.

Many have been brought to God by afflictions; but you, perhaps, have been rather hardened than otherwise. See to it, sinner, for, when the rods have had their turn, the axe must come in for its work. Its edge is sharp, and its blow is terrible. He who wields it will cut through soul and body, and none can escape from his wrath. You have found the rod to be very dreadful, but what will the axe be? Tremble; there is hope! Jesus died. Jesus lives. Trust in him who stood in the sinner's place, and you are saved. Oh, may the Holy Ghost now, while you read, lead you to Jesus and safety, for time flies like the weaver's shuttle, and the thread of life is soon snapped. "To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts."—Spurgeon.

THE LORD IS NIGH.

"The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him; to all that call upon him in truth."—Ps. 145: 18.

When the dearest ties are broken, and the fondest connections dissolved, and all the desire of our eyes is removed; what shall fill the void? what shall comfort the desolation? what shall gild the solitude? what shall soothe the aching heart, and reanimate the sinking spirit? what but those sublime truths which religion alone teaches. Many have solaced themselves in seasons of affliction by entertaining the thought that the spirit of their departed friend was still about them, though invisible to their weeping eyes. But, thank God, we have something more sustaining, and plainly taught by revelation too. Though our friends are removed, they are still in the hands of a just and merciful God. Though we are separated from them, yet we are still with our Father, who knows our situation perfectly, and is both able and willing to support us under our severest trials.

Mourner, thou art not deserted; thou art not alone: The eye of thy Father seeth thee. The hand of thy Father holdeth thee up. Look to him with ardent prayer, with filial trust, and with overcoming faith. Reader, are you afflicted? then pray. Are you mourning the death of relatives and friends? are you anxious for the welfare of those still living? is your peace wounded by pains and trials, known only to yourself? My friends, pray to God. He will either sustain you under your affliction, or remove it from you. He alone can make all things work together for good to those who love him. Let it be your daily endeavor to do the will of God. Let all the energies of your soul and body be active in the cause of holiness and truth. Be humble, watchful, full of faith, trust, hope; continuing instant in prayer. Art thou diseased and infirm? think of that salvation and strength which through Jesus thou mayest obtain of the Father. Art thou mourning? think of him who is the resurrection and the life. O, be faithful; hope unto the end. These varied and passing events will soon be closed, and the things which are eternal will burst upon our sight. I can join with John in saying: "Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus." And oh, come quickly.

"ROME AND THE CHRISTIANS."

Did the primitive christians look for the Savior's return at the fall of Rome? Read the following from Gibbon's History of Rome:

"A mysterious prophecy, which still forms a part of the sacred canon, but which was thought to favor the exploded sentiment, has very narrowly escaped the proscription of the church. Whilst the happiness and glory of a temporal reign were promised to the disciples of Christ, the most dreadful calamities were pronounced against an unbelieving world. The edification of the new Jerusalem was to advance by equal steps with the destruction of the mystic Babylon; and as long as the emperors who reigned before Constantine persisted in the profession of idolatry, the epithet of Babylon was applied to the city and to the empire of Rome. A regular series was prepared of all the moral and physical evils which can afflict a flourishing nation; intestine discord, and the invasion of the fiercest barbarians from the unknown regions of the north; pestilence and famine, comets and eclipses, earthquakes and inundations. All these were only so many preparatory and alarming signs of the catastrophe of Rome, when the country of the Scipios and Cæsars should be consumed by a flame from heaven, and the city of the seven hills, with her palaces, her temples, and her triumphal arches, should be buried in a vast lake of fire and brimstone. It might, however, afford some consolation to Roman vanity that the period of their empire would be that of the world itself; which, as it had once perished by the element of water, was destined to experience a second and a speedy destruction from the element of fire." Vol. 1, page 535–536.

"KEEP YOURSELVES IN THE LOVE OF GOD."—Jude 21.

How often is the anxiety of the devoted believer in Christ excited towards a brother or sister, whom he sees turn aside from this apostolic injunction, in eager pursuit of the honors, pleasures, and gay diversions of life, lest these should carry off their thoughts of God, obstruct the growth of grace, and overwhelm the soul. With what solicitude does the faithful pastor view every tendency among those of his charge to divide the soul from God. It was doubtless with this view that Jesus said, "As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine, no more can ye, except ye abide in me." John 15: 4. Whatever tends to separate the affections from God, should become at once matter of pious fear, lest God, in his displeasure, should leave us to be aroused by the thunders of coming wrath, or to be numbered with the lost.

But love, not founded in a knowledge of the object loved, is transient in its duration. How absurd, therefore, is the pretence to love God above all things, while we know little or nothing of him, as a being of transcendant worth and surpassing excellence. To maintain the love of God in its primitive life and vigor, it is necessary for every christian to meditate often on the glorious perfections of his nature, and the wonderful discoveries of his grace; and thus we may become acquainted with three principal sources of love to God.

First, a clear discovery of what God is in himself. Second, a lively sense of what he has done for us. Third, a well-grounded hope that he will bestow on us all the promises made to the faithful. To this end, we should become familiar with the declarations of Scripture, as the principal means by which the Holy Spirit operates in enlightening the minds of believers, purifying their affections, and so keeping them in the love of God, ever looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life.

"In perfect love we dwell in God,
And God in us; with peace and power
We walk the way our Savior trod,
In sweet communion every hour."

Stoneham, Me. W. A. Manning.

SING AWAY YOUR GRIEF.

We can sing away our cares easier than we can reason them away. Sing in the morning. The birds are the earliest to sing; the birds are more without care than anything else I know of. Sing in the evening. Singing is the last thing that robins do. When they have done their daily work, when they have flown their last flight and picked up their last morsel of food, and cleansed their bills on a napkin of a bough, then on a top twig they sing one song of praise. I know they sleep sweeter for it. They dream music; for sometimes in the night they break forth in singing, and stop suddenly after the first note, startled by their own voice. Oh! that we might sing evening and morning, and let song touch song all the way through.

As I was returning from the country the other evening, between six and seven o'clock, bearing a basket of flowers, I met a man that was apparently the tender of a mason. He looked brick and mortar all over! He had worked the entire day, and he had the appearance of a man that would not be afraid of work. He was walking on with a light step, and singing to himself as he passed down the street, though he had been working the whole day, and nearly the whole week. Were it not that my good thoughts always come too late, I should have given him a large allotment of my flowers. If he had not been out of sight when the idea occurred to me, I should have hailed him and said, "Have you worked all day?" "Of course I have," he would have said. "Are you singing?" "Of course I am." "Then take these flowers home and give them to your wife, and tell her what a blessing she has in you."

Oh! that we could put songs under our burdens. Oh! that we could extract the sense of sorrow by song. Then these things would not poison much. Sing in the house. Teach your children to sing. When griefs arise, sing them down. Lift the voice of praise against cares. Praise God by singing; that will lift you above trials of every sort. Attempt it. They sing in heaven; and among God's people upon earth, song is the appropriate language of christian feeling.—Beecher.

RICH FOR A MOMENT.

The British ship Britannia was wrecked off the coast of Brazil, and had on board a large consignment of Spanish dollars. In the hope of saving some of them, a number of barrels were brought on deck, but the vessel went to pieces so fast that the only hope for life was by taking at once to the boats.

The last boat was about to push off, when a young midshipman went back to see if any one was still on board. To his surprise, there sat a man on deck with a hatchet in his hand, with which he had broken open several of the casks, the contents of which he was now heaping up about him.

"What are you doing here?" shouted the youth. "Don't you know that the ship is fast going to pieces?"

"The ship may go," said the man; "I have lived a poor wretch all my life, and I am determined to die rich."

The officer's remonstrances were answered by another flourish of the hatchet and the man was left to his fate.

We should count such a person a madman, but he has too many imitators. Men seem determined to die rich at all hazards. Least of all risks do they count the chance of losing the soul in the struggle, at any moment whatever. And yet the only riches we can hug to our bosom with joy, in our dying hour, are the riches of grace through Jesus Christ, which we must make ours before the dark hour comes. O! how rich have many died in their garrets and huts, while kings and princes have entered on the other life more destitute than beggars. Who would not rather choose to be rich for eternity, than rich for the fleeting moment in which the ship is sinking into the dark waters?—Free Methodist.

Working.—God works through men who work. Wesley, Edwards, and all that class of men whose labors were signally owned of God, were working men. They toiled in the vineyard early and late. What might be accomplished through a band of truly holy men and women, equally laborious, self-denying and devoted, with God and truth on their side! Up, fellow-laborer in the kingdom of Jesus, and at thy work. Arouse from the dreams of self-indulgence to the realities of the conflict. The enemies of the cross are numerous, and artful, and strong. Steady, unflinching courage is demanded. Do work for eternity—work that will survive the fires of the last day.—Earnest Christian.

— When God means to punish a nation, he deprives the rulers of wisdom.

TO PREACHERS.

The following, from Francis T. Russell, contains many valuable hints to preachers. He speaks from experience:—

"To form a good voice, and to keep it in tune, so that it may have clearness, resonance and flexibility, the laws which regulate our physical well-being must scrupulously be observed. 'We can be useful no longer than we are well,' says Dr. Johnson. No man has a right to enfeeble himself in any way, and then visit the consequences upon a congregation of unfortunate hearers. The clergyman who makes himself an invalid, should be ordered to the hospital, and not be allowed to excite the sympathies of the sensitive for the 'dear man,' who makes the voice of prayer a piping whine, and the proclamation of sound and wholesome truth from the pulpit, like the wail of poor Mrs. Gummidge, with whom 'every thing went contrairy.' We submit that no man has a right to enforce in his preaching the observance of the moral laws of God, while he is himself constantly violating the laws from the same source, which regulate his physical well-being.

Exercise. A clergyman cannot well be a gymnast, but he should frequently exercise to such a degree, as to quicken his pulse, and to make him breathe hard. This will warm his blood and air his lungs well, both important to secure full and deep tones of voice. Of all forms of exercise for the voice, nothing is so good as horseback riding, and next to this walking briskly, and for good distances. No severe exercise should be undertaken without proper direction and study of the matter, adapting the exertion in every case to the strength and previous habits of each individual.

Diet. The public speaker, to keep his voice in order, must scrupulously avoid eating anything indigestible. The poor sermon is as often traceable to the stomach as to the head. The mucous membrane lines the passages all the way up from the stomach to the lips, and if its functions are deranged in one part, the nerves will telegraph it all along the line, and an obstinate refusal to work is the result. Half the offensive hawking and spitting of public speakers proceed from the stomach instead of the throat. Guard your diet if you would keep your voice clear and sonorous.

Rest. Nature does require her times of preservation. The nerves as well as the muscles need tranquil rest; without it there can be none of the sweeter and evenly sustained uses of the voice. A good night's rest is often the best preparation for a full day's work; and, just before speaking, a few minutes of entire rest of body and mind will be sensibly felt, in the ease and effect of delivery. We have no good words to say to those midnight revelers who sit up all Saturday night writing a sermon, and then, with weakened energies and haggard faces, impose their nervousness upon listeners, who are well-nigh compelled to make up the sleep which the preacher lost. Or, it may be that such violation of the laws of nature works for a few hours as a stimulus, but the reaction comes, and headache and lame backs (the dorsal muscles give out) waste the hours of a 'blue Monday.' Take your rest, is another law for securing a good use of a good voice.

Keep your study well ventilated. If the blood becomes poisoned by a vitiated atmosphere, brain and voice alike refuse to do duty. Keep the study properly heated. The chill of cold feet will affect the voice unfavorably, while excessive heat in the room will render respiration difficult, and the voice aspirated. Postures in study, even so slight a matter as the proper form of the back of a chair, will have something to do with strengthening or weakening some of the muscles used in speaking, especially in that very centre of clerical weakness, the small of the back. 'Chop your chair to pieces and burn it up,' (it was a chair with a scooped back,) 'and I will pay the bill for a new one,' was the peremptory order which the writer received from a professional friend, one day. The order was executed to the great relief of the spine, although the ten years' indulgence in an easy-chair, left a weakness which all the straight-backed chairs in the country can never cure. The muscles must do their own work, and must be trained to support the spine, then the frame can be held erect, during the standing and kneeling postures of Sunday, without fatigue. Moreover, the habit of standing at study, for at least one hour daily, would cure half the weariness experienced by clerical speakers. We loll and lounge in our studies all the week, we lean against the walls or the desk, we sit with our feet at an angle which prevents the possibility that the brains should run into them,—and then on Sunday, stand or kneel all day, and wonder we are so tired on Monday.

Keep the feet dry. The slightest dampness tells injuriously upon the voice—an extra pair of shoes and stockings stowed away in the vestry-room may be better than any other store against a rainy day. While out of doors, in wet weather, the public speaker should have over-shoes.

Keep the feet warm. A newspaper or a lap-blanket thrown over the feet, in the study, in cold weather, helps to keep the feet warm and the brain cool. We have but to mark the prolific cause of consumption to see what must be the effect upon the voice of wearing thin soles.

Control, if possible, the temperature and ventilation of the church, or building, in which the service is held. This is a difficult matter, as sextons are not, in most cases, properly trained for their work. But the Rector had better share his salary with the sexton, if need be, than by neglect, to impair his usefulness or shorten his life. Vitiated air is the source of great discomfort to both speaker and hearer, and the ground of half the grumbling about the long sermon and the stupid listening. Moreover, speaking in bad air destroys the effective use of the organs of voice. 'What shall I do,' said a brother clergyman to me one day, 'I am in despair about my throat, it is sore most of the time, and I cannot keep my voice"? Fortunately I could tell him, for I had officiated in his chapel the Sunday before, and had experienced the same trouble. 'Establish ventilation, and tip that non-gas consuming stove of yours into the street, or, better still, build your new chapel, and you will have no further trouble.' The last suggestion was acted upon, and the alarming throat disorder disappeared. No human throat is tough enough to be used in an atmosphere impregnated with coal-gas, without injury.

Do not speak in a draught. Cold and a broken voice will be almost sure to follow. The speaker can, with much greater safety, have the air blow upon his face or chest than upon the back of the neck; the chief danger is there. The ventilation should be so managed that the voice is not swept out of the window or up through the roof when it should resound throughout the whole building. The writer seized the occasion of Jenny Lind's singing in Castle Garden,—an immense building, with the windows freely opened,—to test the effect upon the voice. In going to different parts of the large building, in certain draughts of the ventilation, even the sweet voice of the world-renowned singer was rendered disagreeable to the ear, and discordant with the instruments of the orchestra, while in other places the melody was entrancing. A public performer was once heard to complain that he could not touch the feelings of his audience, despite every effort which had been successful elsewhere, but failed him there. He afterwards discovered the cause to be a large register for hot air, open between the speaker and the audience, which carried the voice up to the ceiling, instead of out into the hall. It is related of a certain revivalist preacher in the State of New York, that he would never undertake to conduct one of his popular revivals, unless the society's committee would see to it, that the building in which it was held, was heated at just such a temperature, and thorough ventilation secured. He knew what he was about.

Treatment of the vocal organs. In a great many cases, a change of air—not necessarily a journey abroad—but from salt to fresh air, from valley to mountain, from damp to dry, and vice versa, with attention to diet, exercise, etc., and, if necessary, absolute rest for a short time; these simple remedies are often the most efficacious, and really all that is needed, but regular and thorough treatment should only be entrusted to professional skill. Avoid the use of condiments, cold water, etc., while speaking. They may benefit for a time, but in the course of years are almost sure to injure the voice. Many of the preparations which act immediately, and, for the time, effectively, upon the voice, are liable in the end to injure it. The juice of an orange, or French jujube paste, will often soothe a slight irritation of the throat; and a pinch of salt, or salt and powdered alum placed far back in the mouth, will often temporarily relieve pain from inflammation; a gargle of the same, with cold water, will sometimes be of service. But such remedies are bad for the voice, and it is not a safe experiment to aggravate inflammation of the vocal organs; a great deal of harm may be done by a single injudicious use of them. If the speaker is suffering with a cold, he will find less trouble from any tickling sensation in the throat, if he will observe carefully to inhale the breath only through his nostrils and not through the mouth. This avoids a rush of cold air upon the heated organs. If a speaker will remain for ten or fifteen minutes in the room where he has been exercising his voice, the liability to take cold on going out will be greatly lessened, and he will not then feel the need of having mufflers for the neck.

The writer felt reproached only yesterday, when a former pupil, now a clergyman, said to him, 'I see you protect your feet in cold weather. I had to learn that by myself. No one told me of it.' These articles may be looked upon as the fruit of this passing remark, and as the points have been conscientiously recorded, and are the result of years of experience, it is hoped that no reader of these notes will have occasion to say, 'I had to learn it by myself.'"—Laws of Life.

LESS FOOD.

Less food means temperance. Precisely this; nothing more nor less. It does not mean the temperance reform. It means simply the avoidance of excess. It is the excess, or the little too much, that hurts. It is the feather that breaks the camel's back. And is it then so hard that this little cannot be avoided? Yes, that is it; we must have a little more; there is a little more room in the overcrowded stomach. And what is the consequence? Simply a little uneasy feeling? Sometimes this is all; but not always. It is, however, always a hurt, that will be felt by and by, and more and more as the individual persists. But even for the present, with many men, it is a bad thing. A person will feel stupid; he will have the blues, because the stomach, through the nervous influence, affects the whole system, making the body dumpish and the mind dull, and the individual anything but agreeable. Now this is a common fact; we see it everywhere; every day, every meal; people "hog it;" that is the word. Why not just cut off the little excesses, and thus be cheerful, be healthy? Some men do this. Reader, try it, and you will thank us. Remember, it is not hard; the habit is soon formed; and then you will be in a new atmosphere; you will live a new life. Think not you are not one aimed at; we are all more or less at fault here. Much more happy as a race should we be if we paid more attention to diet.—Country Gentleman.

Stimulants.—There is no such thing as a good stimulant, so there can be no best stimulant. Stimulants are all bad. What is a stimulant? It is a poison. To stimulate means to goad, to excite. Alcohol is a stimulant. When alcohol is taken into the stomach the vital powers recognizing it as a poison are excited to resist it and throw it out, which they do with all the force they are capable of exerting, and this action to rid the system of poison is stimulation. Stimulation is really poisoning, and nothing else; therefore, if there is a best poison, there is a best stimulant.—Health Reformer.

Medical Statistics in France have developed two facts which are of great importance to ladies, namely, that the mortality of the female sex has decreased in the ratio of eighteen and one half per cent. since corsets have gone out of fashion; and secondly, that brain fever has increased among the ladies seventy-two and three-fourths per cent. since they have worn chignons.

Baldness.—Men become bald because they wear close hats and caps. Women are never bald except by disease. The close hat holds the heat and perspiration, thereby the hair glands become weak, and the hair falls out.

Effects of Smoking.—An inveterate smoker at Eau Claire, Wis., was recently seized with symptoms similar to delirium tremens. The attack continued for several hours, but he recovered and renounced the weed.

Earache.—A little cotton batting, wet with sweet oil and laudanum, put in the ear, will cure earache in the beginning of it.

Dr. Abernethy used to tell his pupils that all human diseases sprang from two causes—stuffing and fretting.

SIGHING FOR JESUS.

We're sighing now, dear Lord, for thee,
And long for thee to come,
And bring us immortality,
Then we shall rest at home.
May love divine inspire our hearts,
While waiting here we stay,
Thy grace and wisdom now impart,
And guide to endless day.

We sigh for thee to come again,
And end this mortal strife,
When thou our King shall come to reign,
And give us endless life.
Oh! come, dear Savior, come and reign
Upon thy promised throne;
And rule in peace and equity
This earth, from zone to zone.

We wait in patience for the time,
For thee, now to appear,
When we shall meet in that bright clime,
With those we now hold dear.
'Tis then our tears shall cease to flow,
And sighing flee away;
Thou wilt a crown of life bestow
In that eternal day.

The waiting church in tears doth mourn,
For thee, her Bridegroom King;
And longs to hail thy blest return,
With all thy saints to reign.
Oh! come, and bring us our reward,
And do not tarry long;
But come, our ever conquering Lord,
Lord Jesus, quickly come.

THE HEAVENLY KINGDOM.

Among christians it is a conceded truth that a celestial kingdom awaits the saints of God, as an eternal home. But when they are to enter it, and where it is to be located, are points concerning which conflicting views are entertained. As these points come within the range of revelation, we should gladly inquire when and where are the saints to share the glory of futurity? We have a right to learn what God has revealed. Revelation is better than speculation. "What is truth" on these points? We appeal to the book of God for a solution.

I. When are the saints to enter the heavenly kingdom?

The popular reply is, "At death." It is evident that this answer is not correct, because

1. Revelation makes no such statement.

2. As we cannot enter the kingdom unjudged, the judgment must precede our entrance into the kingdom, and the judgment is not due till the "last day" (John 12 : 48), or till Christ's "appearing" (2 Tim. 4 : 1); for if men can enter the kingdom unjudged, there would be no need of a judgment.

3. The Bible specifies another time as the epoch of entrance into the kingdom. Said Paul, "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. 3 : 4. Thus it is at the appearing of Christ, and not at death, that the saints are to be ushered into glory; agreeing with the promise of Christ, "I will come again and receive you unto myself." John 14 : 3. Christ certainly knew at what point of time he intended to receive the saints unto himself, and who will say that he here specifies the wrong point of time? When he once receives them he will not exile them, so as to receive them again; hence, if he receives them at death, he cannot receive them again at his coming; and if he receives them at his coming, it is not true that they are received at death. There is but one time of gathering, and that is when "he shall send forth his angels with the great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect," at the judgment.

Jesus not only informs us that the righteous are destined to "shine forth as the sun in the kingdom," but he plainly tells us when: "As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world. The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them that do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Matt. 13 : 40. Here we learn that the saints must wait till the "end of the world" before they "shine forth" in the heavenly kingdom. And why not, seeing the judgment does not previously come? God's plan never admits unjudged men into the kingdom, to be subsequently called out and judged. Some part of the work of the judgment—either the sentence or the execution—is connected with "the last day;" if it is the sentence, the execution must be after the sentence; if it is the execution, then there can be no rewarding of the saints with the kingdom prior to the execution of the decision at the "last day."

Christ not only informs us that the saints shall be invited to inherit the kingdom, but he also tell us when: "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations, and he shall separate them one from another. . . . Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom." Matt. 25 : 31–34. As the judgment does not arrive till "the Son of man shall come in his glory," we plainly discover the reason why we cannot "inherit the kingdom" previously. The coming of Christ brings the judgment, and the judgment brings the reward. Not only is reward connected with this event, but reward for all, hence none are rewarded previously: "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works" (Matt. 16 : 27.) This statement was made by the Lord Jesus while on earth, and not only connects reward with his future glorious mission to earth, when escorted by angels, but it associates the reward of "every man" with this grand event. More than half a century later, long after the ascension of Christ, he repeats this promise in similar phraseology: "Behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be" (Rev. 22 : 12.) If "every man" is THEN to be rewarded, they must remain unrewarded till then. This agrees with Peter's statement: "When the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." 1 Pet. 5 : 4.

We cannot enter the kingdom, nor reap any part of our reward prior to the judgment, which does not come at death, for Christ "shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing" (2 Tim. 4 : 1.) Death does not carry men to the judgment, but holds them in his strong grasp till the judgment comes, and then they are to be "delivered up"; and as the judgment precedes our entrance into the kingdom, it is certain we cannot enter it at death.

It is objected that Paul had a "desire to depart and be with Christ" (Phil. 1 : 23.) So he had, but not at death, nor by death, nor that his disembodied soul might depart; but Paul HIMSELF desired to depart WITHOUT DYING, by translation, like Enoch or Elijah, and thus escape the persecutions of earth. That he did not desire to depart THROUGH DEATH, is evident (1) from the fact that he does not say so, and (2) from the fact that he says the very reverse: "Yet what I shall choose I wot not. For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and be with Christ; which is far better." Paul was in a strait between a life of persecution on one hand, and the enemy death on the other; and though "to die" would "be gain" in liberating him from persecution, it would nevertheless place him under the power of the enemy death; so HE DID NOT CHOOSE EITHER OF THE TWO THINGS—did not choose a life of persecution, did not choose the enemy death, but he had a desire for a third thing, distinct from either of these two, namely, "a desire to depart and be with Christ," an event "far better" than either of the other two; "far better" than a life of persecution, and "far better" than the "gain" death would afford him. Here is a third thing "far better" than two other things. Is it fair to make Paul contradict himself in the same breath, by (1) telling us that he did not choose death, and (2) make him say he did choose death as a means of departing to be with Christ? As Paul did not choose death, but did choose to depart and be with Christ, he certainly desired to depart without dying. And as Paul affirms that this departure would be "far better" than either a life of persecution, or an escape from persecution by death, it is rendered doubly certain that this departure did not involve death as a means. But notwithstanding his desire to be translated, he finally tells them that he did not expect it: "I know that I shall abide and continue with you for your furtherance and joy of faith" (v. 25.) He tells them also, in the preceding verse, "To abide in the flesh is more needful for you"; that is, his bodily presence would be of more service to them than his translation. Paul's personal departure without death is contrasted with his abiding with them in the flesh, or in person. Christ was "put to death in the flesh," that is, personally; Paul, instead of departing, was to remain "in the flesh," that is, in person. When Christ was "put to death in the flesh," it was not a personality within the flesh that was put to death; and when Paul concluded that he should "abide in the flesh," he does not refer to a personality within the flesh. So this text furnishes no proof of an entrance into the heavenly kingdom at death.

Another objection is founded upon the language of Christ to the expiring thief on the cross: "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise" (Luke 23 : 43). Paradise is a term used three times in the Bible, but never signifies heaven. The term originally indicated a garden of pleasure, or rest. It is now a type of peaceful rest.

1. It must signify either a state or a place, if not a state and a place. If a state, it is the state of the righteous, whether in death, or after the reign of death is over. This promise, even it it could be so interpreted as to justly demand a fulfillment on the day of its utterance, could not be made to refer to an entrance of a disembodied soul into heaven; for the promise reads, "THOU"—not thy disembodied soul, but "thou shalt be with me in paradise." The promise is made to the man himself, either before or after his resurrection. There is no promise here made to his disembodied soul. As the person himself, styled "thou," was to be in paradise, instead of a disembodied soul, he could only have entered the "rest" of death with Christ, of whom it was said: "My flesh also shall rest in hope (Ps. 16 : 9)—a state differing from that of the wicked at their death, as "the righteous hath hope in his death" (Prov. 14 : 32); for "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors" (Rev. 14 : 13,) and "sleep in Jesus." As this promise is made to a person, and not to a disembodied soul, it would be much more reasonable to suppose that paradise is here made a synonym of that holy rest of death, or sleep in Jesus, which the wicked never share, provided the promise of paradise was to be fulfilled on that very day, than to arbitrarily assume that heaven was intended by the term, thus admitting unjudged men into heaven prior to the judgment day, to the disparagement of the Divine plan. When Jesus said, "Thou shalt be with me," he used the term "thou" in the same sense in which Jehovah used it in addressing Abraham: "Thou shalt be buried in a good old age" (Gen. 15 : 15), meaning the person himself; and we have no right to assume without proof, and contrary to the sacred usage of the term, that Jesus meant a disembodied soul by the term "thou."

Christ does not disagree with his Father in the use of terms. The promise made by the Savior was certainly made to the man himself, and when fulfilled, whether on the day of its utterance, or yet in the future, it must be fulfilled to the man —the very person denominated "thou," which person, instead of emigrating to heaven, is now resting in hope. If Christ referred to a paradise prior to the judgment, it was one into which this person "thou" was to enter, and not a place for his disembodied soul, which Jesus had not even mentioned, and to which no promise was made; and this person "thou" only went to the grave to rest with the "blessed" dead. If that rest can be called paradise, it certainly cannot be a paradise of reward. We have said thus much for the benefit of those who insist that the promise was to be fulfilled on the day it was made; not to argue the position taken, only from the premise of our opponents; that is, whenever fulfilled, it must be fulfilled to the person, and not to his shadow; and if fulfilled on that day, as the person did not go to heaven then, heaven can not here be called paradise. Remember Christ made no promise to a disembodied soul, but to the person "thou."

2. Clearer light may be elicited by noticing the origin of this promise. It was given in response to a petition addressed to the Savior by the expiring penitent: "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Jesus, without controverting the theology of the petitioner concerning his coming kingdom, at once replied "amen," which our translators have rendered "verily." This is the only term used for amen in the New Testament, it being simply transferred, and meaning "so let it be. Whenever used in direct response to a petition, as in this case, this is its meaning. The prayer was not for a passport into heaven at death, but to be remembered when Christ should come into his kingdom; and the Savior's first reply was, "amen," or "so let it be." He then adds: "I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Punctuation not being a part of the inspired document, some have differently punctuated the text, making it read; "I say unto thee to-day, Thou shalt be with me in paradise. Nor is this a new version of the matter, our opposers being witnesses.

Grotius, by way of opposition, speaks of a class who "explained it to mean after the resurrection." Wolsogenius tries to refute the claim that it means, "I say to thee to-day." Also Bellarmine opposes the claim that the Savior meant, "I tell you to-day." As these men did not oppose an unknown theory, it is evident from their opposition that the claim has long been made that the punctuation is at fault. The advocates of a conscious paradise at death, of course, insist on the present punctuation, to make the text support their theory. But, as we have already seen, even if the punctuation is correct, the text cannot be made to support the popular theory, (1) because it makes no promise of heaven, but simply of paradise; (2) it makes no promise to a disembodied soul, but to the person "thou," which term we have found applied by infallible wisdom to that part of man that was to be "buried," and never applied to a departed soul; agreeing with the statement made to Adam: "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." It is folly to insist that the Savior applies the term "thou" to something different, and something to which it is never applied elsewhere in the Bible.

Those who regard this promise of Christ a reply to the thief's request, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom," understand Jesus as answering that petition thus: "So let it be; I say unto thee to-day, thou shalt be with me in paradise." Punctuation is comparatively of modern origin, the original manuscripts not having been punctuated; and many changes have been made since first used in the Bible. Paradise once bloomed on earth under the first Adam, and it will bloom again in the restitution, under the second Adam; for in Rev. 2 : 7, we learn that the tree of life is in "the midst of the paradise of God"; and in Rev. 22 : 2, we learn that the tree of life is connected with the new earth state, "on either side of the river"; hence, the paradise of God will bloom in the renewed earth, the coming kingdom of Christ; then the penitent thief will be remembered, and have a home there with all the saints; just when and where he prayed to be remembered,—"When thou comest into thy kingdom."

That Christ did not go to heaven with the thief on the day of the crucifixion, is evident from several considerations:

1. After his resurrection he said to Mary: "I am NOT yet ascended" (John 20 : 17.) Did Christ here utter the truth? Certainly. Then he did not, if rightly understood, promise the thief on the cross an immediate entrance into heaven with him.

2. Long after the crucifixion, Paul said: "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time" (Heb. 9 : 28.) But this theory of Christ's entrance into heaven with the thief on the day of the crucifixion, makes Christ's future coming the third, instead of the "second," and places the "second" coming in the past, thus contradicting Paul; for it is admitted that Christ came the first time before the crucifixion; and if he then left the earth, and went to heaven, and remained there three days, and then came back again, that would make a "second" coming in the past, thus conflicting with Paul's statement that he "shall appear the second time" hereafter.

Others set up the claim that paradise is one department of hades or sheol (the Greek term hades being identical with the Hebrew word sheol), and that instead of going to heaven, the disembodied souls of Christ and the thief went to hades or sheol; but this effort to dodge the truth avails nothing, for the wise man tells us, "There is no work, nor devise, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in sheol" (Gr. hades, Eccl. 9 : 10); so whatever part of man enters hades or sheol, must be enveloped in unconsciousness, with no "knowledge", nor "wisdom." So that would not be a paradise of consciousness, even if it were a realm of disembodied men, which is not true. The foregoing objections, with others of a similar nature, fail to invalidate the doctrine of the entrance of the saints into the heavenly kingdom at the coming of Christ to judge the race. This point is strongly fortified. Christ will receive the saints unto himself when he shall "come again," and not till then. Then will the saints "appear with him in glory," but not before them. Then, and not till then, he will say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom."

TAKE HEED HOW YOU SPEAK.

It is evidently as much our duty, as christians, to be careful of our words, as to how we use them, as it is to maintain good works, for by our words we shall be justified or condemned. (Matt. 12 : 37.) Again, if any man offend not in word, we are taught that he is a perfect man; and for every idle word that we speak, we must give an account thereof in the day of judgment. It sometimes occurs that good christian people err from the truth, by giving expression to extreme and inconsistent ideas. For instance, we say that unless certain events, which we are looking for, should transpire within a given time, way, and manner, as we feel certain they must, we should lose our confidence in the truth of the Bible. Better by far say that we shall lose our confidence in some of our theories; but our confidence can never lessen towards God's holy word. Within a short time, we have heard a brother remark to the effect that, if it were not for what he was hoping to enjoy at some future time in the kingdom, it would not be worth the while to try and be good here. This would naturally convey to the inexperienced in religious things, the idea that after all there is no enjoyment in serving Christ here, which every child of God knows to be untrue, and that they have great and abundant peace and joy who do his commandments. Notwithstanding we have many conflicts and afflictions to pass through, yet in Christ we may rejoice always.

Again, on the other hand, we have heard brethren remark that if there was to be no hereafter, they would serve the Lord just for the enjoyment they receive here in this world. We need only to examine this expression in the light of the Scriptures to see the fallacy of it. Admit that there is nothing beyond this life; then there is no resurrection; and if the dead rise not, then Christ, our only hope of christian enjoyment here or hereafter, is not risen; and if he be not raised from the dead, our hope is vain; we are yet in our sins; and all our talk about religious enjoyment is vanity. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. Read the fifteenth chapter of first Corinthians, and the folly of making use of such extreme expressions in our talk may be seen at once. Let us who love Jesus avoid the use of harsh, inconsistent terms in our talk. C. H. HURD.

For the World's Crisis.

TIME'S FAREWELL.

Startling events are before us, and each hour sends forth the undulating wave of prophetic import, which dies not until earth's remotest bound feels its force. An unassuming Hebrew tells the tale of earth's career, under circumstances peculiarly thrilling, as recorded in Daniel, 2d chapter. While this holy man, with his three companions in retirement, sought wisdom from above, a monarch, in terrible suspense, awaited the result. A departed dream, which he could not recall, troubled him. In vain had he appealed to astrologers and magicians, sorcerers and soothsayers, for a solution. Tell us, say they, the dream, and we will show the interpretation thereof; but the godless throng cower with fear as the trembling king demands of them the dream; failing in this, he threatens the destruction of all pretended wiseacres throughout his domain.

Man's extremity is God's opportunity; and while the haughty ruler writhes with fear, and his wise men are petrified with astonishment, one Daniel, hitherto obscure and unknown, becomes the mouthpiece of Jehovah to reveal a glorious restitution, prefaced by progress of human events. He is hurriedly introduced to the king of Babylon. Lowliness and humility confront pride and royalty. The prophet tells the dream and shows the interpretation thereof, while the monarch vouches for its truthfulness. The despised guest removes his suspense, delineates the fearful end of earthly glory, and introduces the kingdom of God. In conscious grandeur of omnipotent aid, in the presence of royal splendor, draped with confusion and shame, he gives a graphic description of the "great image," of terrible form, with head of gold, breast and arms of silver, belly and thighs of brass, legs of iron, and feet part of iron and part of clay, each symbolizing an earthly government. He assigns his royal host the chief place on the list, saying, "Thou art this head of gold."

Regardless of peace-and-safety cries, and dreamers of a world's conversion in the nineteenth century, he announces, in a clear and audible tone, "And after thee shall arise another kingdom, inferior to thee." Gliding rapidly down the scale, he reaches the terminus of faded human glory, appropriately symbolized by "iron and clay." History sustains his narrative, and furnishes Babylon the symbol of gold, Media and Persia the silver, Grecia the brass, and Rome the iron, whose prophetic shoes, worn out with age and tipped with clay, denote that her sceptre has departed. These metallic symbols span the entire period of mortal sway; measure the duration of earthly compact, every human government. Catholic, Protestant and infidel writers have truthfully sketched the rise and fall of these prophetic empires, and are forced to admit that their work was laid out in advance by the inspired Hebrew, who drew the plan and furnished the draft, that unborn historians might chronicle each concealed wonder on the chessboard of fate.

Leaving the metallic image, we ask, What next? Will the man of God now leave us to leap in the dark? Century after century lifted the veil that hid its quota of the national programme, and the onward march of time brings us to the key which reveals the fearful yet glorious import of the words, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." Dan. 2 : 44. Old time lingers on the first sentence of this verse, and all that remains of human government is limited to the prolonged fulfillment of those six words, "In the days of these kings." Although history reveals, with infinite precision, the marvellous accuracy of the prophet's words, and time has carried us to the divided and crippled condition of the fourth kingdom, and the events of ages crowd into months, while the expiring moments hesitate and tremble as the words, "In the days of these kings," afford the last separating link between the dissolution and funeral of a groaning creation; an unbelieving, scoffing world sip the cup of pleasure to drown their fears with imaginary bubbles of a good time coming, boasting that "all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation," and fiercely ask, "Where is the promise of his coming?" The inspired apostle, in his second epistle to Thessalonians, 2d chapter, brings to view the last act in the national drama. He specifies the last bold, blasphemous assumption of the "man of sin:" "Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." 2 Thess. 2 : 3. The Pope declared "infallible" fulfills this scripture. Scarcely a month of infallible experience brings a vigorous appeal for "fallible" aid, as the poor old man entreats for a "single ship to protect his domain." Thus, while clothed with vesture "infallible," he becomes the reluctant dependent of shattered earthly glory, whose sun, already obscured and rapidly waning, will soon be extinguished by the brightness of the "Coming One."

Two of the most powerful European nations are engaged in deadly combat; in fearful suspense the rest look on. The mighty men are waked up, and are mightily preparing war; multitudes are in the valley of decision, for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision. Joel 3 : 9–14. Jehovah hath spoken, "Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land. And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come; and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of hosts." Hag. 2 : 6–7.

The primitive glory and grandeur of earth, when the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy, was lost by sin. Sixty centuries find it draped in fearful gloom. Its long week of sorrow and death draws to a close. Saturday night has come; the carnival terminates with the death warrant of the nations (Jer. 25 : 15–38); accompanied by signs in the sun, moon and stars; celestial and terrestrial phenomena, tidal waves and mighty earthquakes, which are but preliminaries of the final, fearful catastrophe awaiting our planet. A mighty angel with hand raised heavenward pauses before casting the die, declaring "Time shall be no longer." Rev. 10 : 6. The fleeting moments rapidly close the gap. Irresistibly we are borne to its brink. Like a garment old and worn out, earth waits its baptism of fire. The wickedness of its inhabitants is great. The picture is dark and cheerless; the words which thrilled the king of Babylon re-echo in thunder tones, as omens of swift destruction thicken on every hand. Storm clouds of vengeance, deep and dark, gather to break in pieces and consume all human governments. Dan. 2 : 44.

As in the days of Noah the ungodly throng heeded not, so now the Christian dispensation goes out disgraced by its friends, while its great Head and Author suffers open shame at their hands. It is a millennial age of blackest crimes and grossest hypocrisy, unparalleled selfishness and scornful pride; a pleasure-loving, mammon-serving, God-defying age; white for the harvest, ripe for destruction. Tons of paper and reservoirs of ink depict its horrors. Pandemonium has let loose its entire reserve of fables, doctrines of devils, spirit manifestations and licentious affinities. The demoralization in theology rivals political corruption. Spirits like frogs (Rev. 16 : 13, 14), beget a host of religious tadpoles, who grow into scriptural swindlers, whose only employment is to mutter and peep. Sample specimens are frequent; they thrive on native or foreign soil, but sound doctrine they will not endure.

Physically, politically and religiously, earth has progressed to the lowest grade. Sin is the disease, the result is the legitimate fruits. Tossed and racked in the last stage of the malady, which has convulsed it for six thousand years, earth is about to convalesce. An omnipotent hand applies the remedy; it staggers, reels to and fro, and melts with fervent heat; a shapeless, molten mass, void and empty, is all that remains of a once habitable globe. The concussion removes the disease, sin and death die together, and are lost in eternal oblivion. 1 Cor. 15 : 26; Heb. 2 : 14. Godless royalty and wretched poverty offer their last prayer together (Rev. 6 : 15–17); wailing and mourning cease, and earth's funeral is over. The mantle of sin and death are removed, it appears in bridal adorning, the receptacle of the bride and Bridegroom, the Lamb of God and his ransomed church. With approaching glory, from their antechambers they come forth (Isa. 26 : 20), and behold with no remembrance of the past the new heavens and new earth. Isa. 65 : 17.

Who is sufficient for these things? Drowsy church, canst thou meet the Judge in peace? Will thy skirts be bloodless? The prophetic word is thy light. Wilt thou heed it? Shake off, in the name of the Lord, thine earthly dross. A perishing world is coming to the judgment. Thy name to live will not save thee. A living Christ within alone will suffice. Arise! Arise! the Spirit entreats; the rear car of time's last invitation is passing. What thou doest do quickly. Thy Master is about to shut to the door. Wilt thou then begin to knock, and boast of self-righteous deeds (Luke 13 : 24–26); and when too late commence earnest supplication? Thy ponderous machinery of forms and ceremonies will not save thee. Christ is thy righteousness; Christ to-day, Christ in the coming kingdom; thy salvation now, thine everlasting salvation, world without end.

Careless sinner, we have nothing better to offer you. Thy burdened heart and guilty conscience need this Jesus. No other name will suffice. Thy salvation costs blood, even the life-blood of Jesus. Do you realize it? will you be fascinated with pleasure's cup? will you rush madly on? will you grieve the Holy Spirit? will you spurn offered mercy? Pause, I entreat thee. Ominous signs forewarn you that mercy lingers only till the heaven rolls together as a scroll over thy head. Nations overwhelmed in distress now startle the world, sinking in overwhelming perplexity. You step out of this into the pavilion of God, or perish while supplicating the rocks to fall on thee. Repent, and believe to-day. Come now. Call on the name of the Lord; plant thy feet on the Rock; seek and find; obey and live. Do you laugh in carnal security? Remember the cities of the plain, and Noah's days. They knew not till the flood came and took them all away; and the rain of fire left only a smoking pile of ashes. This doom awaits the finally impenitent. Mal. 4 : 1–3. God will rain upon the wicked fire and brimstone, and an horrible tempest. Psa. 11 : 6. As in the day when Lot left Sodom, so will it be. Luke 17 : 29–30. Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die? Seek an interest in Christ and live. O. D. WOODRUFF.

Southington, Ct., Aug. 22, 1870.

BURNING AND SHINING.

It is the highest ambition of some persons to shine in the world. But theirs is the glitter of empty show, ignoring the charms of the gospel and defying the opinions of men. There are also many that burn in the world; but it is with the fires of passion rather than the quenchless zeal inspired by the Holy Ghost. They that burn with ambitious desires, and shine only to show off themselves to better advantage, are the enemies of the cross and the servants of the devil. If we shine at all, we must shine for God; and if we burn at all, it must be for the honor of his matchless name. To burn is not enough; we are to be "burning and shining lights" in this crooked and perverse generation. There are demands for all the light we can shed and all the fires we can kindle. To say nothing of the mantle of midnight darkness that enshrouds the hapless millions of paganism proper, how terrible is the gloom that veils this acknowledged land of light, and holds in ignorance of spiritual things ten thousand souls for whom the Savior died!

A superficial observer could hardly be made to credit the amazing amount of darkness and dullness that prevails, especially in our populous towns and cities. Many of these need to be taught the first principles of the gospel; and the work is so great in extent and difficult in itself as to require a patient continuance in well-doing—a following up of effort after effort, and blow after blow, till the righteousness of God "go forth as brightness," and sinners shall behold "a light upon the road that leads them to the Lamb."

But it is not in the capacity of spiritual teachers alone that we are to shine for God. By the sweetness of our tempers, the simplicity of our testimony, the sacredness of our conversation, and the sanctity of our entire lives, we are to shed a halo of light around us that shall reveal the indwelling divinity and richly exemplify his "glorious grace!" Let no one imagine that the charms of personal character, the lavish bestowments of nature, or the polish of a classical education, will answer at all as a substitute for the light of a heart-experience in the deep things of God. If any would shine to the honor of Jesus' name, they must first burn with celestial fire! The light must be but the emanation from the heat. God has united these two elements not only in nature, but in grace. And what he "hath joined together let not man put asunder." There is feeling—emotion—fire in the salvation of the gospel, as well as principle, reason and light. We are to be so clothed with the power of the Spirit that we shall burn our bigness through every circle in which we are called by the providence of God to move. It is doubtless our privilege to call down the awakening influences of the Holy Ghost on those with whom we mingle, and compel them to feel the force of our faith and the fervor of our spirit. And who shall say that our privilege in this respect is not our bounden duty?

We are to shine with "borrowed rays divine" and burn with purest love. Love is the very centre and essence of our holy religion. It is this that warms the heart, energizes the soul, overleaps difficulties, melts down icebergs, weeps over sinners, and goes out in yearning entreaties and earnest efforts for their salvation. It is this that will give unction to our spirits, point to our words, and access to the hearts of others. This is the mighty impulsive power that urges onward the minister of Jesus in the toils and trials that thicken on his path. It is love that brought the Savior from above to rescue ruined man. "The heaven of heavens is love;" and the sanctified heart is chiefly distinguished by the fact that it is made "perfect in love." The love of Christ is a quenchless flame in the home where it dwells. It is this that makes Howards and Wilberforces and Wesleys, and starts them out into the moving masses of mankind to spread greater terror and dismay among the devotees of the devil than did Sampson's foxes among the corn of the Philistines. May the Head of the Church fill us with this heaven-born element, and send us out to burn and glow, to live and labor, to fight and conquer!—Methodist.

ALTON BAY CAMPMEETING.

We arrived here Tuesday evening, Nov. 6th, and found a large and good meeting in progress. Over sixty new houses have been built this year. The camp-ground looks like some western villages, excepting the houses here are much nearer together. There are about one hundred and fifty houses in all, and some fifty cloth tents. A new preacher's stand has been built, a well dug, an acqueduct laid to carry water to the boarding tent, brick ovens built, costing $125; besides many other minor improvements. One could not be long here without being satisfied that this people, who are looking for the coming of Jesus, are tremendously in earnest. Mere form without the power finds poor patronage here. Ministers and members of other churches are here with us to enjoy the spirit of the meeting.

Several sinners have been converted, and a goodly number are now seeking the Lord. The prayer-meetings are well attended, and conducted with earnest zeal. We think much good will result from this meeting. The Spirit of the Lord is with us. There is a real waking up of the children of the Lord in relation to his speedy coming. It seems quite like the spirit manifested twenty-seven years ago. All appear to be satisfied that the coming of Jesus is very near.

We purpose to give a further report next week.

FRANCE AND PRUSSIA.

A great change has taken place the past week in the situation of things in France and Prussia. Saturday, Sept. 3d., Napoleon surrendered to King William in person, and McMahon surrendered his army also at Sedan. Sabbath, Sept. 4th, a republic was proclaimed in Paris, and Napoleon was dishonored. Political offenders, who had been imprisoned by the Imperial government, were set at liberty, and the utmost freedom given to the people and the press. The state of things in Paris is quite like that at the time of the French revolution in 1792–3. It is not probable that the republic will continue long. We may expect revolutions in heaps till the end of the present dispensation.

Rome and the Pope are in a very critical condition. Every day we are expecting to hear of a scene at Rome far beyond what has just taken place at Paris. The waves of trouble have just begun to roll, and we may look for a terrible tempest soon. Instead of diminishing, the surrender of Napoleon has only served to increase the agitation of the political waters; and we shall be quite disappointed if he does again stand at the head of the ship of state in the old Roman empire, before the coming of Christ. We think he will remain in his present condition long enough for a revolution to take place at Rome. He cannot send troops there now to protect the Pope. The Roman woman at present is emphatically a "widow." Her end is at hand.

RESULTS OF FASHION.

Those who have followed the ridiculous fashion of wearing jute switches are beginning to reap the results, as the following will show:

"The Bangor Whig says that two ladies in Orono are seriously ill from the effects of vermin in jute switches, which they have been in the habit of wearing. The insects have penetrated the scalp in innumerable places, and fatal results are feared. Instances of this kind are becoming very numerous."

Let the wise take warning. We expect the foolish will pass on and be punished. Fashion is an oppressive tyrant, that shows no mercy to its silly dupes. It is high time for good people to institute an open and determined [illegible] against its oppressive, domineering [illegible]

WHY THE PRUSSIANS TRIUMPHED.

A foreign correspondent of the New York Herald says:—

"Let the Prussians say what they like, their army at Woerth (without counting the immense support of Wurtemburg and Bavarian and Baden troops, making in all at least 250,000, upon which the Prince Royal could have fallen back if MacMahon had beaten him and which were within six miles of the battle-field) outnumbered that of the French by at least three to one.

Since the fight I have taken great care to verify my calculations, and I find that the Prussian army at Woerth, on Saturday, the 6th inst., consisted in round numbers of 150,000 men.

On the other hand MacMahon's army could not muster, all told, more than 40,000 effective bayonets or sabres. Why, then, did the French leader not only give the enemy battle, but actually tempt him on and force him, as it were, to the combat? Simply because he had no idea in the world of the numbers of his enemy."

"HUMANITY versus CHRISTIANITY."

The above is the heading of a document read at the late Spiritualist campmeeting, held at Cape Cod, Aug. 2nd to 7th, 1870. It was sent to Henry C. Wright, formerly an able Congregationalist minister, now a leading Spiritualist. The heading is significant. It puts Spiritualism in its true light. It has arrayed "humanity against Christianity." By reading the document furnished by Mr. Wright, the reader will see the real spirit manifested towards Christianity by full grown Spiritualists, who are led by the genuine spirit of Spiritualism. But few are aware of its abominable and horridly blasphemous character. It is beginning to throw off its hypocritical, lambskin coat, and talk its real dragonic language. It offers no Savior, no God, except a principle in every man. It is antichristian in all its doctrines, morals, and its entire influence.

The following is an extract from Mr. Wright's communication, as published in the Banner of Light, Aug. 20th, 1870. It will need no comments:—

Pawtucket, R. I., July 29th, 1870.

HUMANITY VERSUS CHRISTIANITY.

President of Cape Cod Campmeeting of Spiritualists:—I cannot be with you this year. Can I have the platform a short time? If so, I will say a word with pen and ink. This is my speech. . . . .

Man—his nature, relations and destiny—is my one life-thought; his elevation and happiness my one object. By man I mean woman also. The body is not the man; it is but an incident to him. The death of the body is not the death of the man; nor does it change his relations, obligations and duties. These are the same out of the body as in it. Down with all gods, doctrines, religions and governments that tend to dishonor and degrade man.

Man owes allegiance to no being or power outside of himself. Creeds, codes and constitutions, churches and governments, are nonentities when they conflict with internal conviction.

The battle of the race is between the individual soul and godless corporations. Ecclesiastical and governmental organizations are the chief sinners of the race. Those who constitute the governing class, in Church and State, are, as a class, the most inhuman and corrupt portion of the human family. They lie, and steal, rob and murder, and do every conceivable wrong; and christianity consecrates their doings. . . .

Love is man's only Savior. To save us, it must exist in our hearts. Love in Christ's heart can save him alone. Christ died to save himself, and no one else. My soul is the only manger in which my Savior can be born. A Savior and a sovereign are born in and with each each one. The only creed, code and constitution that are infallible and of binding force are given to each one as a birthright. Each one has a right to interpret it for himself.

God made each man an autocrat, with only one subject, i. e., himself. Man has no more right to govern others than he has to enslave, rob or kill them. The only governing power of each one is in himself; not in another.

It is a mrtter of indifference to me who or what Christ, as a person, was; or where he was born; or whether he was born at all. The question is not worth a thought, whether he ever had a personal existence—though I think he had. . . . We are to sit in judgment on the spirit, principle and actions of Christ, as we do on those of Thomas Paine.

It is obvious that whatever else he was, Christ was not a christian. Were he to live with us now, as he did with the Jews eighteen hundred years ago, there is not a church that would take him in. He lacked the essentials of a christian, in faith and life. He was a good and true man. I love Christ; I hate christianity. Christ and christianity are moral antagonisms. In christendom the battle of the race is between humanity and christianity. One or the other must die. . . .

The great issue of the century is between humanity and christianity. Humanity saves; christianity damns. Christ embodied humanity; Christendom, christianity. The great work of christianity is, to baptize all that governments legalize. The more of christianity a man has, the less of Christ he has. The more perfect the christian, the more imperfect the man. The christian must be dug out of us and cast away, root and branch, before the man can spring up in us. The death of the christian is the birth of the man.

Spiritualists have forced this issue upon the arena of discussion. They must meet it. Let them do it calmly, kindly, lovingly; but firmly, earnestly, and for victory to humanity and death to christianity. We deny the foundation doctrines of christianity. We have challenged Christendom to a defence, not of the infallibility and authority of the Pope, but also of the Bible, and of miraculous conception. . . .

From the high and holy platform of Spiritualism we look upon the great battle of the race—that is now being fought with a zeal and devotion never before known. The great issue is between God in man, and the animal in man. A union of the two is essential to existence here. But which shall have the mastery? To answer this is the mission of Spiritualism. . . .

Let passion intensify love, and let love, or God, consecrate passion, and keep it in subjection. Christianity subjects the God to the animal in man, in his marriage, social, political and ecclesiastical relations; and especially when the animal is embodied in Church and State, and backed up by the penal and military codes and establishments of mankind.

Be this, then, our one great battle cry: Man sacred! Success to whatever tends to elevate and ennoble man, woman and child! Defeat to whatever tends to their degradation and ruin. Blessings on what tends to make them holy; curses deep and strong on whatever tends to make them unholy; up with all that saves; down with all that damns us and our fellow-beings.

One great shout of triumph rises from my heart, in behalf of the Cape Cod campmeeting of Spiritualists; for it saves all, and damns none. HENRY C. WRIGHT.

In Spiritualism we see the ripe fruit of a belief in the immortality of the soul. It is that which has grown from the devil's lie in Eden, when he said to the happy, innocent pair, "Ye shall not surely die." Gen. 3: 4.

Let every christian search the Scriptures, to see if there is one passage in the whole Bible where the words "soul" or "spirit," as applied to man, have any qualifying words, such as "immortal," "everlasting," "undying" "endless," or any other words in the Greek, Hebrew, or English text, that intimate, or even hint, that man has a personal, conscious entity, distinct from the body, that will live eternally. When found, please address Miles Grant, Boston, and it shall be published in the Crisis.

A few hours after we prepared the foregoing for the paper, the following appeared in the Boston Journal:—

"NO PAPER COME."

We have received several letters saying they did not get the Crisis of Aug. 31st, and want to know the reason. The reason was, there was no paper printed. Due notice was given like this:—"No paper next week."

THE YOUNG PILGRIM.

The Advent Christian Association, at its late annual meeting at Springfield, discussed the question of the continuance of the Young Pilgrim. Upon motion, the subject was referred to the Advent Christian Publication Society, which Society took the subject under consideration; and after discussion referred the whole matter to a Sub-Committee, consisting of the Editorial Committee, Business Agent, and Editor of the Pilgrim, who make the following report and appeal:—

1. That our duty to the children, in these days of abounding wickedness and error, and of corrupt and demoralizing reading, demand the continuance of The Young Pilgrim.

2. That The Young Pilgrim, like all other Sunday School papers of limited circulation, is published every year at a loss of several hundred dollars, and, until the circulation is very largely increased, cannot be published, at the present subscription prices, without loss. If, therefore, it is sustained at all, it must be, as other Sunday School papers are, by the aid of donations to make up the deficiencies. For this purpose a Young Pilgrim Fund is opened, and contributions called for.

3. That it shall be the endeavor of its Editor, and of the Society as far as in them lies, to make The Young Pilgrim all that a Second Advent Sunday School paper should be,—keeping always in view its great object: to bring the children to Jesus, instruct them in righteousness, and prepare them for the kingdom of heaven.

We therefore appeal to the friends of the children everywhere for help. Their little paper needs, first of all, your prayers, for its editor and its writers, that the Holy Spirit may guide and bless them in all they write, that every thing in it may be for God's glory and the children's good.

It needs a greater interest on the part of those who write; short, pithy articles, full of life and truth; letters, Sunday School intelligence, stories, anecdotes, and incidents of religious experience, written in a style that shall interest and impress the minds of its young readers.

It needs the hundreds of dollars now due on subscription, unjustly or thoughtlessly held back by those who are amply able to pay; and it needs generous and liberal contributions from the stewards of the Lord's money to meet the deficiencies.

It needs, also, a greater effort to increase its circulation. It ought to be a visitor in thousands of families where it is not now taken; and Sunday Schools that now take from ten to fifty, or more, ought to double the number.

Brethren and sisters, these are its needs—your prayers, your efforts, your communications and contributions. Will you give them?

Our preaching brethren, superintendents and teachers, are especially urged to take this matter into their own hands, and interest their congregations, Sunday Schools and classes, in adding to the circulation, support and value of The Young Pilgrim.

In behalf of the Board,

S. G. MATHEWSON, L. BOUTELL, JOHN COUCH, } Editorial Committee.

GEO. T. ADAMS, Business Agent.

WM. B. HERRON, Editor.

OUR WHEREABOUTS.

That we are living somewhere in earth's dark night of sin, is obvious to all. But are we near its close? Or is it an endless night, a night never to be succeeded by a cloudless day of glory? We are not left to blind conjecture: "Now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand." (Rom. 13:11, 12). This statement was made over eighteen hundred years ago, and if then true in a comparative sense, it must now be true in the most emphatic sense. We are now eighteen hundred years nearer our salvation, and nearer the bright day of futurity. A night cannot be "far spent" till after midnight; and if earth's midnight was past more than eighteen hundred years ago, it is certain that the night is very near its close. Paul also informs us that God "hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son" (Heb. 1: 2), and if the last days had a commencement at the first advent of Christ, we must be now living very near their termination; since the last days cannot be the middle days of a given period, but days after the middle. These considerations, independent of the fulfillment of prophecy, compel us to the conclusion that earth's history of sin will very soon terminate, to be succeeded by an era of felicity. "The day is at hand." W. S.

THE EXECUTION OF JUDGMENT.

Much depends on the question, When is the execution of divine judgment due? Execution is the last feature in judgment. No matter how many component features there may be to judgment, none of them can be subsequent to the execution. If investigation is recognized as a part of the judgment, that must precede the execution. If the decision of the judge is a component part of the judgment, that also precedes the execution; so every feature of the judgment must precede the execution, that being the last ingredient; hence, if we can detetermine at what epoch of time the execution of judgment is due on the sinner, we shall know that his punishment cannot precede that point of time, for investigation is not the punishment, nor is decision the punishment, but the execution is the punishment. Then all depends on a correct answer to the question, When will judgment be executed on the ungodly? Let us hear and believe divine testimony: "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints [or "holy ones"], to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly," etc. (Jude 1: 14, 15.)

Thus it is positively proven that the "execution" of judgment on the ungodly is not due till the "Lord cometh," and as the execution is the punishment itself, it is an authenticated truth that the sinner's punishment cannot precede the Lord's coming; nor can the force of this strong argument be set aside by the claim that judgment will be executed on the class only who chance to be alive at the time of the Savior's coming, for the broad statement, "Execute judgment upon all," cannot be thus narrowed down to mean a mere fragment of the mighty host of transgressors; besides, the apostle who records this prediction definitely speaks of a class who were then living, and plainly tells us that Enoch "prophesied of these" (those then living), as well as of others like them. Thus the execution of judgment is yet future for "all" the ungodly, which fact is subversive of the doctrine of present punishment in hell. Nor can this argument be set aside by the unproved assumption, that though they are being punished now, a future session of judgment will be held to sanction the work, long after it is done. That would be foolish in human plans, and more so in the Divine economy, seeing that the divine Judge makes an infallible decision before the execution. W. S.

OUR GREAT MESSAGE.

If God has really given us the closing message to the world, we have no right to smother it, or keep it, in partial obscurity. We must "cry aloud and spare not." It is none of our business as to how much unbelief or opposition may be awakened by it. It is our duty to preach the preaching God bids us preach, in the right spirit, and with the right motive, even if the masses brace up against it as strongly as they did in the days of Noah. Have we the truth? Is it a God-given message? If so, let us "give the trumpet a certain sound,"—a sound that will be understood, and repeat the sound, and let it wax louder. Are we doing all we can to spread the news of the coming of the King of glory, to raise the sleeping saints, and establish his kingdom on the renewed earth? It is a message of light, and we must not put this light under a bushel. Are any doing it? "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick." Are any sick because their hope has not yet been realized? "He will surely come, and will not tarry." Let us be true to the work assigned us, "fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." W. S.

"THEY ARE EQUAL UNTO THE ANGELS."

How often this language of the Savior is misapplied by mistaken theologians, in referring it to the supposed disembodied existence of deceased friends. The language of Christ, which stands connected with this, forbids such an application: "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead; . . . . neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels, ... being the children of the resurrection" (Luke 20: 35, 36). Thus it is evident that the class of beings here referred to, who are destined to become "equal unto the angels," firstly experience a "resurrection from the dead," or a change equivalent thereto, which could not be affirmed of disembodied souls; and it is also said of this class, "Neither can they die any more," showing that they were once a class of dying beings; all of which is true of the saints, who are to be liberated from death, but not true of immortal souls, even if human souls exist independent of the body as undying personalities.

Death never transforms saints into angels, nor subtracts embryo angels from the mortal body. We must wait till the resurrection before securing an equality with angels. Not till the angels are sent forth to gather the saints shall we enjoy angelic society. W. S.

THE LAW ESTABLISHED.

"Yea, we establish the law." Rom. 3: 31.

Some claim, with great confidence, that the law here referred to is nothing more nor less than the ten commandments, written on the tables of stone; and after assuming this claim, they throw around it the following adjectives, moral, spiritual, holy, good, perfect, etc. But I have yet to learn that the word of God sanctions any such assumption. I have searched the Bible through and through to find such evidence, but it is silent as death as regards this claim.

The truth is, the ten commandments are only ten specifications of the law of God given to Israel by the hand of Moses, to which law the above adjectives duly belong. This, then, is emphatically the law that is to be established by and through faith in Jesus Christ. How is this law established? By answering the end for which it was made. Christ says, "I come not to destroy the law, or the prophets, but to fulfill." The law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ. "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." Christ, by fulfilling all that the law, and the prophets, and the Psalms said about him, did really and emphatically establish this vast amount of facts. See Luke 24: 44.

When all the prophecies touching Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, Rome, the ten horns, and the little horn were fulfilled; when all the prophecies of Christ touching Jerusalem's destruction, the great tribulation, the signs of his coming to judgment were fulfilled, it become an established fact that they spoke the truth, and were divinely inspired. Precisely so in Rom. 3: 31; if not, then the entire law is obligatory upon all Christians.

QUESTIONS.

Did Christ establish the law of commandments contained in ordinances, when he broke down the middle wall of partition, and abolished that law? I think so.

Was the reputation of the schoolmaster (the law) established, when it had faithfully instructed and lead the Jewish church unto Christ? Yea, verily.

Was the first will or testament established when Christ took it away, and established the second will? Most surely both were established. The first by being "perfectly fulfilled, or answering the end for which it was designed. The second by miracles, signs, wonders, gifts of the Holy Ghost, and the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all.

Then do we make void (render useless) the law through faith? By no means; we establish the law. What law? God's law by Moses. When we receive Christ, and are married to him, and obey the law of God, or the second will given by Christ ("for the law of the Spirit in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death"), then the first established will, testament, or law, forever ceases its binding obligation, and all must obey the second will. In this will we read: "Upon the first Sabbaton [original] of the week . . . there was a great earthquake . . . Christ arose from the dead, and the disciples came together to break bread." So all must see at a glance that there is a Sabbaton standing out boldly in both Testaments or wills; but the original Sabbaton being a shadow, ended at the cross, Christ being the substance.

God's memorial day of creation, and Israel's memorial day of deliverance, having fulfilled the Author's eternal purpose, was set out of his marvelous light-house, and now another occupies its place, for the grand reason that the work of redemption, which Christ wrought out for his "people, by far surpasses the work of creation.

So the christian has a memorial day in this dispensation; and as Sabbaton is used in a figurative sense and applied to the whole week, there is plenty of time for all christians scattered among all nations, to observe the first seventh part of this time. Let us faithfully observe it, and so fulfill the law of Christ.

AMONG THE TOMBS.

An attempt has been made to divert the minds of those desiring the truth, but are not fully settled with regard to the resurrection of the wicked dead, by comparing John 5: 28 with Mark 5: 3, where the Greek phrase "en tois mneemasi" is rendered "among the tombs" in King James' translation—the claim being set up that if it is properly translated in Mark 5: 3, then it could be properly translated "among the tombs" in John 6: 23; then it would read: "The hour is coming in the which all that are among the tombs shall hear his voice."

But it is evident that the preposition "en" is not properly tendered "among" in Mark 5: 3; and it is properly rendered "in" in Luke 8: 27. "Neither abode he in any house, but in the tombs." It would hardly make sense to say "neither abode he among any house." The idea simply is, he abode not in a house, but in the sepulchres of the dead. We do read of a class of wicked Jews, to be sure, who "remained among the graves" (Isa. 65: 3, and others;) but that Christ had reference to them in John 5: 28 we deny, and it would be an abuse of language to attempt to maintain it. Certain parts connected with the circumstance forbid it.

In the first place, Jesus speaks of a part of those who "hear his voice and come forth," as having done good, and, consequently, come forth "to a resurrection of life," (i. e., to die no more); whereas, those wicked, abominable Jews that remained among the graves had done "only evil continually." And, furthermore, I do not know that we have any account of any dwelling, or remaining, among the tombs in Jesus' day except those demoniacs.

The fact that those called forth out of the tombs, as spoken of in John 5: 28, are in part those that have done good, and, in part, that have done evil, demonstrates, beyond all cavil, that the calling forth, instead of being a calling from nature's darkness to hear the gospel, is a calling from the embrace of death to rewards and punishments. And if this can be figured away there is no use trying to prove a resurrection of any one.

The safest principles of interpretation of the word is the literal, except when the connection forbid it. There is nothing in the connection here that forbids a literal interpretation, and, consequently, God will not condemn me, I am sure, if I choose to honor his Son enough to take him at his word.

If we can take him at his word, it is a very easy matter to show that the wicked dead will live again. In verse 25, he says: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of man, and they that hear [his voice] shall live." This was verified at the grave of Lazarus, and others. "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the tombs [are there any dead ones in the tombs?—and if so, are they all righteous?] shall hear his voice [and they that hear shall live] and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, [i. e., to die no more], and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation;" "the wrath of God abideth on them."

"But," says one, "those that the wrath of God abideth on shall never see or enjoy the life the righteous obtain, which is everlasting; but it does not imply that they will never come to life to be judged, when Jesus positively declares they shall. He truly says, "He that hath the Son hath everlasting life; and he that hath not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." Paul says, "that without holiness no man shall see the Lord;" and John says, "Behold, he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him;" even they that pierced him. Also, Jesus says, "Except a man be born from above, he can not see the kingdom of God;" and yet says the wicked Pharisees shall see . . . . in the kingdom of God." Job says, "Mine eyes shall no more see you."

In these instances it will be readily seen that the word "see" implies to enjoy. Job's eyes might behold a great many good things, but he would not enjoy them. Every eye will see the Lord, but will not enjoy his presence; and so "all that are in the graves will hear the voice of the Son" of man, and will "live;" but the wicked will not enjoy that life promised to the righteous; and although they live, it is but to die the second death.

John says, "The sea gave up the dead that were in it." Are there no wicked dead in the sea? "And death and hell [i. e., the grave] delivered up the dead that were in them, and they were judged every man according to their deeds, ... and whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." This proves conclusively that the wicked are raised from their graves and from the sea, to be juddged; and if they are thus raised to be judged, God cannot inflict their punishment by simply leaving them in their graves.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Thos. E. Verge, Jr.

BRO. GRANT:—May grace mercy and peace from God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. Amen. Dear Brother, I feel as if I ought to drop a few lines for the Crisis; for it is to us as a light shining out of darkness, revealing to us the true light as it shines in the blessed Bible. The Bible tells us that we should not grow weary in well doing; and I am determined, by the grace of God, to run the race that is set before me in the gospel, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; so that when Jesus comes to set up his kingdom under the whole heavens, and call forth the sleeping saints from the land of the enemy, giving them immortality and eternal life, I may with them have an abundant entrance ministered unto me.

My father, brother and myself left Halifax city last September, for Boston; but previous to our leaving, we became acquainted with one Bro. H. G. Tracy, residing in this city. He was taking the "World's Crisis," and through it we learned about the Advent brethren and their place of worship in Boston. We often had controversies with different persons on the doctrine of the entire mortality of man, but could not be convinced, until we had purchased a book published by you on Spiritualism and man. This was the means of dispersing the darkness from our minds, and setting us on our way rejoicing in the whole truth, as it is in the gospel.

After our safe arrival in Boston, we found our way to Lowell Street church, where we enjoyed ourselves with the brethren and sisters in praising God. After four months had elapsed, I was taken sick, and was obliged to go to the hospital, where I remained five or six weeks. God, who is so good, had mercy on me, and raised me up from a sick bed. Glory and praise be to his holy name. Feeling yet weak in body, I resolved to return back to Halifax. I must truly say, that God is the helper of all those who put their trust in him. After leaving Boston, and on my way home, I asked the captain of the boat to let me hold a prayer-meeting, which he granted. We had a good time. The Lord strengthened me. We held another meeting before reaching Halifax. Having then been here a few days, I attended the prayer-meetings at the same Baptist church with which I had been connected, and proclaimed the truth as it is found in the blessed Bible. After I had attended a few meetings, I took some tracts with me which had been given me before leaving Boston, and distributed them amongst the members and others, and likewise to the pastor. I also lent him the same book which I had purchased, but his prejudiced mind would not let him read the book or tracts. He then began to stigmatize us publicly from the pulpit, calling us infidels, and saying that we had been sent by the devil, or some other person, to distribute this literature.

Glory be to God, the storms may come, and rage fiercer and fiercer; the winds may blow, and the waves may beat and roll their heaving billows over us; yet they cannot shake us, because we are founded on the everlasting rock, Christ Jesus. We fear not the face of man, or what he can do unto us. If God be on our side who can be against us? Having the Lord with us, we have the majority. We have much to contend with, but we know this much, that God is able to deliver those who strive to live to his honor and glory. Yes, he is able to deliver the godly out of all their troubles. We have found the Lord to be a very present help in every time of trouble.

Notwithstanding the amazing efforts that have been put forth against us, and every means used to put down the doctrine as false, some have embraced it, and are now rejoicing in the whole truth, where they before had only a part of it. Glory be to God forever. Praise the Lord, O my soul, for this glorious gospel light, and for using us, poor, weak, unprofitable servants, as instruments in his hands of leading some poor souls to the knowledge of the whole truth as it is in the gospel. Not unto us, not unto us, but unto God be all the glory forever. Amen, and amen.

We have withdrawn from the church, and six of its members followed us. There are some four more who have embraced the doctrine, but having no organized church of our belief they still worship there. We are now having open-air preaching. Last Lord's day, we had a very large attendance. We hope that some good may be done, in the name of the holy child Jesus, by our feeble efforts. We intend to get a large room soon, and organize meetings, so that all who have the blessed hope may have a place for worship. There is some stir amongst the popular preachers of this city. They are busily engaged in proclaiming the immortal-soul doctrine. This is now a time in which the children of God should be awake, and be ready to do their Lord's bidding. The Lord help us all to work faithfully, so that each may say "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day."

Lord, speed the day that ends our woes,
And gives us victory o'er all our foes.

THOS. H. VERGE.

From Bro. W. E. Brown.

BRO. GRANT:—I desire to say, through the Crisis, for the encouragement of those interested in "Lord's Tent," lately and for the first time pitched in this State, in Springwater, under the supervision of Bro. B. P. Stevens, that the meeting was an interesting and successful effort. Many rejoice in the light and spiritual strength there received. Fourteen were baptized, and a company of thirty covenanted together in church capacity. The meeting continued about five weeks, conducted by Brn. Cogswell, P. A. Smith, Stevens, Fenn, and Wendell. The tent is now in this place, and an excellent meeting in progress. Seven have already arisen, some as the first public step towards a contemplated christian life; others to recommence the same, renewing their broken covenant with God.

Our meetings here, now in their third week of progress, have been conducted by Brn. Stevens, C. H. Williams, Miles and Wendell. The usual opposition is met here as elsewhere; but the truth is taking strong hold of the minds of the people. The great truths of the Bible are precious, and it is blessed to know that they have a sanctifying influence on many (alas! that it were not all) who hold them. And when they do thus affect men and women, transgressors will be taught the ways of God and sinners converted unto him. We praise the Lord that we are privileged to work thus with some good results in the interests of the Lord, and his soon-coming glorious kingdom. We hope the long-expected day will reveal good results from the present effort, that we may not now or at its close be able to report. May all the lovers of Jesus pray for us, and for the success of "The Lord's Tent."

Yours in hope of soon seeing Jesus,

From Sister S. A. Cummings.

It is but few weeks since I first enjoyed the privilege of attending an Advent meeting. There I heard the truth as it is in Jesus, and I hope and trust that God has blessed it to my soul's salvation, through Jesus' blood. It is a blessed hope, that at the last great day we shall rise to meet our King, and meet together around the throne of God, to sing praises forever. We have had meetings up here in Lyndboro for some two months, and blessed good meetings they have been too. Bro. John H. Dadmun has come a long way to preach to us, and I believe his work has been blessed; and I hope and pray that God will still continue to bless it to the saving of many souls. S. A. CUMMINGS.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. J. S. AND SR. A. M. HINDS write from Wilmington, N. Y.:—"We felt badly to think we could not attend the campmeeting at Springfield; but we have much for which to be thankful. We have the Crisis, which brings us the sincere milk of the word, on which we have feasted for over five years. When it is delayed a few days, we tremble for fear it is stopped; then when we look at the donations to send it to the poor, and see it is so small, we fear it will be stopped; but it keeps coming, and we keep reading and lending, and giving them away. In consequence of happening to take up a Crisis five years ago, we gave up the doctrine of the endless misery of the wicked, and the immortality of the soul; and now wonder how any one can believe it.

We believe we are living in the midst of the last signs, that our Savior said should be when his coming would be even at the door. We intend to keep ready, hoping that Christ will soon come. We are old and feeble, and cannot get around much.

We wish to let all the brethren and sisters know that we have remembered, and loved them, and are thankful for the opportunities that we have had of forming an acquaintance with a few of them, and for the kindness shown us when we were in need. Brethren and sisters, keep on writing letters for the Crisis, for you don't know how much we enjoy the reading of them."

BRO. S. W. TUTTLE writes from Sherburn, N. Y., Aug. 17th:—"I have acted as a missionary for you. I have given away your paper to all who will take it. I have sent it to friends in different directions. I have taken some pains to get ministers to take it. I read it to every one who will hear me. I keep it lying on the table and stands, and on the beds, and sometimes in my hands and pocket. I do up things in the paper to send to my neighbors. Sometimes I do up a minister's dinner in it, so as to be sure he will get the paper. Some say it is not fit to read, and it will do more hurt than good. Some say the advent of Christ will not take place in a thousand years, and some think it will never take place.

"I never have seen one of your preachers, nor one of your numbers; but after all, I think my old-fashioned orthodoxy has been somewhat shaken by reading the Crisis. I should not be disappointed if the advent should take place any day; for I am looking for it, and praying that I may be found ready."

SR. HANNAH CURTIS writes:—"How cheering to the weary pilgrim is this blessed promise: 'I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.' 'So shall we ever be with the Lord,' where death shall never break the family circle; where the funeral procession, with its mournful tread, is never seen, and there is no open grave to throw its gloom over the countenance of the living. A home where the hand of persecution disturbs not the true bliss of God's ransomed ones; where the glory of God shines forth in splendor exceeding the brightness of ten thousand suns; where the hills and valleys resound with sweetest music, and the innumerable hosts mingle in purest friendship. There long-parted friends embrace each other again, conscious of immortality."

"Then, waiting brethren, let us sing,
He will not tarry long;
And fill with love the hours that bring
The glory of our song."

A PROCLAMATION FROM THE NEW GOVERNMENT.

The following proclamation has been issued by the new Government:—

"Republique Francais,
"Ministere de l'Interieur.

"The decheance has been pronounced in the Corps Legislatif. A Republic has been proclaimed at the Hotel de Ville, and a Government of National Defence, composed of eleven members and all the Deputies of Paris, has been constituted and ratified by popular acclamation. Their names are Arago, Emanuel Cremieux, Jules Favre, Jules Ferry, Gambetta, Garnier-Pages, Glais-Bezoin, Eugene Pelletan, M. Picard, Rochefort and Jules Simon. Gen. Trochu will at the same time continue in the exercise of the powers of Governor of Paris, and is appointed Minister of War in place of Gen. Palikao. Please placard immediately, and, if necessary, have proclaimed by the public crier this declaration.

For the Government of National Defence.
Minister of the Interior,
Leon Gambetta.

Paris, 4th day of September, 1870, at 6 o'clock P. M.

The officers of the Provisional Government at Paris are distributed as follows:—Minister of the Interior, Leon Gambetta; Minister of Foreign Affairs, Pierre Magne; Minister of Public Instruction, Jules Simon; Minister of Justice, Emanuel Cremeiux; Minister of War, General Trochu; President of the Council, M. Grevo; Secretary General of the Provisional Government, Andre Laverte.

Two seals have been placed on the doors of the Corps Legislatif.

Proclamation to the Garde Nationale.

The following has been issued:—

"Those on whom your patriotism has just imposed the formidable mission of defending the country thank you for your brave devotion. To your resolution is due the civic victory which restores liberty to France. It has not cost a drop of blood. Personal power is no more; the nation entire resumes her rights to her arms; she is ready to die in defence of the soul you have given her back; her soul, which despotism had stifled. You will maintain with firmness, the execution of the laws, rivaling our noble army you will show us together the road to victory. The Government has decreed that the fabricatior and the sale of arms shall be absolutely free."

It is reported that a vote declaring that the Emperor forfeited his claim to the throne has been carried by—yeas 185 to nays none. The people are wild with excitement, and are rushing through the streets bearing placards with the vote of the Corps Legislatif inscribed thereon. There is so much confusion in the city, and such immense crowds about the Corps Legislatif, that it is impossible at present to get a faithful account of the business transacted by the Deputies.

The correspondent of the Daily News at Paris, says at 3 o'clock on Sunday afternoon, he saw the Palace of the Tuileries invaded by a mob which tore down the throne, destroyed everything marked with Imperial bees and other Napoleonic insignia, and carried away and cast into the Seine all the busts, statues and pictures of Bonaparte. Henri Rochefort was borne in triumph to the Hotel de Ville. In these scenes the soldiers fraternized with the people and all shouted, "Vive la France!" They laughed and wept with joy and embraced one another.

The excitement created in London and in the provincial English towns by the news is intense.

The Paris journals, without exception, urge the nation to make an unyielding defence, and declare the dismemberment of France impossible. The King of Prussia, they say, proclaimed that he was warring only against Napoleon. If it now becomes evident that he is warring against the French people, the struggle must be of extermination. The fleet must be ordered to treat the seaports of Germany as the Prussian armies treat the towns of Alsace and Lorraine. The enemy must be made to feel what united Republican France can accomplish. All men here must bear arms.

Varennes, 8 oclock, Sunday morning. What a thrilling moment was that of my meeting with Napoleon. He was dejected but dignified. I assigned as his place of immediate stay Wilhelmhouse, near Cassel. Our meeting took place at a small cottage house opposite the western glacis of Sedan. When summoned to it I was in the saddle inspecting the positions before the place. You must imagine my reception among the troops. It was indescribable. In exultation it was overwhelming. At dusk I ended a five hours' ride and at one in the morning returned hither. May God aid us further. William.

The Prussians were reported at St. Quentin last night, advancing on Paris. Montmedy still holds out.

McMahon surrendered with 8000 men, and not with 80,000 as first reported.

There is no more of McMahon's army. It was 80,000 strong when it began fighting, and has been scattered everywhere.

Paris, Sept. 6. Marshal Bazaine still maintains his position at Metz, notwithstanding the strength of the army which is guarding and preventing his escape.

The total force now under arms in France, including the Garde Nationale and the Garde Mobile, is 200,000.

Decrees absolving citizens from their oaths to the Empire, and abolishing stamps on journals, have been issued.

It is now positively asserted that the Empress left Paris Sunday afternoon, going to Belgium to rejoin the Prince Imperial. She quitted the palace by the entrance on the quay, having with her but a servant.

Rome, Sept. 7. The proclamation of the French Republic causes the most profound sensation here. The arrests by the authorities, which were numerous before this event, now become innumerable. Hundreds have been imprisoned on the charge of conspiracy.

The occupation of Rome by the Italian troops is expected immediately.

Paris, Sept. 7. Reports received through the Viceroy's officers state that Metz is thoroughly provisioned, and that Bazaine will certainly hold out to the end. The force at Lyons is now fully 150,000 men, about half of whom served in the regular army, fleet or marines. The effective French armies are estimated at 700,000, and the Ministry believe it can be raised to a million within three months.

London, Sept. 8. There was an immense mass meeting held at Newcastle on the Tyne, last evening, to express sympathy with the French in the war against Prussia.

Paris, Sept. 8. The Prussians attempted to cross on pontoons between Pont Juifs and Pont Austerlitz, and were absolutely annihilated by mitrailleures posted at Pont de Pecheurs.

Paris papers refer obscurely to a new murderous engine for the defence of the city. They now claim to have more than 100,000 armed men within the walls of the city.

The Journal de Paris says that we are on the eve of another revolution.

There is a rumor from Marseilles that a Republic of Italy had been proclaimed in Florence and that Humbert, the Crown Prince, had been named President.

The Pope still retains the services of his legionaries, though the Italians are preparing to enter Rome.

Paris, Sept. 10. The is considerable excitement this evening on the receipt of the favorable news. A report is in circulation that Marshal Bazaine has succeeded in cutting his way out of Metz, through the Prussian army, and is now marching toward Paris. This report had a very decided effect on the Bourse, and rentes advanced to 52 francs.

The afternoon papers report the Prussians demanded the surrender of Laon, when the French commandant opened the gates and the Prussian officers and soldiers entered. When they were well inside the French commandant fired the mine, blowing up the citadel and killing and wounding a great number of the enemy.

A large French army is forming in Normandy, which will be commanded by Trochu in person, and operate on the German lines, in case Paris is besieged.

The Germans are said to have lost 80,000 men in the battles around Sedan.

Asiatic cholera prevails among the troops besieging Metz.

London, Sept. 10. It is stated here for a certainty that Napoleon will cede to Prussia enough French territory to indemnify her for the expenses of the war. Napoleon has stated to Bismark that had he not declared war as he did the Republican mob at Paris would have hung him.

The Journal de St. Petersburg (official organ) says: The French democracy cannot have France; while the effects of its rule must be disastrous. Its ideas of solidarity are Utopian. France glories in a Republic, as she once did in an Empire. Let her try the experiment, but she must beware of dragging in other nations. The Journal condemns the language of Victor Hugo. While the bombardment of Paris would be a crime, words like these will never promote peace.

At nine o'clock on Thursday night, M. De Lesseps, who was not recognized at the time, walked into the Marine Hotel, at Hastings, and inquired for the Prince Imperial. M. Dupree, the custodian of the Prince, was summoned, and after a brief conversation, the gentlemen left the house, but soon returned with two ladies, dressed as Sisters of Charity, one of whom was the Empress Eugenie. The Empress felt so strong that she was suffered to see the Prince, without notice or preparation. The scene at the meeting of mother and child, say those who witnessed it, is indiscribable. The next day the Empress was ill, and Dr. Blakinton and a surgeon were summoned to attend her. It is a remarkable coincidence that these medical gentlemen are the same that prescribed for Louis Phillippe on his landing at Hastings, twenty-two years ago.

Advices from Rome represent that the Pope is making preparations to meet the transfer of the Italian Government to Rome. It is reported that he will retire to the Castle Gendolfo as soon as the Italians approach the city.

Rome, Sept. 11. Martina arrived yesterday and had an interview with Cardinal Antonelli.

The idea is prevalent that the resistance of the Papal army is not likely to be serious. Many Cardinals and Prelates of eminence advise the concluding of an arrangement with the Kingdom of Italy relative to the future status of the Pope.

London, Sept. 10. From information received at the Prussian embassy in this city, it is certain that King William has resolved to totally ignore the present revolutionary government in Paris, as he considers it destitute of all shadow of authority. In the event of the occupation of Paris by the Prussian armies, King William will treat only with officials recognized by the Emperor Napoleon.

London, Sept. 8. The following report of the declaration by the French Minister comes to me from a private correspondent, whose position enables him to know the facts, and who guarantees the accuracy of the statements; Jules Favre had been appealed to for a quasi-official sanction to a Republican demonstration in Madrid, with an intimation of Prim that he could be president of a Spanish republic. Favre replied: "The government of France will not at this moment make any movement to encourage a Republican Spain, and would even prefer that it should not be declared. The reason which obliges us to refuse is that republicanism, so spread, would alienate and terrify Russia, and imperil negotiations pending between the Provisional Government and Russia, for an alliance offensive and defensive against Prussia, should the latter prove too exacting as to terms of peace. In other words, if this alliance takes place, and it is on the point of realization, Russia marches straight upon Berlin. She has already begun to arm and send troops to her Western frontier. If you ask what can tempt Russia, the answer is that the same military strength which Prussia has now directed against France will, sooner or later, be turned against Russia, with the view to acquire all the German provinces of Russia."

My correspondent adds: "You may make use of this intelligence, for it cannot long remain a secret. It may be depended upon absolutely."

Ostend, Sept. 12. Napoleon has arrived at Cassel, accompanied by Generals Felix Douay, Lebrun and his staff of French officers on parole. The Prussian military and civil authorities in full uniform received him at the station with an imperial salute. The Emperor wore a Lieutenant General's uniform, but no sword.

By order of King William, two Chamberlains of the Court of Prussia attend the Emperor.

Paris, Sept 12. The Ministry have just made public the following important intelligence: The Prussians attacked Toul at 5 P. M., and persisted until 9 in the evening. They were, however, constantly repulsed and many of their batteries dismounted. More than 10,000 Prussians were placed hors du combat.

At Montmedy on Thursday the garrison splendidly repulsed the Prussian attack.

Berlin, Sept. 12. The official report of the capitulation of Sedan states that the total number of prisoners taken was 122,000. The crowd of wounded has been reduced since the reopening of the railways, and all the dead in the fields around the city have been buried.

It is said that the Pope is considering the offer of refuge in one of the British frigates.

All Italy in the meantime is arming. The first class of troops have been called out; the second class to follow.

Thirty thousand men will join standards by the 20th. Four regiments of grenadiers passed through this morning to the frontier. France has recalled all the French soldiers under the Papal flag. In many towns of the Papal States the Provisional Government is already proclaimed.

The Tribune's Special at Rome telegraphs that the troops have crossed the frontier. Gen. Cadoran has issued a proclamation to the Roman people.

The Tribune's special at Florence, the 7th inst., says that the troops are violently excited and impatient. The Cabinet are reconsidering the resolution, but the people are bent on going to Rome, with or without the Government.

London, Sept. 12. An outbreak is reported in the province of Viterbo. The people surrounded the Papal Zouaves in their intrenchments at Viterbo, Montefiascone and Valentano and threatened to attack them. Order was restored in the name of the King of Italy.

An arrangement for the occupation of the Papal territory has been agreed to. A plebiscitum is to be taken, by which the inhabitants are to decide for the Pope or King as their civil ruler, the decision to be binding on both. In the meantime the Italian troops will hold the Roman territory until the voting is over, and if the result is adverse the King will withdraw. The Papal towns are sending petitions to the Italian Government for protection. Naples urges the King not to hesitate to make Rome the Capitol of the nation. The official journal of the Government at Florence justifies the occupation of St. Peters, maintaining it as necessary for the Pope as for Italy. The journal hopes that the Pontiff will accept the guardianship of the Italian Government.

BEFORE STRASBOURG.

Strasboourg, Sept. 8, via. London.

Our special correspondent with the German army before Strasbourg, telegraphs under date of September 8 as follows:

The siege of Strasbourg continues with great vigor, and the Prussians are making the greatest efforts to secure its reduction.

Four thousand Baden troops are working night and day in the third line of trenches, quite near the city and under constant fire from the defences.

Over two thousand citizens have been killed.

The scream of the shells can be heard for a distance of one mile.

The beautiful Cathedral, which was used as an observatory, is partly destroyed.

There are now over five hundred cannon bearing upon the citadel and forty thousand Baden troops ready to enter as soon as the walls are broken.

Over twenty thousand refugees are within the walls suffering all the terrors of bombardment.

The fortifications are slowly burning.

The Germans captured have their heads cut off and stuck on poles.

Hundreds of Germans expelled have been killed between the fires of the two parties.

The city is in flames in twenty different places, and the rabble are pillaging the houses and making a destruction of everything they can lay hold of.

There are daily thunder storms, and the Rhine has risen, driving the inhabitants to the cellars.

The people are fighting for places in the sewers to escape destruction from the shells, which are poured by hundreds into the streets.

Six hundred citizens were buried by the falling of buildings.

Every night the horizon is starred for miles like a mimic sunset with the blaze of the Baden batteries.

Horseflesh is the only meat to be obtained in the city, and the inhabitants are on the verge of starvation.

Awful scenes are witnessed. Many have been killed in bed, and the commander shoots at once all who talk of surrender.

The mob is rioting nightly and demanding surrender.

The city has not fired a gun since the 6th. It is under fire from three sides.

The sluices, which furnished the city with water, are destroyed, thereby adding to the sufferings of the people.

It is known that there are two hundred thousand Chassepots stored in Strasbourg.

The immediate surrender of the city is predicted.

There are only seven thousand regular troops now in the city.—Journal. E. H.

Conn. Campmeeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a campmeeting in a beautiful grove, on the land of Chauncey Dunham, two and one half miles south of the R. R. Station at Plainville, Ct., commencing Monday, Sept. 12th, 1870, and continuing over the following Sabbath. Plainville is at the junction of the H. P. & F. and N. H. & N. railroads. Conveyance from the station to camp-ground not to exceed twenty-five cts. for each person. As far as practicable, reach Plainville by noon trains. We shall endeavor to provide wholesome food for all all who wish, but do not propose to invite saint or sinner to patronize Vanity Fair on ground consecrated to God. Provision will be made for those coming with horses.

Our object is to worship and glorify God, to strengthen the weak, promote brotherly love, and win sinners to Christ. To this end, we invite all who love our Lord Jesus Christ to join with us, from far and near. The deep, dark clouds of national distress, together with the muttering thunders of the final conflict, are the startling summons to meet the Bridegroom. Let us come, then, as pilgrims and strangers to prepare for the event, instead of fashionable devotees to eat and to drink. Come, brethren and sisters, consecrated to God, ready to work for him, that in the great judgment day many sheaves may be gathered as fruits of this meeting. Amen.

REDUCTION OF FARE.

The following arrangements have been effected, good from Sept. 10th to the 20th, inclusive: On the H. P. & F. R. R. campmeeting tickets at thirty per cent discount can be obtained at stations between Waterbury and Willimantic, for Plainville. No reduction of fare east of Willimantic. On the N. H. and N. R. R. regular tickets must be bought at Plainville, and free return passes will be furnished on the camp-ground. Those coming from Mass. will go to Westfield, thence direct to Plainville.

The Maine Mission tent will be with us, and those who go with it, we trust, to add to the interest of the meeting. We hope there will be a general rally of ministers and people, filled with grace and zeal, that our meeting may prove a success. The committee will be on the ground Monday, Sept. 12th, when it is hoped as many will get settled as possible.

To all interested in having a State Conference organized in Ohio: Beloved brethren in Christ,—Believing that the end of all things is at hand, and what we do must be done quickly, and that the Lord has raised us up as a people to herald the coming kingdom, and to lift our warning voice, and cry aloud, and spare not, and in earnest tones bid the slumbering myriads of earth's sons and daughters to prepare for solemn judgment; and believing we can better accomplish the great work allotted us to do, we have, after advising with brethren, thought best to appeal to every Advent church in the State, and where there is no church, to individuals, who are interested in forming such a conference, to write at once to Eld. E. McCullock, Pastor of the Advent Church in Nevada, Ohio; and, if sufficient interest is manifest, we shall issue a call for a conference, to be held immediately after the campmeetings are over. For the World's Crisis.

I LOVE TO THINK OF JESUS.

I love to think of Jesus,
That dear beloved Son,
Who did his life a ransom give,
To die for every one.

I love to think his toils are past,
And he no more can die;
No more the rugged cross to bear
Up Calvary's mountain high.

No more the nail prints in his hands,
No thorns shall deck his brow;
But for us on his Father's throne
He's interceding now.

I know he suffered all this shame
For all mankind and me;
What shall I render to his name?
Where shall my praises be?

Dear Savior, I will render praise
While on this earth I stay;
May I be found at thy right hand,
When earth shall pass away.

May I through life be ever found
Confessing thee my friend;
Before this world my cross to bear,
And thy blest cause defend.

BIBLE CHRONOLOGY.

We find that in prophecy symbols are used to make the truth plain, or to get an idea to our minds. So it was in Christ's time. He made use of symbols and parables to make the truth plain, and therefore it is a proper way to bring prophecy to our minds more clearly, to represent it by a diagram showing the different points, their commencing, ending and connection with each other.

The first point seen is the 69 weeks, or 483 years of Daniel 9: 25, commencing B. C. 488, and ending at A. D., or the Christian era. The next point is the beginning of the 2300 days (or years of Daniel 8: 14,) which span the whole length of the vision, at the close of which the sanctuary is to be cleansed, which according to prophecy would end in A. D. 1875. The next point to notice is the 70 weeks or 490 years of Daniel 9: 24, which you will see commence with the 2300, or at the pushing of the ram as spoken of in Daniel 8: 4, (B. C. 426,) and end when the desolations come upon Daniel's people at A. D. 65, or the commencement of the war on Jerusalem, thereby leaving 1810 years of the vision to be fulfilled. Now by looking back again you will see that there is another prophecy of Daniel 9: 26, of the threescore and two weeks which must come in somewhere to make it complete; and by examining you will see that it started B. C. 406, and terminated at A. D. 30, or at the crucifixion of Christ, making the 62 weeks or 434 years. Now we find another prophecy in Daniel 9: 27, of one week, or seven years, which we find began with the war on Jerusalem, at A. D. 65, and terminated at its close in A. D. 72, making one week, or seven years, according to prophecy.

As some obscurity may rest on the minds of honest inquirers concerning the remaining periods in Daniel 9th, we will give very briefly what we consider to be their true application.

1st. We will commence with the sixty-nine weeks of verse 25. We regard this to be a [illegible]ate and distinct measurement of time, [illegible] from the seventy weeks, [illegible]ded. They were [illegible] interval from the [illegible]ears' captivity of [illegible] birth of Christ; [illegible] link in Bible chro[illegible]lonian captivity to the [illegible]e sixty-nine weeks (or [illegible] be reckoned from the first [illegible], king of Persia, as he is the [illegible]hat issued the commandment to [illegible] and build Jerusalem. And he did it by divine appointment. (See Isa. 44: 28, and 45: 13.)

That there is definite time given in prophecy to the birth of Christ, may be seen from Paul's statement in Gal. 4: 4, "But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son made of a woman." Here we learn that this prophecy in Dan. 9: 25, was fulfilled by the birth of Christ according to time.

2d. The sixty-two weeks of verse 26, are also a separate and distinct measurement of time from the previous periods; and specially relate to the time of the crucifixion of Christ. They date from the thirty-second year of Artaxerxes, king of Persia, at the completion and dedication of the wall of Jerusalem. (See Neh. 12: 27, and 13: 6.) The angel says to Daniel, verse 25, "The street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times. And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off." The building of the wall of Jerusalem is the event specified by the angel, as the point from which to date the sixty-two weeks, or 434 years. The thirty-second year of Artaxerxes synchronizes with B. C. 406, therefore the 62 weeks, dated B. C. 406, must end A. D. 29. After which Christ was crucified, i. e., in A. D. 30. For further proof on this point, see Sheldon's work on Adventism, Part 2d, pages 205, 208.

3d. The last period in Dan. 9th, is the one week of verse 27, "And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week." The personal pronoun "he," we think, refers to the Roman prince, the people of whom should "destroy the city [of Jerusalem] and the sanctuary." "And he [the Roman prince] shall confirm the covenant with many for one week," (i. e., seven years, the length of the war that destroyed Jerusalem.) We think the covenant here specified is recorded in Deut., chap. 28, where blessings and cursings are laid before the Jews; blessings for obedience, and curses for disobedience; called "the words of the covenant." Deut. 29: 1. And the Jews accepted the curses, even all of them, when they rejected Christ, crying, "His blood be on us, and on our children!"

In the seven years' war in which Jerusalem was destroyed, was the culminating point of all the curses recorded in Deut. 28, to which the reader is referred. In a most significant and striking manner has the Lord confirmed this covenant, through the Roman prince, as a special rod in his hand, that has forever ended the political history of the Jewish nation; dating from the seven years' war, that commenced in A. D. 65, in which Jerusalem was destroyed. "And in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease," which was fulfilled in A. D. 70, when the temple was burnt, and all Jewish sacrifices ceased forever. We will now give [illegible] the Commentators on Dan. 9: 26, 27, [illegible] the Jews, have here [illegible] Dr. Boothroyd [illegible] very judiciously, [illegible] the prophecy, so far as concerns the Messiah. 'And the people of the prince.' This certainly ought not to be applied to the Messiah, but to Titus and his army, for the city was not destroyed by Christians, but by the Romans. The wrong pointing led to a faulty division of the verses, and confounded two parts of the prophecy perfectly distinct. The Romans destroyed both the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof was with a flood, attended with nothing but desolation and destruction, till the nation was destroyed or scattered through the earth. 'And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week,'—that is of years; . . . in the midst of this period, A. D. 70, all Jewish sacrifices ceased forever. The reckoning days for years and weeks, of such years, is not peculiar to the Scriptures. Varro says he was entered into the twelfth week of his years, i. e., his 84th year. (Quoted in Bp. Chandler's Def.)

From the above extracts, we see there are some grammarians and scholars, who interpret these verses aside from the Messiah. In the foregoing pages we have given our reasons for believing that the "70 weeks" ended A. D. 65, and that the "2300 days" will end in A. D. 1875. The reason of the confusion and darkness that has formerly existed as to the true point for the termination of the "2300 days," was from not regarding the express language of Gabriel to Daniel, (in chap. 9: 24,) where he assigns the 70 weeks, (or 490 years) of the 2300 years of Daniel 8: 14, to the Jews, and their holy city Jerusalem.

This period being "cut off" from the 2300, specially upon the Jews and Jerusalem; and as neither the Jews nor Jerusalem were destroyed till after A. D. 65, no good reason can be given for attempting to end the "70 weeks" at the cross in A. D. 33. The same is true as to the "69 weeks," and "62 weeks." All these periods were formerly assigned a common commencement, and made to end at or near the "cross," when in fact, only the "62 weeks" ended in close proximity to that point.

We now request the reader to carefully examine and compare with the prophecy, what has herein been presented; for if our conclusions are legitimate, we are approaching with rapidity the day of judgment, and in a very brief period the destiny of the whole human family will be decided by the "Man of Calvary," as he comes in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. Amen.

THE MASSES.

"How shall we reach the masses?" is the question discussed in church papers and preachers' meeting now; just as if no light had been shed on the subject in the history of the past.

Jesus reached the masses. He went forth with his heart full of love, speaking to men in a common sense style, of things of the deepest, highest interest, and the "common people heard him gladly."

Martin Luther reached the masses. The great truth, "The just shall live by faith," set his soul on fire; and going forth speaking, with an honest heart and glowing lips, the masses, throughout the length and breadth of Germany, listened with rapt attention to his burning words.

John Wesley reached the masses. He got his own heart "strangely warmed," laid aside formalism, left the gothic churches, where the people were not, and to which they would not come, and went forth into the fields and public streets, and plain buildings, where the people were, or could be gathered; and then in earnest, affectionate pleadings, besought them to be reconciled unto God—reaching, sometimes, ten thousand ears at once.

Our early Methodist fathers, in this country, reached the masses. They had no fine churches, no psalters, no richly, gaudily dressed members, to stand in the way of truth; but they had warm hearts, and a winning story to tell about Jesus; and going forth where the people were, and into the great woods where they would come, they told their story in the artless eloquence of nature and common sense, and the multitude gathered around them, to hear of Jesus.

Charles Spurgeon reaches the masses. He has no fine cathedral, no gaudy church, opera-like in its appointments; but a vast, plain edifice, into which the masses can come, with plain, free seats, made for people with plain clothes to sit upon; and then, without boring the people with quartette singing, or psalters, or musty prayers composed two hundred years ago, or manuscript sermons, he has them all to sing, and then gives them a dish of good English common sense, about Jesus and eternal life, that makes ears tingle. And him, too, the people hear gladly. Policemen cannot keep the people out.

"Reach the masses?" Suppose that some man, with religion in his heart, common sense in his head, and money in his pocket, should build a plain edifice, with seats for five thousand, near the "Five Points" in New York; and that two or three hundred warm-hearted christians, dressed in plain clothes, should spend much of the week in distributing tracts in that populous locality, and in inviting the poor creatures to come to the great, plain church; and then suppose that a warm-hearted, godly minister, who knew something about human nature as well as the classics—having tact to touch the springs of action in the human heart—should preach Jesus to them on the Sabbath day; don't you imagine that the masses would be reached?

If I am to answer how an over-dressed, over-fed Church, worshiping in a splendid edifice, with rented pews, where manuscript sermons are read by scholarly formalists, hymns are sung by choirs without any natural music to touch the human heart, and prayers are intoned for the human ear rather than for the ear of God;—I give it up. The thing cannot be done in that way. The great, natural heart, that beats in the bosom of the uncultured mass of the race, cannot be touched by any such unnatural means as these.

But let such a church get back to the beautiful simplicity of Methodism, or of the Lutheran movement, or of Jesus of Galilee,—dressing plainly, meeting in plain and lowly churches, where the rich and poor come together before the Lord, to hear of a common Saviour in the language of a common people, (which is the language of the Bible,) and to hear hymns sung to music which though not according to the rules of the art, is yet full of the pathos of nature,—and the masses around them will be reached; for the people are keenly susceptible, and are dying and dying because such christians with such [illegible] don't come and save them. The masses have always been reached when such appliances have been used. They never have been, neither can they be, by the super stylish mode in vogue in so many places. The simple kind of christianity, and the mode of operation introduced into the world by Jesus Christ, and set forth and practiced by Luther, Wesley, Asbury, Spurgeon and others, has reached and always will reach the masses. The kind just repudiated has no power over the people, if it has over anybody else; and the sooner those to whom has been committed the Gospel of God see it, the better for all concerned.—Earnest Christian.

For the World's Crisis.

O LET ME DIE YOUNG.

O let me die young!—'tis a sorrowful page,
The tale of life's journey from youth to old age;
'Tis a story of hopes that too early are crushed,
Of wild, restless yearnings, that will not be hushed;
'Tis a record of wasted or misemployed time;
Of follies, of frailties, too often of crime;
Of years by misfortune and trials o'erhung;
I shrink from the picture,—O let me die young.

Yet, yet while I live, O my Father, I pray,
May I not be unmindful to work while 'tis day;
Let me not idly slumber on life's busy wave,
I shall have sleep enough in the night of the grave;
But may I so labor, that some who remain
May say, when I'm gone, she hath not lived in vain;
Some fond hearts that love me, perchance, might be wrung,
But time would soon heal them, then let me die young.

NAPOLEON.

As this emperor has been the theme of thousands of tongues and pens; the supposed subject of special prophecy; the champion of the Romish church, as well as of the Napoleonic ideas; the centre of European diplomacy, sovereignty, and yet also of human liberty; it is becoming to answer those who ask, "Where now is your God, seeing Napoleon fails to fulfill the destiny you had assigned him in the light of prophecy?"

Answer. Our God is in the heavens. He is doing whatsoever he pleaseth. Ps. 115; Dan. 3: 29. All flesh is as grass, and the glory of man as the flower of the grass; the grass withereth, and the flower fadeth; so is man (Napoleon and Pius IX. not excepted) that fadeth away in his ways. 1 Pet. 1: 25; Jer. 1: 11. Yet the facts that did underlie his presumed destiny, as the political paramour of the papal harlot, do lie there still. Nay, this mighty whirl in human affairs reaches Rome. Dread dismay sits in evil augury over St. Peter's—broods over the councils of the Vatican, and allies "the man of" Rome (seemingly) with the destiny of this declining Napoleonic dynasty.

With profound awe I await the decisions of the Almighty in the evolutions of his providence.

"Keep silence all created things,
And wait your Maker's nod;
My soul stands trembling while she sings
The honors of her God.
Here he exalts neglected worms
To sceptres and a crown;
But there, the following page he turns,
And treads the monarch down."

There is nothing yet to lessen confidence, seeing that the perils of the pope are about commensurate with those of Napoleon. Nay, seeing that the general picture given by prophecy is being filled out before the eyes of all men.

LARGE LITTLES.

Did a holy life consist of one or two noble deeds—some signal specimens of doing, or enduring, or suffering—we might account for the failure, or reckon it small dishonor to turn back in such a conflict. But a holy life is made up of small things of the hour, and not the great things of the age, that fill up a life like that of Paul or John—like that of Rutherford, or Brainerd, or Martyn.

The avoidance of little evils, little sins, little inconsistencies, little weaknesses, little follies, little indiscretions and imprudences, little foibles, little indulgencies of self and of the flesh, little acts of indolence, or indecision, or slovenliness, or cowardice, little equivocations or aberrations from high integrity, little bits of covetousness and penuriousness, little exhibitions of worldliness and gayety, little indifferences to the feelings or wishes of others, little touches of shabbiness and meanness, outbreaks of temper, or crossness, or selfishness, or vanity; the avoidance of such little things as these goes far to make up at least the negative beauty of holy life.

And then attention to the little duties of the day and hour, in public transactions, or private dealings, or family arrangements; to little words, and looks, and tones; little self-denials, and self-restraints, and self-forgetfulness; little plans of kindness and thoughtful consideration for others; to punctuality, and method, and true aim in the ordering of each day—these are the active developments of a holy life, the rich and divine mosaics of which it is composed.

It is of small things that a great life is made up; and he who will acknowledge no life as great save that which is built up of great things, will find little in Bible character to admire or copy.—Bonar.

THINGS I WONDER ABOUT.

I wonder if all christians think about what they are doing. I wonder if christians think they have something to do. I wonder if christians who find fault with others, ever do anything themselves. I wonder if those who receive papers to read free, ever think what it costs to print them. I wonder if the world is ever converted, whether it will be by those who receive, but never give. I wonder if those who profess to love Christ would go to work, if their love would not increase. I wonder why christians, so called, get angry when you talk about using tobacco. I wonder if they think others believe they think it is right. I wonder if any person gets angry when you tell them about something they are doing that is right. I wonder if you ever saw a person get angry about tobacco, when everything they did was done for Christ. I wonder when men are to eat and to drink for the glory of God, if eating tobacco is included. I wonder when I see men calling themselves ministers, with pipes and cigars in their mouths, whether they think they are keeping their bodies fit temples for the Holy Ghost to dwell in. I wonder when such men say it costs them more for tobacco than for their bread, that they do not quit it. I wonder such men are not ashamed of themselves on account of their wives, whose clothes are so smoked that strangers can smell tobacco smoke without trying, when they meet them. I wonder how ministers who claim they are called to preach the gospel, can pass the door where persons are assembled to worship God, without going in and taking part, when they are invited to take part. I wonder if Jesus, when he called them, told them who they should preach to, and who they should not. I wonder if they ever read where Jesus said: "Go preach my gospel to every creature." I wonder what kind of an account they will give to their Master when he comes and finds [illegible].—The Church.

THE EDGE OF THE CATARACT.

Many years since a steamboat was accustomed to make daily trips between Buffalo and Niagara Falls. The nearest point at which she could approach the mighty cataract was Chippewa Creek, about ten miles distant, on the Canada side. One day there was a pleasure excursion, and several hundred men, women and children, went down from Buffalo.

After spending the day in all sorts of amusements, in looking upon the falls, admiring the rainbow, passing under Table Rock, and behind the falling water, they gathered themselves on the boat, toward night, to return to their homes. By some miscalculation of the engineer, sufficient steam had not been generated, and when, after passing out of the creek, the boat met the strong, rapid current of the river, instead of going forward, she was slowly borne backward toward the dreadful cataract.

The people on board, as may well be imagined, became instantly alarmed. The color fled from their cheeks; they stood in speechless horror; the roar of the cataract sounded fearfully distinct in their ears, as slowly, slowly, they were borne back toward it.

At length the engineer bethought him of the oil with which he lubricated the machinery. He threw it into the furnace—the flames blazed up intensely—steam was generated more rapidly—the wheel moved round with increased velocity—there was a pause as the Titan forces were contending for the mastery. A moment more, and there was an upward movement.

Now, slowly, slowly, the boat made way against the current. In a short time the point of the danger was passed, and a long, heavy sigh of relief broke from the bosom of every one on board. A venerable, gray-haired man was there among them. He lifted his hat, and said, in a voice trembling with emotion: "The Lord hath delivered us. Great is the name of the Lord. Let us pray."

And down the deck the multitude kneeled, while the heartfelt offering of thanksgiving went up to God, who had wrought for them so great a salvation. But it did not end there. The feeling that had been awakened by the near approach of death did not, with all, pass away when the danger was over, as is very often the case. Even there, on the brink of that awful precipice, some found their Savior. A revival followed in the church, to which many of them belonged—it was a Sunday-school excursion—and found peace in believing. One, a man of great wealth, dedicated it to God, in the building of a church, as a memorial of his gratitude for being snatched from destruction, both in this life and the life to come.

It is thus that the gate of heaven seems often hard by the gate of hell. God takes the heedless sinner and shakes him over the mouth of the pit; he trembles all over; he sees sin; he sees righteousness; he sees wrath; he sees grace; he sees judgment; he sees love. He looks up and calls upon the name of the Lord. The Lord saves, and the delivered soul praises him forever. A new song is put into his mouth. He rejoices in the Lord.—Ex.

HOW TO ACQUIRE ORDERLY HABITS.

In early life I might have been tracked by the confusion I left behind me; but in some odd corner of my nature was a love of beauty that was forever at war with the ugliness of disorder. When I became a housekeeper I determined to vanquish my old enemy and form a new habit. In carrying out this determination, I learned every step of the way from inherent chaos to acquired habits of order, and know of no better clue than is suggested by the saying of Archimedes: "Give me a lever long enough, and a fulcrum strong enough, and with my own weight I will move the world." One spot in a house made orderly, and kept so, will afford a fulcrum upon which to rest the lever of constant endeavor that shall move and revolutionize the whole domestic world. I began with my work basket, and found even this small beginning difficult; but I persevered and conquered. I next took in hand my bureau drawers, giving thought to their arrangement and assigning to each article a place. Closets, with their demoralizing dimness, and tempting facilities for storage, I found a sad stumbling block, but finally mastered them, too. Chaos was constantly invading unoccupied rooms, but by persistent effort the victory was won. I could think into every corner of my small world, and feel that it was permeated by my individuality; that crude matter had been subdued and made subordinate to mind.

Cleanliness, order, fitness, and a degree of beauty in one's surroundings, are essential to the best activity of both mind and body. Order is heaven's first law, and we cannot disregard it without wasting our best powers in unnecessary friction.—Arthur's Home Magazine.

THE WOMAN IN DESPAIR.

When H. W. Beecher was settled over his church in Indianapolis, he was sent for to visit one of his members, who had fallen into what is called a state of despair.

This woman had for many years led a devoted and happy christian life: but now the mysterious strings of mind had become tangled and strained within her, and her disorder had taken on the form of temporary opposition to religion. She told Mr. Beecher that she was not, and never had been a christian; that she did not want to read, or even to see the Bible; that she could not pray, and did not wish to, and that she was, in fact, a miserable, lost soul.

After talking a little with her to no purpose, Mr. Beecher said, "Well, madam, I can do nothing for you unless you will promise to do as I bid you."

She signified her willingness to be guided by him.

"But," said he, "you must give me your solemn promise to do exactly as I say."

After a little hesitation she consented to make the promise.

"Give me your hand," said he. She gave it, and he made her repeat after him a very stringent obligation to obey the commands he was about to lay upon her.

The stupor of her depair was a little shaken by the agitation caused by so singular a proceeding; and when her pastor, speaking with great authority, said:

"Now, I command you not to stay shut up in the house, but to go out often into the sunshine; and I command you not to go near a meeting; not to read a word in the Bible; not to utter nor even to think [a prayer until you see me again." She was really startled into crying out, "O! I'm afraid 'tis wicked to promise that!"

"Ah!" said Mr. Beecher, firmly, "too late for regrets. Your word is pledged, and I hold you to it."

She yielded, and settled back into her stupor and gloom. Mr. Beecher kept away from her purposely; but before many days he was sent for in the greatest haste. He hurried to the woman's house, and almost before he entered it, she called out to him,—

"Make haste, I want to pray; I shall pray; I can't help praying. Tell me quick, won't you release me from my promise?"

"Why, do pray if you want to," said Mr. Beecher, with one of his sly smiles. "I release you from your promise."

Tears and prayers of heartfelt feeling soon swept away like a flood all the good sister's despair; and no more was heard about her lack of interest in religion. This was the effect that had been expected when the promise was exacted.

Would it not serve better in other similar cases than so much talk, such efforts to rouse minds naturally out of reason's control as are made with persons in despair? One woman in this state was cured by being nearly drowned in cold water. It was, however, a severe remedy. She was fastened into her chair, and pailful after pailful thrown on to her, until she shrieked for mercy to both God and man. After this she could pray well enough, and all her religious horrors vanished.

CHRIST'S INVITATION.

Come unto me, ye who are tired and sad,
Come unto me, that I may give you rest;
Come unto me, and I will make you glad;
Come and be blest.

Come, ye who struggle in a life of shame;
Come, ye whose sin God only will forgive;
Come, for I have for you a new white name;
Arise and live.

Come, ye who see not through the misty night,
The stars that out of God's own windows shine;
Come unto me, and I will give you light,
Human, divine.

My heart is yearning with a strong desire
To fold the world in tender, close embrace;
Come to me through the sanctifying fire
That hides my face.

THE LIFE STRUGGLE.

The world knows no victory to be compared with victory over our own passions. The struggle of life is between the flesh and the spirit, and one or the other finally gains the ascendancy. Every day and every hour of the christian's life is this contest going on, and sad it is to think how often it is that victory is declared in favor of this earth with its sinful passions. The apostle Paul, after having labored long and earnestly in his Lord's service—after having done more for the spread of the truth than all the other apostles, still felt that he was a human being, and liable at at any time, through the weakness of the flesh, to lose all. "I keep under my body," says he, "and bring it into subjection, lest after I have preached the gospel unto others, I myself should be a castaway." If this watchfulness was needful on the part of the aged and long-tried servant of God, what care and diligence ought we, my brethren and sisters, to exercise, lest we should lose all in an unguarded hour! Our pathway through life is thickly set with snares for our feet. The seductions of passion, the allurements of vice, things to arouse our anger and stir up our heart's feelings, await us at every turn of life's devious ways, and blessed, indeed, is that man or that woman that meets them all without harm.—Ex.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST.

The cross of Christ is the sweetest burden that ever I bore; it is such a burden as wings are to a bird, or as sails to a ship to carry me forward to my desired haven.

Those who by faith see the invisible God and the fair city, make no account of present losses and crosses.

Truly it is a glorious thing to follow the Lamb; it is the highway of glory; but when you see him in his own country at home, you will think you never saw him before.

More than Christ I can neither wish, nor pray, nor desire for you. I am sure that the saints are at best but strangers to the weight and worth of the incomparable excellence of Christ. We know not the half of what we love when we love him.

That Christ and the sinner should share heaven between them, is the wonder of salvation; what more could love do?

I find that when saints are under trials and well humbled, little sins raise great cries in the conscience; but in prosperity, conscience is a pope that gives dispensations and great latitude to our hearts. The cross, therefore, is as needful as the crown will be glorious.—Rutherford's Letters.

Gems.

— Peace cometh after the strife.

— The memory of good actions is the starlight of the soul.

— No man has a right to do as he pleases except when he pleases to do right.

— The promises with which God's word is studded, is the lamp to our feet and the light to our path.

— A pure faith will never hold its own unless it be associated with a pure practical charity.

— Be silent when a fool talks; he will cease the sooner; you cannot gain by his converse.

— Honest industry is always rewarded. No young man need complain of being kept poor, if he rolls up his sleeves, and goes cheerfully to work.

— There is a voice from the tomb sweeter than song; there is a remembrance of the dead to which we turn, even from the charm of the living.

— Our present frail existence is the unsubstantial basis upon which too many are building the fabric of their happiness; but it is building a nest upon a wave.

— An humble man is like a good tree; the more full of fruit the branches are, the lower they bend themselves. "Through much tribulation ye must enter into the kingdom of God."

— Some people, because they cannot give as much as they would like to, will not give anything. But this was not the way with the poor woman, noticed by our Savior, who cast two mites into the Lord's treasury.

The violet bows its lowly head,
And bends its yielding form;
While over head high towering oaks
Defy th' embattled storm.
The tempest o'er, while shattered oaks
Their desolations mourn,
The violet lifts its smiling face,
Without a petal torn.

— Labor is of noble birth, but prayer is the daughter of heaven. Labor has a place near the throne, but prayer touches the golden sceptre. Labor, Martha-like, is busy with much serving, but prayer sits with Mary at the feet of Jesus.

— Work for Christ is witnessing for him. As there is no other name given under heaven whereby we can be saved but the name of Jesus, so there is, in the main, no other work to do to save men except that of pointing them to him for salvation.

— As a ship held by an anchor looks as though it were going out with the tide, yet never goes, so some souls that seem constantly to be getting nearer to Christ, never come, because they are anchored and held by some secret sin.

— It is much easier to think right without doing right, than to do right without thinking right. Just thoughts may, and often do, fail of producing just deeds; but just deeds are sure to beget just thoughts.

— Study pure and holy walking if you would have your confidence firm, and have boldness and joy in God.

— It was the advice of Seneca to his friend Lucilius, in order the more diligently to keep himself up to his full duty, to imagine some great man, some strict, quick-sighted, clear-brained man, as Cato, continually looking upon him. So the christian, who would labor earnestly and successfully, must walk with Jesus,—must feel that he is ever by his side, noting all he does. But oh! how blessed is the thought that he is more than a silent spectator! He is an all-powerful helper—an ever ready and willing helper.

— He who saves in little things, can be liberal in great ones.

— He who avoids small sins, does not fall into large ones.

— He that pelts every barking dog, must pick up a great many stones.

— Cultivate an intimate acquaintance with the Scriptures.

—CLEAVING TO CHRIST.—I have seen a heavy piece of iron hanging to another—not welded, not linked, not glued to the spot—and yet it cleaved with such tenacity as to bear not only its own weight but mine too, if I choose to seize it and hang upon it. A wire charged with an electric current is in contact with its mass, and hence its adhesion. Cut that wire through, or remove it by a hair's breadth, and the piece of iron drops dead to the ground, like any other unsupported weight. A stream of life from the Lord brought in contact with a human spirit, keeps the spirit cleaving to the Lord so firmly that no power on earth or hell can wrench the two asunder. From Christ the mysterious life-stream flows, through the being of a disciple it spreads, and to the Lord it returns again. In that circle the feeblest christian is held safely; but if the circle be broken, the dependent spirit instantly drops off.—Arnot.

"GET THEE HENCE, SATAN!"

A little girl sat upon the large stone door-step of her father's house, and beside her was a boy of about the same age. He had been eating a fresh, rosy apple, and had thrown the core into the gutter beyond the walk, and watched it as the muddy water carried it from his sight; then, turning back to his playmate, who seemed absorbed in the pictures of a new book, he asked,—

"Give me a bite of your apple, Clara? mine's all gone."

"Not now; wait till I eat it," was the abstracted reply. But the voracious little fellow, not quite content to wait, took the apple up, turned it round and round, smelled it a little, and then began to toss it lightly in his hands, each time catching it again. I expected to see his teeth go into it; but he was too honest for that. At last, in an unlucky moment, it dropped from his chubby hands, and rolled across the walk into the gutter, and was borne away.

His exclamation brought the large eyes of the little girl upon him. The rich blood mounted to her brow; and with a spring she was upon her feet, with one hand raised, apparently to strike the shrinking form beside her. But it did not fall; and as she stood, her hair thrown back, the white hand poised in the air, the whole face and form showing a struggle within, I prayed that she might not be tempted. A moment more, and the clear, triumphant tones of her voice fell on my ear,—

"Get thee hence, Satan! get thee hence!"

The mother within the door heard the sound too, and, coming to them, asked the meaning. Again a blush mantled the noble brow of the child; but it was humility and shame that caused it, while, with slightly drooping head, she answered,—

"Satan wanted me to strike Freddie; but I didn't."

The mother drew her within her arms, and kissed her, saying,—

"That is right, my child; resist him, and he will flee from you."

Would that all might learn in childhood to resist the power of temptation, with the Holy Spirit's help! Truly, the world would be the better for it.—Sabbath School Messenger.

THE PERSEVERING BOY.

"Sir," said a boy, addressing a man, "do you want a boy to work for you?"

"No," answered the man, "I have no such want."

The boy looked disappointed; at least the man thought so, and he asked: "Don't you succeed in getting a place?"

"I have asked at good many places," said the boy. A woman told me you had been after a boy, but it is not so, I find."

"Don't be discouraged," said the man, in a friendly tone.

"Oh! no sir," said the boy, cheerfully, "because this is a very big world, and I feel certain that God has something for me to do in it."

"Just so, just so," said a gentleman who overheard the talk. "Come with me, my boy; I am in want of somebody like you."

He was a doctor; and the doctor thought any boy so anxious to find his work, would be likely to do it faithfully when he found it; so he took the boy into his employment and found him all that he desired.

Yes! God has something for everybody to do in this world. It's a very big world, and there's room enough for all.—The Gospel Advocate.

REST.

"Hold me, auntie." What sweet trust and loving confidence were expressed in the dear little upturned face, as Edith, tired of play, stood at my side with outstretched arms! "Hold me, auntie," and in an instant the child was folded to my bosom.

After a little time of silence and resting,—

"Auntie, do you ever want to be holded?"

"Yes, darling; very often."

"Well, then, who holds you?"

"I have the 'everlasting arms' around me. My dear little Edith cannot understand this now; but, as she grows older, I hope she will know it all. Though I cannot feel the arms of my heavenly protector, as you, darling, feel mine, sheltering you, and pressing you lovingly to my side, I know that I am as tenderly held. When you say, 'Our Father who art in heaven,' you think of the good Shepherd; and I am his little Edith, just as you are mine, he lets me rest upon him, just as you do upon me."

A slightly wondering look, a gentle smile, Thus it is with us full-grown children, tired of the toys of the world, wearied with life's trifling. O, what preciousness there is in the security of the everlasting arms! Lovingly, trustingly, we rest from all care, all folly, all strife and anxiety, on the bosom of Christ our Savior.—Christian Banner.

BE IN TIME.

I was passing through a quiet street, one evening, a short time ago, when I saw a boy about eight years of age, pulling gently his little sister by the hand.

"Come along, Kitty!" said he. "I like always to be in time."

"That's right!" I exclaimed. "Always be in time!"

People never can tell what they lose by the habit of being late. The great Lord Nelson used to say he owed all his success in life to his habit of being a quarter of an hour before the time at every engagement.—Well Spring.

A GOOD ANSWER.—"Sir," said a lad, addressing a well known merchant, "Sir, have you any berth for me on your ship? I want to earn something."

"What can you do?" asked the gentleman.

"Whatever I am put to, sir."

"What have you done?"

"I have sawed and split all mother's wood for nigh two years."

"That's enough," said the gentleman. "You may ship aboard this vessel, and I hope to see you master of her some day."

A CHILD'S REPLY.—A little boy, on asking his father to allow him to be baptized, was told that he was too young, that he might fall back when he was only a little boy. To this he made the touching reply: "Jesus has promised to carry the lambs in his arms; as I am only a little boy, it will be easier for Jesus to carry me."

AS THOU WILT.

"Many shall be purified, made white and tried"

Even so, O Father!
Though my heart is bleeding,
On the anvil keep me,
While its lessons needing;
Till I'm fitted thus to fill
The place assigned me by thy will.

Even so, O Father!
As silver when 'tis tried,
From every earthly stain
May I be purified;
So that, reflected, all may see
Thine image, Lord, enstamped on me.

Even so, O Father!
Though shrinks my heart with fear,
The trial I 'll endure
If thou, dear Christ, art near;
For, "As thy day thy strength shall be,"
Is promised even unto me.

THE HEAVENLY KINGDOM.

(Concluded.)

II.—What kingdom are the saints to inherit as their future home? Or, where are they to live through eternal ages? They must dwell in some particular locality, and we have a right to all the information on this point which God has seen fit to put into the Bible. Let us listen to some of its clear statements on this question: "Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth" (Prov. 11: 31). But when will this recompense begin? Jesus affirms: "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." (Luke 14: 14). So the matter is settled by this testimony that the recompense of the saints will be enjoyed, not in heaven above, but "in the earth," beginning not at death, but "at the resurrection of the just."

When the redeemed throng unite in singing the "new song," they are to sing, "We shall reign on the earth" (Rev. 5: 10); and this reign will not be limited to a few centuries, but "they shall reign forever and ever" (Rev. 22: 5). We are also informed that "when the Son of man shall come in his glory," and "separate" the holy from the unholy, that "then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world" (Matt. 25: 34). The very home once prepared for sinless man, and pronounced "very good," though subjected to the curse at the fall of the first Adam, is hereafter, in its renovated state, to become the home of the resurrected saints, under the supervision of the second Adam, when "there shall be no more curse" (Rev. 22: 3). "And the Lord shall reign over them in Mount Zion from henceforth, even forever. And thou, O tower of the flock, the strong hold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; and the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem" (Micah 4: 7, 8).

The "kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world," when renovated, will become the possession of the resurrected saints after the "end of the world" arrives. The Savior repeatedly speaks of "the end of the world"—not of the end of the kosmos, or material globe, but the "end of the aion," or age; by which he means the close of the world's history in its sinful and fallen condition; at which time the career of the wicked will terminate, and a bright future for the saints commence; for Christ remarks: "As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world. The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father" (Matt. 13: 40–43). Thus we learn that the wicked will be submerged in fire at the end of the world. The polluted earth will then be changed, and become the home of the redeemed, for "the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. . . . Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens, and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (2 Pet. 3: 7–13). "Of old thou hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the work of thy hands. They shall perish; . . . as a vesture shalt thou CHANGE them, and they shall be changed" (Ps. 102: 25, 26). The old earth, now under the curse, will then be made "new" by being "changed." Peter locates this "new-earth" home of the saints after the great burning day and "perdition of ungodly men"; agreeing with Daniel who "beheld till the fourth beast" [Rome] was "given to the burning flame" (Dan. 7: 11); and the angel asserts that the last horn on this beast should exist till the Ancient of Days should come, "and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom" (Dan. 7: 21, 22). The same angel affirms: "The saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever. . . . And the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High" (Dan. 7: 18, 27). This gives both the chronological and geographical location of the heavenly kingdom—after the termination of earthly kingdoms, and "under the whole heaven."

The stone that "filled the whole earth," described in the book of Daniel, is explained to mean the kingdom of God on earth, after human kingdoms have all had their day: "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever" (Dan. 2: 44). Thus after certain earthly governments have had their full time, a kingdom of heavenly origin shall "fill the whole earth," and "never be destroyed," and "stand forever." The Revelator also gives the chronological location of this heavenly kingdom: "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world ARE BECOME the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever" (Rev. 11: 14). Not till the seventh angel sounds will this kingdom be due, and then "this world" will be its location. Then the oft-repeated prayer will be answered: "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven" (Matt. 6: 10). Then "the Lord shall be King over all the earth" (Zech. 14: 9). Then "the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously" (Isa. 24: 23). Then will be fulfilled the prophetic statement of Jehovah concerning his Son: "Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion" (Ps. 2: 6). Then the statement of the Psalmist will be verified: "The meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace. . . . The Lord knoweth the days of the upright; and their inheritance shall be forever. . . . For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off. . . . The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein forever. . . Wait on the Lord and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land; when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it" (Ps. 37: 11, 18, 22, 29, 34). Then the promise of Jesus will be realized: "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth" (Matt. 5: 5). Then, too, will be verified the prophet's statement: "Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, and thy gates Praise; . . . the days of thy mourning shall be ended. Thy people shall be all righteous; they shall inherit the land forever" (Isa. 60: 18–21).

What a glorious picture! Violence and mourning will have come to an end, and the occupants of the land are "all righteous." The Revelator had a vision of this blessed future of our globe, together with the scenes connected with its introduction, in which he beheld (1) the coming of the Lord on the "great white throne"; (2) the resurrection of the dead, "small and great," from land and sea; (3) the destruction of the wicked in "the lake of fire"; and then he saw the "new-earth" home of the saints: "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I, John, saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away" (Rev. 21: 1–4).

Blessed "new-earth" home of the saved ones, free from tears, death, sorrow and pain, with the "tabernacle of God," and the saints of all ages there; "neither can they die any more." "The former things are passed away," sin is obliterated, and the curse removed. No more weeping, no more sorrow, no more dying, no more pain, and no more curse. Salvation is completed. The saints are crowned. The kingdom has come. The "King in his beauty" is among them forevermore. And the saints have bodies "fashioned like his glorious body." Glorious home, and happy company. And all is real as well as glorious. The new earth is real; the King is real, having once been dead, but raised to a deathless state; the inhabitants are real, with immortalized bodies; and the city is also real, as is evident from Paul's discourse about the two Jerusalems. In his "allegory" he speaks of Abraham's bondwoman, and free woman, and makes the bondwoman represent old Jerusalem, and the free woman to represent the new Jerusalem. Was the bondwoman a symbol of a literal city? Yes. Then the free woman is as certainly a symbol of a literal city—literal new Jerusalem.

"Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city" (Rev. 22: 14). This city is now "above," is "reserved in heaven," but is to "come down" to beautify the new world, and be the capital of Messiah's kingdom. "The nations of them that are saved shall walk in the light of it." May we be among them. Amen. W. S.

— The man who loves truth with all his heart, likewise loves those who suffer for the sake of truth.

"THAT MAN OF SIN."

Anthropos—translated man in our caption—occurs over five hundred times in the New Testament Scriptures. In more than four hundred and ninety places the word is by common consent received as literal; in ten, figurative. Of these the word is connected with old three times—"old man" meaning corrupt nature (Rom. 6: 6; Eph. 4: 22; Col. 3: 9.) With new, twice—"new man" meaning renewed nature (Eph. 2: 15; 4: 24.) With inner, twice—"inner man" meaning the spirit (Rom. 7: 22; Eph. 3: 16.) With outward, once—"outward man" meaning the body (2 Cor. 4: 16.) With hidden, once—"hidden man" meaning "a meek and quiet spirit" (1 Peter 3: 4:) and with natural, once—"natural man" meaning the animal man (1 Cor. 2: 14.)

The only remaining place in which the word occurs is 2 Thess. 2: 3, where it is translated man, as in our heading. That its connection with other words may be seen we quote the whole verse: "Let no man deceive you by any means; for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and THAT MAN OF SIN be revealed, the son of perdition."

Is the word m-a-n employed here as a symbol? We answer, it cannot be, and for this reason: it does not possess a solitary characteristic of a symbol. A symbol is a thing, not a word—a thing present, representing a thing absent; a thing less, representing a thing greater. For example, in the Lord's Supper, it is not the word b-r-e-a-d, but the material substance, that is the symbol. The thing present and less representing the absent and greater body of the Lord.

When Paul wrote, "that man of sin" was not present representing something absent, but was himself in the distant future. To say nothing of other characteristics, the lack of this single one will effectually set aside the claim that the word man above is a symbol.

We inquire next, is m-a-n here used as a figure? We answer again, it can not be. The sentence reads, "That man of sin be revealed." All receive the verb "be revealed" as literal. "That" is also literal, and points with definiteness to an individual of whom Paul had told them before. (5th verse.) "Of sin" is also allowed to be literal. The last chance for a figure in this verse is in "man." If man is a figure in this place, it is either a metaphor or a metonymy. The meaning of a word in both these figures differs so much from the literal signification that the one ends where the other begins. Moreover, a word can not be construed figuratively if the literal sense agrees with the context. If this contextual agreement exists in this case, the word can not receive a figurative interpretation, and must of necessity be literal, for there is nothing else left for it to be. That man of sin will be revealed; will oppose and exalt himself above all that is called God; will sit in the temple of God; will show himself that he is God; will be consumed by the spirit of the Lord's mouth, and be destroyed by the brightness of his coming; will show lying wonders, being under the influence of Satan. Every item mentioned, one man energized by Satan can do; and if one literal human being can meet all the language requires, we are not at liberty to look beyond for something not required. One man can easily sit in the temple of God, rebuilt in the city of Jerusalem; but how hard for a chain of Popes to do so through a period of over twelve hundred years; and how hard for abstract principles to sit there!

This article is designed mainly to call attention to what we expect to prove beyond the shadow of a doubt in our future numbers—that the "Man of Sin" is the Antichrist of John and the King in Daniel, under whom will be set up the key to prophecy—the abomination of desolation.—The Prophetic Key.

For the World's Crisis.

THE LORD OUR SHEPHERD.

"The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures. He leadeth me beside the still waters."

What beautiful and what touching words—"The Lord is my Shepherd." How often have our weary souls been strengthened by this precious assurance; how often have they caused our fainting spirits to look up to Him who hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows. Still we would acknowledge him in all our ways, and follow him in all things, wherever he leadeth.

How sweet to realize in the heart, that though earthly joys fade away, and all those who are dear to us may soon disappear from our sight, and the strong ties of affection be severed, yet Jesus is our best, our unfailing friend; and if we but cast an eye upward, and so commit our trust into the hands of our loving Father, we can truly say with the Psalmist, "The Lord is my Shepherd." For does not the good Shepherd provide green and heavenly pastures for his little flock, and lead them on beside still waters? Does he not gently lead those who are with young, and does he not gather the lambs in his arms, and carry them within his bosom?

Then let us remember that, as the days of sorrow and affliction roll by, God has been near to uphold and strengthen us. Through the dark hour he sheltered us underneath the shadow of his wing, and when the storms of affliction raged fearfully around us, he stretched forth his almighty arm to rescue us, and enabled us by his grace to say, "The Lord is my rock and my fortress, and my deliverer; my God, my strength in whom I will trust."

In whatever state, we should be contented, for all things shall work together for our present and everlasting good. God assures us he will be with us to the end of mortal life. He will gather us all on Canaan's happy shore, and then he will lead us on in greener pastures, and by fountains of living waters. He will cause us to lie down beneath the shadow of the Rock that is higher than we, and in the pure river of the water of life we may at length bathe our weary souls, and soothe our throbbing brows; and God shall wipe away all tears from the eyes of his children; there shall be no more crying, for the former things are passed away.

Through the eye of faith we look yonder to the better land, whither we are going; and calmly trusting in Jesus, we shall fear no evil while our Comforter is near; for with a firm confidence we look forward to the ceaseless source, and praise our Maker, from whence all unbounded blessings flow. May we ever take to our hearts these beautiful, comforting words—"The Lord is my Shepherd." ISABELL PLUMMER.

For the World's Crisis.

THE CREATION, THE FALL OF MAN, AND THE RESTITUTION.

"In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth."

Let us look abroad and see what a beautiful world was made. The dazzling sun, the paler moon, the twinkling stars, the fields waving with golden grain, the trees bending with fruit, the animals all harmless, living on grass or herbage. On the sixth day God said, "Let us make man in our image." Notice the image he is made in,—the image of God; but little lower than the angels, crowned with glory and honor. Notice the material he is made of,—the dust of the earth. Notice what sets this machinery into action,—the breath of life. And this wonderful workmanship is called a "living soul." It has different organs, all adapted to different offices, and all together they make a living soul, a living being, a living man.

To this living being God gave dominion over the beasts, the birds, and fishes, and he was on terms of intimacy with his King; could walk and talk with him; all was pleasant around; there were no briars, thorns, or evil weeds; no devouring insects; no blights or mildew; no sickness, sorrow or pain. O, in what a delightful situation was man placed!

But he fell, and great was the fall. God gave Adam a law to prove him, and see whether he would be obedient. The law was very simple, and easy to be understood, but he broke it. The law was merely this: You may eat of every tree but one; but of that one tree thou shalt not eat; if you do you shall die. But Adam being tempted of Satan, did eat of the forbidden tree. Thus he broke the law of his good King.

And now will the King notice this act of rebellion in his subject? Some would think he might pass it over, and not notice it at all. But if he did, where would be his truthfulness? where his justice, and the honor of his law? It is necessary that he should execute the penalty of his law, to establish his truth and justice; and that penalty was death; and when once executed, it was the end of man. God might have left man to suffer the consequence of his sin, as he did the sinning angels, and death would have been the end of him. But God did pity when no eye pitied, when no created arm could save; and he devised a plan whereby his law could be honored, and his justice satisfied, and yet the sinner saved.

The plan was this: that another should come, and obey the law perfectly; then having no sin of his own, step into the place of man, and suffer the penalty due to man, thus honoring the law, and satisfying justice.

Jesus offered himself to carry out this glorious plan, and was accepted. He came in due time according to promise; was born of a virgin; lived a holy life; obeyed the law perfectly; then died for man; was buried; came to life again the third day, with a literal, material body; a specimen of what the saints will be after their resurrection. He ascended on high, and now sits at the right hand of God, an advocate for his people, and will come again by and by, to resurrect his saints. They will come forth with literal, material bodies, fashioned like Christ's own body, having all the powers, faculties and organs which man now has, but perfect; and each of these organs will perform its proper office. Each of these organs and powers will be exercised, and produce pleasure; each

"find sweet employ
In that eternal world of joy."

The eyes will see the King in his beauty, and the grandeur of the New Jerusalem; the ears hear the anthems of praise; the feet walk the golden streets, go in and out through the pearly gates, and walk the verdant fields of paradise; their lungs breathe the pure air of heaven; their organs of speech will be employed in singing the new song of "Blessing and honor, thanksgiving and power," to God and the Lamb. Their mouths will taste the variety of fruits which grow on all manner of trees, and especially the twelve kinds of apples which grow on the tree of life; and, as Jesus says, sit with him at his table, and eat and drink with him in his kingdom.

Thus every organ will be exercised and produce pleasure, just as it was with Adam in the first creation. It is a "restitution" of the original state.

But some inquire, Shall we eat and drink in the restitution? Yes, just as Adam did in the original creation. And shall we know each other then? Yes, we shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. No doubt we shall know those whom we have known here, and become acquainted with those we never saw. Now let us walk up those golden streets. Here we meet Daniel, the prophet. We greet him with a friendly shake of the hand. Let us inquire how he spent that night in the den of lions. He gives us his history, and introduces us to others of his day.

Now behold yonder among the shining company one above the common height, with his face shining as the sun, his eyes like a flame of fire, his feet like burnished brass. It is Jesus, whom having not seen we love; let us draw near to him. See! he looks at us; he smiles; he approves; he loves. We bow before him, and worship him; we join in the new song, then walk down the golden streets through the pearly gates, out upon the restored earth, and see all its original beauty, fertility and loveliness; the trees loaded with ripe fruit at all seasons; the fields with their golden grain, or herbs bearing seed for man's food, the animals harmless, so that a little child may lead them, living peaceably together, feeding on herbage. No fear of briars, thorns, or evil weeds. No devouring insects of any kind; no frosts, blights, nor rust; no sickness, sorrow, pain or death.

"O, I long to be there, and the thought that it's near,
Makes me almost impatient for Christ to appear,
And fit up that dwelling of glory so rare,
The earth robed in beauty,—
I long to be there."

Let me say to the brethren, this is the kingdom I pray for, look for, wait for and expect. Do you look for it? Do you live for it? Our religion must be lived out. Do you let your light shine? Do you walk worthy of your privileges? Do you progress in knowledge as well as grace? We ought to be continually increasing our knowledge of the kingdom to come; there is much yet to learn. Let us not be satisfied with past attainments, but press forward towards things yet before us. Search the Scriptures. Pray for the Spirit to lead into all truth. Let us stir up each other's minds, bear each other's imperfections, help each other's joys, and keep an eye upon the signs of the times, looking for, as we are hasting to, the coming of Jesus and the great day of the Lord.

The infirmities of age are upon me; unmistakable symptoms show me that I must soon go down to the grave. I am not alarmed. I feel no terrors in the prospect before me; yet I desire to live and praise God, and declare his truth. I feel some like Hezekiah when he said, "The living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day." I think my work is about done. I wish I could say "well done." But it looks small to me. I claim no merit for what I have tried to do. If I am saved at all, it must be wholly through Christ's merits.

I remember with pleasure and thankfulness the kindness and hospitality of the brethren and sisters all over the country. The good Lord bless them, is the prayer of

LAYARD'S CONFIRMATION OF SCRIPTURE.

After all the attention given to Layard's discoveries among the ruins of Ninevah, we doubt whether the public mind in general is fully aware of the nature and extent of the confirmation which they bring to the truth of Scripture history. It may be useful here to set out, in the briefest form, a specimen of some of the general results of these discoveries.

They show in conformity with the tenor of Scripture, that the earliest ages were not, as many think, barbarous ages; but that the race of men, originally enlightened from a divine source, had at first a high degree of general knowledge, which they gradually lost through the defection to idolatry. It has been demonstrated by those excavations not only that a high state of the arts existed in Ninevah a thousand years before Christ; but also, that in the earliest ages of that city, dating but a few centuries after the flood, their sculptures were the best. In this remarkable result the Egyptian and Assyrian antiquities also agree.

It is also proved, contrary to the general impression, that then men had a better knowledge of the true God than afterward prevailed; that it did not grow up as the religion of nature, by the ineffectual attempts of men to find the true God. But it was introduced as an expedient of men in order to obscure what knowledge of God they possessed, because they did not like to retain God in their knowledge. This is shown in the fact, that the earliest representations of God found in these sculptures are best, and immeasurably exceed anything existing in after ages; especially in their approach to the true God. So that idolatry came in not for want of light, but by an abuse of it. Men, knowing God, and yet not willing to glorify him as God, became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish hearts were darkened.

The Scripture accounts of the great antiquity of Ninevah and the Assyrian empire agree with these records dug out of the ruins of Ninevah. The Scriptures date the building of the city not long after the flood; and the fact that the same marble materials have been used in successive structures, and that ancient buildings had been placed on the ruins of those still more ancient and other unmistakable indications, the conclusion is made clear, that the city had all the antiquity which the Scriptures ascribe to it.

Those monuments also bear upon them the record of the fulfillment of prophecy. Nahum prophesied that the city would be plundered of all its treasures, so that none would be left. Layard has found, in all its excavations, nothing in the form of gold or silver; a fact which is remarkable, if the city had not been thoroughly plundered before it was burned. The prophet foretold, that the invaders would obtain easy access to some portions of the city, and that, wherever the inhabitants should resort to the strongholds, these would be burnt. Now the ruins show just this result.

Another coincidence appears in this, that in the historical sculptures there are marks of a sudden and final interruption of work, such as would naturally follow the final dispersion of the workmen, and the violent death of the king as described in the Bible. Thus the voice of ancient ruins has come to disperse the cavils of infidels, and to defend the sacred word of Him who knew the end from the beginning. But a more striking confirmation is found in the fact, that inscriptions on the ruins of one of the palaces, gives the military career of Sennacherib, with just such a series of conquest as the Scriptures ascribe to him. The Bible account of Hezekiah's rebellion is fully corroborated by inscriptions on the palace chamber walls of Sennacherib.—The Treasury.

CHRISTIANITY.

Christianity is a system claiming God for its author, and the welfare of man for its object. It is a system so uniform, exalted and pure, that the loftiest intellects have acknowledged its influence, and acquiesced in the justice of its claims. Genius has bent from his erratic course to gather fire from her altars, and pathos from the agony of Gethsemane and the sufferings of Calvary. Philosophy and science have paused amid their speculative researches and wondrous revelations to gain wisdom from her teachings, and knowledge from her precepts. Poetry has culled her fairest flowers, and wreathed her softest, to bind her author's "bleeding brow." Music has strung her sweetest lyres and breathed her noblest strains to celebrate his fame; whilst learning has bent from her lofty heights to bow at the lowly cross.

The constant friend of man, she has cheered the prisoner in his cell, and strengthened the martyr at the stake. She has nerved the frail and shrinking heart of woman for high and holy deeds. The worn and weary have rested their fainting heads upon her bosom, and gathered strength from her words, and courage from her counsels. She has been the staff of decrepit age, and the joy of manhood in its strength. She has bent over the form of lovely childhood, and suffered it to have a place in the Redeemer's arms. She has stood by the bed of the dying, and unveiled the glories of eternal life, gilding the darkness of the tomb with the glory of the resurrection.

Christianity has changed the moral aspect of nations. Idolatrous temples have crumbled at her touch, and guilt owned its deformity in her presence. The darkest habitations of earth have been irradiated with heavenly light, and the death-shriek of immolated victims changed for ascriptions of praise to God and the Lamb. Envy and malice have been rebuked by her contented look, and fretful impatience by her gentle and resigned manner. At her approach fetters have been broken, and men have risen redeemed from the dust, and freed from chains. Manhood has learned its dignity and worth, its kindred with angels, and alliance to God.

To man, guilty, fallen, and degraded man, she shows a fountain drawn from the Redeemer's veins; there she bids him wash and be clean. She points him to "Mount Zion, the city of the living God; to an innumerable company of angels; to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant;" and urges him to rise from the degradation of sin, renew his nature, and join with them. She shows a pattern so spotless and holy, so elevated and pure, that he might shrink from it discouraged, did she not bring with her a promise from the lips of Jehovah that he would give power to the faint, and might to those who have no strength.

Learning may bring her ample pages and ponderous records, rich with the spoils of every age, gathered from every land, and gleaned from every source. Philosophy and science may bring their abstruse researches, and wondrous revelation. Literature her elegance, with the toils of the pen and the labors of the pencil; but they are idle tales compared to the truths of christianity. They may cultivate the intellect, enlighten the understanding, give scope to the imagination, and refine the sensibilities; but they open not to our dim eyes and longing vision the land of crystal founts and deathless flowers. Philosophy searches earth; religion opens heaven. Philosophy doubts and trembles at the portals of eternity; religion lifts the veil, and shows us golden streets lit by the Redeemer's countenance, and irradiated by his smiles. Philosophy strives to reconcile us to death; religion triumphs over it. Philosophy treads amid the pathway of stars, and stands a delighted listener to the music of the spheres; but religion gazes on the glorious palaces of God, while the harpings of the blood-washed, and the songs of the redeemed fall upon her ravished ear. Philosophy has her place; religion her important sphere; one is of importance here, the other of infinite and vital importance, both here and hereafter.

Amid ancient lore the word of God stands unique and pre-eminent. Wonderful in its construction, admirable in its adaptation; it contains truths that a child may comprehend, and mysteries into which angels desire to look. It is in harmony with that adaptation of means to ends which pervades creation, from the polypus tribes, elaborating their coral homes, to man the wondrous work of God. It forms the brightest link of that glorious chain which unites the humblest work of creation with the shrine of the infinite and eternal Jehovah.

As light with its infinite particles, and curiously-blended colors, is suited to an eye prepared for the alterations of days; as air with its subtle and invisible essence, is fitted for the delicate organs of respiration; and, in a word, as the material world is adapted to man's physical nature, so the word of eternal truth is adapted to his moral nature and mental constitution. It finds him wounded, sick and suffering, and points him to the balm of Gilead and the Physician of human souls. It finds him stained by transgression, and defiled with guilt, and directs him to the blood that cleanseth from all sin and unrighteousness. It finds him athirst and faint, pining amid the deserts of life, and shows him the wells of salvation and the rivers of life.

It addresses itself to his moral nature, makes provision for his wants and weakness, and meets his yearnings and aspirations. It provides light for his darkness, joy for his anguish, a solace for his woes, balm for his wounds, and eternal life for his hopes. It unveils the unseen world and reveals Him who is the light of creation, and the joy of the universe reconciled through the death of his Son. It promises the faithful a blessed reunion in a land undimmed by tears, undarkened by sorrow. It affords a trust for the living, and a refuge for the dying. Aided by the Holy Spirit, it guides us through life, points out the shoals, the quicksands and hidden rocks which endanger our path, and at last leaves us with the eternal God for our refuge, and his everlasting arm for our protection forever, when we are safely landed on the beautiful evergreen shore of the new earth, with Christ our elder Brother for our eternal King. MORNING AND EVENING MEDITATIONS.

I looked around upon nature; all was beautiful and lovely to look upon. Roses, but no thorns; tempting fruits, but no decaying vegetation. The hills, that lifted their heads above the surrounding scenery, were clothed in immortal verdure. The brooks looked as clear as crystal, and the sun shone through the clouds as if they were refined glass. No fading flowers, nor seared leaves. There was

EXPLANATION.

Sometimes persons write to us that they ordered their paper discontinued when the subscription expired, but it was not, and they think we want to force the Crisis upon them, and then force them to pay. We wish to force none. Post-masters, in returning papers to be discontinued, often send them with no post-office or State marked upon them, and we cannot look our large list all over to hunt up the name; and then there may be several of the same name on our list.

When any one orders a post-master to return a paper, always see that he puts on the post-office and State.

BOLD WICKEDNESS.

The most wicked men are becoming astonishly bold in their daring deeds. Nothing seems to alarm them. The blackest crimes are passed over very slightly by those whose duty it is to put a stop to such things. People begin to get their eyes open to see the signs of the times; and the more fully they comprehend them, the better they will be satisfied.

Says the Monday (Sept. 12th, 1870) morning Boston Post:—"The sanguinary hue of our exchanges is frightful. All over the country are reported murders of the most horrible character. A man was hacked to death by rowdies at a camp-meeting near Millsburg, Pa., and his shrieks interrupted the prayers of the worshipers."

Following the above statement is a long list of horrid murders. Human life is but little respected at the present day. The tide of wickedness is rising rapidly. We can expect no better times till Jesus comes.

TRACTS.

Now is the time when christians should be doing all in their power to scatter the light in relation to the coming of Christ, and the other great truths of the Bible. It is feared that many of our readers are not sufficiently awake to the importance of the work before us; nor of the amount of good that might be accomplished, if all who are looking for the coming of our Savior were willing to make the effort the times demand. Let every one do something and a great work will be done.

The following shows what one cent may accomplish:

"A son of one of the chiefs of Bardwan was converted by a single tract. He could not then read, but he went to Ragoon, a distance of two hundred and fifty miles. A missionary's wife taught him to read, and in forty-eight hours he read the tract through. He took a basketful of tracts, preached the gospel at his own home, and was the means of converting hundreds to God. He was a man of influence, the people flocked to hear him, and in one year fifteen hundred natives were baptized in Aarracan as members of the church. And all this through one little tract. That tract cost one cent; and possibly some little boy or girl gave the cent. What a blessing it has been!—Eclectic Treasury.

Come, Brn. and Srs., send in your donations to help scatter the light and truth in all directions.

MISSION WORK.

It is evident that the true followers of Jesus are required to make sacrifices for the good of others. Let us take hold of the work nobly, and thus prove we love to labor for Jesus. Thousands and millions are ignorant of the blessed hope we love and prize so highly. Shall we not make a sacrifice to reach them with the truth before it is too late? Let us use the means God has placed in our hands, so that we shall not be found wanting at last. Our opportunities for doing good will soon be ended. Who will help send out men to go every where preaching the gospel of the kingdom?

PARIS.

Paris, the capital of France, is about to be besieged by the Prussians. It is believed there is no other city in the world so well fortified. The cost of the fortifications is said to be equal to the value of two thirds of the entire city which they protect. It is surrounded by a wall, some twenty-two miles in length, from which thousands of cannon point in all directions where the enemy can approach. Outside of the wall is a ditch some eighteen feet deep and twenty feet wide. Some distance beyond the wall and ditch is a range of strong fortifications, the cheapest of which cost some seven hundred thousand dollars. There is very little chance for the Prussians to take Paris any other way than by starvation.

The Prussians will probably commence the siege in less than a week from this time (Sept. 14th.) It will be on a grand scale, when all the ingenuity possible will be employed on both sides to secure success. It is impossible to foretell the chances of war, any further than they are subjects of prophecy in the sacred Scriptures. Of necessity, great events must transpire in less than twelve months. This is the time to watch.

SPIRIT-TEACHING.

The following question was put to a spirit operating through a medium at the office of the Banner of Light, in Boston, and the answer received also appears in that paper, Aug. 27th, 1870:—

"Q. Is the record true that Christ rose from the dead in the flesh?

A. No, it is not true. He rose from the dead body of the flesh, and that body was cared for by his nearest and dearest friends. It did not rise and ascend to the heavens, as many believe. It was not that body that was seen by the disciples and others, but out of the air he had manufactured a body that served him for the occasion, precisely as spirits manufacture bodies that may appear to your sight and your touch to-day. The same law was good then that is good to-day. It can be used to-day as it was used then. Jesus understood it and took advantage of it."

If Christ's body did not rise from the dead, then the apostles were notorious liars. Luke says: "He showed himself alive after his passion, by many infallible proofs." Acts 1:3. They saw him, talked with him, walked with him, ate with him, handled him; one of the disciples even putting his fingers in the prints of the nails driven into his hands, and the place where the spear was thrust into his side.

Whose testimony shall we receive? that of the lying demons, or of those who lived in the days of Christ, and associated with him after he was raised from the dead? Which is the best authority? If these demons are telling the truth, when they say Christ was not raised from the dead; then the apostles were exceedingly foolish, and very wicked to declare Christ had risen from the dead; that they had seen him and handled him; when they knew that they imperiled their lives by becoming the followers of Jesus, and gained nothing by reporting such a story, if it was not true.

It is strange that any candid man can believe such wild nonsense as that taught by the demons, when they affirm that Christ "manufactured a body" "out of the air," "that served him for the occasion." But when men reject the Bible, there is no telling what strange theories they may be led to believe.

THE POPE.

The Pope's situation is becoming daily more and more critical. There is scarcely any chance left for him to hold Rome much longer. The Italians are marching upon "the scanty remnant of his kingdom." He is destitute of power to make a successful resistance. The last vestige of his dominion must soon be in the hands of his enemies, from whom he can expect no mercy. It is said Victor Emanuel has it so arranged that there is no chance for the Pope to escape from Rome.

It is sublime to be living now, so near the time of the coming of Christ, and the resurrection of the dear ones sleeping in Jesus. Soon the faithful will commence their eternal life. Is the reader ready?

DISCUSSION.

We are to have a discussion with Mr. J. S. Sweeney, of Chicago, at West Point, Ill., commencing at 10 A. M., Tuesday, Sept. 27th. We are to discuss the following propositions: 1. "There is in man a conscious entity, sometimes called a spirit, that remains conscious after his death." 2. "The punishment of the wicked will consist in the eternal extinction of their conscious being."

HELP THE NEEDY.

The following is an extract from a private letter from F. H. Chamberlain, of Webster, Mass.:—

BRO. GRANT:—"I need not tell you that these are perilous times—times in which fearful crimes abound—for the record of every day is a record of murder, theft, robbery, and all manner of iniquity on the one hand, and untold sorrow and suffering on the other. While wars and rumors of wars still abound, and signs proclaim that the great day is near, we see the weak and friendless left to suffer, while the strong and successful pass by 'on the other side.'

But I took my pen to write a few words to you about my private affairs and personal needs. My wife has been confined to her bed since Sept. 1st, and will not be able to be about the house for some time yet. I have to do what I can for her comfort, and as I cannot hire help, I have about as much as I can attend to at present, and am so situated that I cannot earn anything. I have inquired of the town authorities in regard to what they can do for me, and was informed that our children would be taken away from us, and 'bound out,' if we were not able to get along. So you see some of the bitter dregs of our cup. We do earnestly pray, Lord, help us."

We trust there are many who will feel it a pleasure to help bear the heavy burdens of our dear Bro. and Sr. Chamberlain.

TO BRO. KELLAWAY.—We are glad to hear of your safe arrival in America. May the Lord greatly bless your labors in his vineyard. In relation to ordination, you must act your own pleasure. Some of our Brn. preach for years before they are ordained; while others prefer ordination as soon as the church is satisfied it is their duty to preach. Should you be ordained, you will not be required to assume any sectarian name, unless it be your choice. We have no such bands for young preachers. Our own views are in harmony with yours in relation to sectarian names.

May the Lord lead you in all things.

THE POPE'S DOMINION.—The Pope's dominion is now nearly all gone. It has been taken away since 1859. At the beginning of that year, "the Papal states comprised an area of fifteen thousand two hundred and eighty-nine square miles, and a population of three million one hundred and twenty-four thousand six hundred and sixty-eight." Now the Papal states have but four thousand five hundred and fifty-two square miles, and a population of seven hundred and twenty-three thousand one hundred and twenty-one. In 1867, Rome had a population of two hundred and fifteen thousand five hundred and seventy-three. The interest on the Papal debt is said to be thirty-seven million francs.

THE NEW GREEK CONCORDANCE.

This new work, planned by Bro. Hastings, and executed by Prof. Hudson, must prove serviceable to ministers and Bible students. It possesses several advantages over the "Englishman's Greek Concordance," aside from its convenience in size. It more than meets our expectations. W. S.

THEOLOGY AT WAR WITH ITSELF.

While passing through the State of New York on the cars, a colporteur was scattering tracts gratuitously among the people. A tract printed in Dublin fell into my hands, which contains a fair sample of current theology, known as orthodoxy, in conflict with itself. The writer thus addresses the sinner:—

"You have not sought in all things to please Him, but you have sought to please yourself. You have been earning wages—the wages of sin. Sad wages indeed! for the word of God says, 'The wages of sin is death' (Rom. 6:23.) This is a sad state to be in; and yet, sad as it is, you cannot possibly deliver yourself out of it. You are guilty before God. Your sin is upon you, and the only wages of that sin is death."

Again he remarks:—"The resurrection of Christ is God's assurance and witness to us that the work of Christ is complete, that the ransom price has been fully paid. Jesus was the sinner's substitute. This doctrine of one standing for another is the grand and glorious truth which the Gospel proclaims. He was put in the sinner's place, to 'bear the sins of many.'

We find no fault with these statements, but elsewhere in the same document the writer affirms: "God has given his own Son to save you from everlasting misery." The query is, how Christ could be "put in the sinner's place," and as the "sinner's substitute" suffer the penalty instead of the sinner, provided that penalty is really "everlasting misery," as the writer affirms? Did Christ suffer everlasting misery? Did he not rather suffer death, the death that the transgressor's sins have called for? Christ's resurrection by the Father is proof that the debt is paid, a receipt of which is offered to all who accept the gospel contract. It may be objected that Christ's death was not eternal. True, and the penalty was death without reference to its length. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." "The wages of sin is death;" and death for sin filled the contract. At the same time it is true that the sinner will never be released from that death when inflicted on him, as Christ was released from it, as such a release would revive a wicked race after the judgment had passed, and thus thwart the plan of heaven. Not so in the case of Christ, who died for the sins of others, being holy. W. S.

"FAR BETTER" THAN WHAT?

Nothing can be "far better" than itself. Paul was in "a strait betwixt two"—a life of persecution, and the enemy death, which would afford him "gain" by relieving him of his persecution—of which two he says, "What to choose I wot not," or, "Which to choose I know not" (Union Trans). But he did choose another thing, which he pronounces "far better" than the unchosen things, his choice being "to depart and be with Christ." As this departure is pronounced "far better" than death, which would afford a release from persecution, it is certain that this departure cannot involve death as the basis of the departure referred to, for (1) he did not choose death, (2) he pronounces this departure "far better" than death, which would be equivalent to pronouncing death far better than itself, if death were the indispensable prerequisite to the departure.

A departure by translation was possible, independent of death. Then after being told by the apostle that he did not choose death, why should the claim be made that the departure is through the door of death? If the departure involved death, Paul is made, in substance, to pronounce death "far better" than itself. Nor is anything said about the departure of a soul—that must be read into the Bible before it can be read from it—but of Paul himself. Paul desired translation, but did not expect it. W. S.

POOR CONSOLATION.

Many honest, but unenlightened christians, exult in the thought that they are to "spend eternity in heaven above." That thought would afford us poor consolation, if not great discomfort. A transient visit to that realm, after the great High Priest comes out, might not be very objectionable; but since Christ and the angels and the New Jerusalem are to come down to earth; and since the blood-washed throng are all to be gathered to the kingdom of God on the renewed earth, when the "tabernacle of God shall be with men," we prefer to spend eternity with them, rather than to be left alone to all eternity.

When sin is obliterated, death exterminated, tears all wiped away, sorrow ended, the curse removed, the saints all gathered, earth filled with glory, the angels all here, with the city of God and Jesus in the midst; this will be an inviting place. It would be poor consolation then to tell me I might "spend eternity in heaven above." Rather let me dwell in God's new paradise, and share the society of the redeemed throng. W. S.

PERSONAL ELECTION.

The doctrine of "election" is certainly taught in the Bible; but it is not the doctrine of personal election, regardless of conditions, else Peter would never have said, "Make your calling and election sure." Nothing that men can do, or omit to do, could possibly affect personal election; for if a person is elected to be saved, he must be saved in spite of any arising contingency,—it is an infallible and unalterable decree; but the "election" spoken of by Peter, which is the only kind of "election" taught in the Bible, could be made "sure" by acts of obedience and a life of faith.

The simple truth is, God has elected the salvation of one class, and the damnation of another, and leaves men free to decide which class they will be identified with; but has never elected that one man must belong to the wicked class, and another man to the righteous. God has not decreed that a saint shall always be a saint, nor that a sinner must always be a sinner; but the very reverse of this is taught all through the Bible. Sinners are admonished to leave the ranks of the enemy of righteousness, and become saints; and saints are continually cautioned against becoming sinners; all of which conflicts with the doctrine of personal election.

Sambo very shrewdly remarked concerning personal election, that he "did not know which was the biggest fool, the devil or the preacher; for the preacher spends all his time in trying to get away some of the devil's part, and can't do it; and the devil spends all his time in trying to get away some of the Lord's part, and can't do it." But when we understand that a specific class are elected to be saved, and that men are left free to decide whether they will join or desert that class before the judgment arrives, and that only those than belonging to the class are to be saved, all is plain. W. S.

CONSECRATION.

Are we fully consecrated to God? Are our hearts richly imbued with divine love? Are our minds transformed by the renewing of the Holy Spirit? Are we daily hungering and thirsting after righteousness? Do we enjoy the sweet smiles of Heaven in our hearts continually? Are we enjoying the sweetness of our first love? Do we daily feel that we are at peace with God? Do we possess an ardent relish for secret devotion? These are questions that the followers of Christ should always be prepared to answer affirmatively. We need to "examine" ourselves, as well as to examine our theology, lest we ultimately be weighed in the balances, and be found wanting. Let us heed the Savior's caution, "lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping."

We profess to "see the day approaching." Then let us so live that it will be our pleasure to see the day approaching, and our delight to exhort each other to faithfulness, that we may have boldness, and not be ashamed before him at his coming, being unspotted from the world; for the pure in heart shall see God. W. S.

For the World's Crisis.

SPRINGFIELD AND ALTON BAY.

Our national campmeeting truly surpassed anything of the kind we ever before attended. So also the Alton Bay campmeeting; and if weighed in the balance, should think they both stood alike.

We arrived in Springfield the day before the meeting commenced, and remained until it closed; and never saw or heard any thing to mar our peace, but we made up our minds the first day we would say, hear, and see nothing that was wrong while there, and from that moment our meeting rose a hundred per cent higher; and as we carried our resolutions to the close of the meeting, they rose higher and higher, until it was above explanation. Every one was so kind and pleasant, we wished we could stay there until Jesus came. The preaching was the best, and to the point. Sinners were converted and baptized, and backsliders came back. Old grudges were taken away, and all took a new start for the kingdom. The prayer-meetings in the tents were very good. At six o'clock every evening there was a consecration meeting in front of the stand. It was led by Bro. Miles Grant; he led us safely along, bidding us, as we walked through the follies and fashions of these last days, to give them a severe letting alone, and strip for the race if we ever expected to reach the promised land; and many, yes, and I think it safe to say all, resolved there and then to make a new start, and come out from the world, and lay off all gold ornaments, and flowers, and costly array, and stop drinking tea and coffee, and chewing and smoking tobacco, and keep unspotted from the world. All seemed pleased and profited by these meetings.

We left at the close, came to Providence, R. I., and stopped a few days with Bro. and Sr. Medbury, No. 44 Warren St.; and many thanks to them for their hospitality and kindness to us.

We then went to Alton Bay, and we had our meeting all over again, like Springfield; every thing was so pleasant, every body was so kind and good; nothing to mar our peace. Again the preaching was all of the best kind, with a very slight exception. Bro. Grant preached four times; Bro. Couch twice. It was so good,—here language fails me, and I must pass. I would speak of the prayer-meeting in the Concord and Lawrence tents, but here language fails me again. The last day of the meeting they had a '43 and '44 meeting in Bro. Morrill's big tent by the depot, beginning in the morning and continuing until dark. We just stepped back twenty-five or thirty years, and heard (following them up) what they had to come through with, and we felt truly our time was much easier than theirs. We do not know the number that spoke, who were in the '44 movement, but there were many, and the story of what they had passed through, and suffered, and of the many brave and loved ones they had laid away in Jesus to sleep until the trumpet sounds, was truly sad; but with all we had many shouts in the camp, and finally ended with singing,

"I will be in this band,
Hallelujah!
The Second Advent band."

And then came the Communion, which was so solemn and heavenly, and at the close of the communion Bro. Grant said, "They sung a hymn and went out"; "and," said he, "I have often wished I knew what that hymn was"; and I heard a murmur from many, many lips—"So have I." And so ended our best meetings, ever to be remembered here and hereafter. MARY D. BABCOCK.

East Greenwich, R. I.

LETTER FROM BRO. A. N. SEYMOUR.

BRO. GRANT:—Yesterday I attended church in the new and commodious school-house in Algansee, Branch Co., Mich., and listened to a well-arranged, truthful, and very interesting gospel sermon from Eld. Aaron D. Abbott, a regular Baptist minister of Reading, Mich. This brother has been unsettled and doubtful relative to his former doctrinal faith to quite an extent for some time past; but by a faithful study of the ever-faithful word, in the exercise of an intelligent and thoughtful mind, has become thoroughly imbued with the glorious and overwhelming truth that there is no immortality or endless life except through Jesus Christ; and has now for the first time publicly published his settled convictions to the world.

When he became thoroughly convinced that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, the consciousness of the dead, going to heaven and hell at death, and endless hell-torture, were false doctrines, and directly at war with God, his word, and all his divine attributes, he went and took a general survey of all his old written discourses, which cost him years of hard mental labor, and finding so much objectionable matter dispersed all through them, he gathered them up to the amount of about two bushels, and committed them to the flames, and says if God will forgive him for preaching such doctrines he will do so no more. He is now fully alive to his present position, having in part a new faith, a blessed hope, and new aspirations, which fill his soul with love, wonder, admiration, and zeal.

Bro. Abbott is a capable man,—capable of interesting a congregation anywhere, and will doubtless preach more or less as the way may open and circumstances will permit. May God give him grace and wisdom to meet the uneven vicissitudes of these last days, and make him a great blessing to the church of Christ and the world, is my most earnest prayer. A. N. SEYMOUR.

Reading, Mich., Aug. 15th.

☞ The war is taking an entirely new phase. From a national contest it has changed [illegible] absolutism and republicanism. Hence the modification of sympathies.

Obituaries.

LOCKWOOD. Died, in North Springfield, Vt., Oct. 7th, 1870, of consumption, Bro. Lyman Lockwood, aged fifty-one years.

Bro. Lockwood was an esteemed citizen, a valued friend, the kindest of husbands, a devoted father, and a consistent christian. In death he pillowed his head upon the christian's hope that "when He who is our life shall appear, we shall appear with him in glory." Six children sleep by his side. May the stricken wife and her only remaining son find comfort in this the seventh trouble, in that God who is able to comfort all who are in any trouble. Funeral text, Lam. 3:33. H. F. CARPENTER.

CHAPMAN. Died, in South Palermo, Me., Sept. 6th, 1870, Mahala, wife of A. B. Chapman, aged forty-eight years.

Her disease was cancer tumor in the breast. Long and distressing was her sickness, but the blessed hope in Christ comforted her until the last.

She leaves a husband, six children, and a large circle of friends to mourn, but not without hope. Her funeral was attended at Week's Mills, China, being the first funeral in the new chapel, by S. K. PARTRIDGE and J. R. HALL.

SEWELL. Died, in Bowdoin, Me., Sept. 7th, 1870, Bro. Sewell M. Haynes, aged twenty years.

Bro. Sewell found favor with God some three years ago, among the F. W. Baptists, but about one year since he embraced the sleep of the dead, and his hope was in the resurrection. He now sleeps in Jesus, but will wake in the morning, to die no more. Funeral attended by the writer. Text, Prov. 14:32. H. S. MITCHELL.

NICHOLS. Died in Haverhill, Mass., Aug. 22nd, 1870, George C., son of O. F. and M. L. Nichols, aged eleven years and nine months.

All who knew George loved him. He was uncommonly mild and sweet tempered. Young as he was, he presented the clearest evidence of having "passed from death unto life." He told me he loved Jesus above all others, and was not, therefore, afraid of death. His confidence was strong. His death was the most like "falling asleep" that I ever witnessed. T. C. EMERY.

PRESTON. Died, in East Canaan, N. H., Aug. 24th, 1870, after a painful illness, Nellie, infant daughter of John and Margaret Preston.

Words of comfort by the waiter, from 1 Cor. 15:50. JOHN H. EVANS.

WARNER. Died, at St. Johnsbury, Vt., Sept. 1st, of congestion of the lungs, Sister Laura E., wife of brother R. W. Warner, aged thirty-eight years, eleven months.

Her hope was firm in the promises of God. N. WHEELER.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

ROME, Sept. 13. Immense posters have been placarded on the dead walls of the city proclaiming a universal Italian Republic. The document is signed by the Republican Revolutionary Committee.

NEW YORK, Sept. 13. A medical man, connected with the Prussian army, has sent the following statement of the Prussian losses to a London surgeon: In the battles of Weissenbourg, Reichshoffen, Forbach, Spichern, Borny, Gravelotte, Mars la Tour and Rezonville, 73,605 killed, prisoners and missing, 97,050 wounded, and a number that died from disease and numberless skirmishes, will make the total number to be deducted from the German force which marched into France, at 180,000.

PARIS, Sept. 13. The Prussians are now continuously closing in upon the city. Two corps of the Prussian army, of forty thousand men each, occupied last night a position on the Strasbourg highway between the Coulummiens and the La Leole. The Uhlans are spreading on either flanks and have appeared at the Metun and Meaux and are reported from Houssaye Florence.

On Sunday a Prussian reconnoitering party encountered a body of French at the Chateau Thierry. A sharp engagement occurred, in which the Prussians were repulsed with considerable loss.

The correspondent of the morning Post telegraphs from Paris that all the hopes for the suspension of hostilities have been abandoned by the officials and the people of Paris. The committee of defence have vigorously grappled with the danger threatening the city. The Ministry have promulgated an edict that no person shall be allowed to leave the city of Paris after six o'clock on the morning of the tenth of September without a special permit. The rigors of martial law are properly enforced within the city. The National Garde have been summoned to occupy their situations upon the fortifications to-day. The greatest military activity prevails. The call for defenders is responded to with alacrity.

PARIS, Sept. 13. Wilfred de Touville, author of several treatises on air navigation, is constantly on the watch for the approaching Prussians from a balloon. He has also prepared other balloons, which will be properly anchored, to serve as outlooks from different parts of the city.

A dispatch from China to-day contains unfavorable intelligence. The Chinese are preparing for war. Further outrages have been committed on the missionaries.

FLORENCE, Sept. 13. The Pope has indorsed the cessation of all resistance to the occupation of the Papal States by the Italian troops.

FLORENCE, Sept. 13. The proclamation issued by the King to the Romans says peace, order and self-government, and not war, are brought and offered by the Italians, and papacy will remain inviolate.

Demonstrations are made at Terracena in favor of Italian occupation. The Papal troops refuse to fight the national soldiers. General Bixes, who commanded the advance, encounters no resistance. The railway to Rome is in the hands of the Italians, but has been cut by the retreating forces of the Pope.

ROME, Sept. 13. The Pope has called together the members of the diplomatic body to protest against the entry of the Italian troops, which are now within a few miles of the city.

FLORENCE, Sept. 13. The military division of Bologna and Pisa have advanced as far as Monte Rotondo, on their way to Rome. The Zouaves of Col. Charette retire before them as they advance, and no collision has taken place. The rumor of the Pope's intention to seek refuge on board a British man-of-war is authoritatively denied.

The cost of the defensive works about Paris is estimated at over two-thirds of the value of the city they protect. In 1841, the Government obtained a grant from the Chambers of $30,000,000 for the work. Since then they have been constantly strengthened, and the extensive repairs now being made, on which many thousand workmen are engaged, are intended to complete the great work. Six thousand cannon can be worked from these defences.

TOURS, Sept. 14. A great number of bridges around Paris were blown up to-day, the woods set on fire, and houses likely to offer refuge to the enemy destroyed.

Toul was again bombarded. The firing continued nine hours. Much damage was done, but the defence continues.

LONDON, Sept. 14. The Paris correspondent of the Times, yesterday, writes: "I am convinced that we shall soon have peace. The Republicans now say openly that peace must be had at any price. One who has intimate relations with the Government tells me to-day that, cost what it may, peace must be made at once as the only way of saving the Republic."

PARIS, Sept. 14. At noon to-day the work of desolation began on a grand scale around the city. Vast columns of smoke are reported by latest Dieppe dispatches as rising at that time to the north and east of the capital. Many houses in St. Denis were on fire. The bridge at St. Cloud was blown up yesterday evening. The fine bridge at Neuilly, one of the handsomest in Europe, is ready to be blown up. The National Guard went on duty to-day in the fortresses.

The advance guard of the Prussian army before Paris consists of eight regiments of infantry, five of cavalry, six battalions of Jagers and sixteen batteries of artillery—in all about 45,000 men. The remainder of the army is moving up slowly, the heads of the columns having reached Coulommiers, in the Department of the Seine and Marne on Tuesday in force.

LONDON, Sept. 15. The communication between Paris, and Lyons has been destroyed, the Prussians having cut the wires and railroad at Montereau, sixteen miles south-east of Melun. A sharp skirmish occurred there between German Uhlans and the Franc-Tirailleurs. The former are said to be beaten off. Firing was heard at Paris, yesterday, from the direction of Melun. The railway service between Paris and Lyons has been stopped. All the bridges which can be reached will be destroyed to-night.

LONDON, Sept. 15. The Pope has received a letter from King Victor Emanuel, in which the latter explains the course he has taken. Any delay on his part, he says, would have occasioned a proclamation of a Republic in every Italian city, and his army would not have fought a Republic, which would have been fatal to the Papacy. As it is, Republicanism is so rampant that it may prove irresistible.

BERLIN, Sept. 16. The latest intelligence concerning mediation, is that Russia declines all further efforts of mediation. Mr. Bancroft denies having invoked American intervention.

Prussia is satisfied with the reserved attitude of England, as defeating the French hope of armed intervention

Germany demands the cession of Alsace and Lorraine.

LONDON, Sept. 16. The Prussians are preparing to attack Paris in the direction of Vincennes, from the line of the Marne.

Soissons is blockaded by a heavy cavalry force, which has cut off all communication.

There are ten thousand Prussians at Nanteuil, near Senlis and Villiers. Cotterets is occupied by three thousand.

The French have uselessly destroyed all the works of art on the highways and railroads leading out of Paris, and notwithstanding the wholesale destruction of property, the advance of the Prussian army has not been delayed a single hour

NEW YORK, Sept. 16. A Paris dispatch has just been received:

One of the Rothschilds, a young member of the eminent banking firm, has shouldered a chassepot, and is daily doing duty on the ramparts of the city.

The Garde Mobile are constantly arriving in large numbers to swell the army of defence.

The newspapers printed in the city appear this morning curtailed to half their usual size.

25,000 Chassepots were delivered to the troops in this city yesterday.

PARIS, Sept. 14. The Emperor at Wilhelmshohe enjoys entire freedom of action. He walks or rides as he pleases. His chief companions are Prince Moskowa and Prince Murat. He disregards the stare of curious people whom he encounters outside of the gates. It is said he looks thirty years older than he did in 1865. He is now bloated, billious and yellow eyed; is faint, tired and expressionless. His movements are slow, awkward and mechanical. His face is absolutely devoid of expression. "Apathy," describes his appearance in one word. He retires late and rises early. His chamber windows are lighted till long after midnight, and at half-past four in the morning the Emperor is seen walking in the garden. He dresses plainly in black, and amuses himself a great deal by talking to the school children who gather around him.

PARIS, Sept. 19. Special to the N. Y. Herald. A fight lasting two hours took place yesterday, ten miles from Paris, between a body of 35,000 Prussians strongly posted on the heights, and a French reconnoitering force.

LONDON, Sept 19. Jules Favre has gone to the Prussian headquarters. Fears were entertained that he would not be received, but he requested Bismarck for safe conduct, at least, and was answered favorably. He set out immediately for Meaux, the present headquarters of the King.

The Times' correspondent, writing from before Strasbourg, says that the preparations for assault cannot be completed in less than four weeks.

The dispatches of to-day destroy all prospects of Bazaine's escape. A handful of men only have escaped thus far.

The siege of Toul is vigorously pressed. The place cannot hold out much longer.

FLORENCE, Sept 19. The Italians have occupied Onlondo. The troops on entering Valletre were received with great enthusiasm.

In Spain great excitement is caused by the proclamation of a republic in France. Many of the Spaniards seem ready for a similar step. A Madrid dispatch says:

"Deputy Castellar, in the name of the Republican minority in the Spanish cortes, sent to the republican government of France a dispatch, saying: 'The Spanish minority salute in you the advent of right and the inauguration of a new era of liberty. Rest assured the republic will cause the cessation of the rivalries monarchs have created in Europe. All the continent will form one people, all nations one family.' The address was signed by twenty deputies of the cortes. A great manifestation was held here in honor of the Republic of France. Expression will, at the same time, be given to the popular demand for the abrogation of the article in the Spanish Constitution establishing a monarchy as the legal form of government for Spain."

NAPOLEON'S OUTLOOK FOR A RAINY DAY.

The Chicago Tribune says:—

"Our London correspondent assures us, as an ascertained fact, that the Emperor Napoleon has enough money invested in the English funds to yield him an annual income of £100,000. This sum, capitalized at the English rate of interest, represents over £3,000,000. He also estimates that the Emperor has as much invested in other countries. According to this statement, Napoleon has not been unmindful of the future. He has been so preparing matters that, in case of trouble, he will not be left in poverty. Upon the interest of $30,000,000 he can manage to live quite comfortably, even if the French do drive him from the throne.

The means by which Napoleon has been enabled thus to accumulate this vast fortune were very simple. For twenty-five years he has had his hand in every Bourse. He could depress the funds with a frown, sink them to zero with a threat, and render them buoyant again with a smile and a promise. That he has used this power for his personal profit is not surprising. He has always had his throne upon a mine. He has never felt any security, save that which the bayonet conferred. His reign has been one of force throughout; and it is but natural that, clothed with the power to manipulate the funds of all Europe to suit his own interests, he has done so to build up this immense fortune for the future. Should this war end in his dethronement, he will be able to set up housekeeping with the Empress, and send the Prince Imperial to school, without experiencing those inconveniences of poverty which he endured before his return to France in 1848."

THE WORLD'S DOOM.—The North British Review thus comments on what it is pleased to call the "doom of our world:" "What this change is to be we do not even conjecture; but we see in the heavens themselves some traces of the destructive elements, and some indications of their power. The fragments of broken planets, the descent of meteoric stones upon the globe, the wheeling comets welding their loose materials at the solar surface, the volcanic eruptions on our own satellite, the appearance of new stars and disappearance of others, are all foreshadows of that impending convulsion to which the entire system of the world is doomed. Thus placed on a planet which is to be burned up, and under heavens that are to pass away—thus treading as it were on the cemeteries of former worlds, and dwelling in the mausoleums of other planets—is full of lessons of humility and wisdom."

PROVERBS 10.

What is virtue? asked the men of ancient days
Of sages wise, who only sung her praise,
But often practised every form of vice
By heathen gods imposed or sinful man's device.

Though called to labor in a different sphere,
Virtue like grace is seen, it must appear;
This boon of heaven alike may all obtain,
God is the giver, none e'er asked in vain.

What can we to a virtuous wife compare?
She is far above the price of jewels rare;
A crown, a glory, to her husband's head;
He safely trusts her, nor is he misled;
If troubles rise, her sympathy he'll claim,
To do him good will be her constant aim.

She seeketh wool and flax; with cheerful heart
Her willing hands perform her equal part;
Like merchants' ships she brings her food from far,
And rises early with the morning star.

Then busy, first, food for her house prepares,
Tasking her maidens, then their labor shares,
The profits of her industry abound;
See sees a field, considers, buys the ground,
Then labors hard to plant a vineyard there;
Soon flourishing the purple grapes appear.
Thus always active she her strength regains,
Her labors prosper, so she ne'er complains.

Unlike some ladies of our day, who fear
'Twould spoil their hands to make their clothes to wear,
Much less some household duty to perform;
To tend or teach their children they would scorn;

Her hands the spindle and the distaff hold;
The poor she comforts and protects from cold;
Her household next engage her anxious care,
Their clothing scarlet, and they need not fear
The drifting snows of winter, but herself has bought
Fine silk of purple dye and richly wrought.

Her husband, too, among the great is known;
He sits amidst the elders of the town,
Proud of himself, but prouder still of her,
Who thus has raised him from among the poor.
Always employed fine linen now she weaves,
And to the merchants all her store she gives;
Barters her girdles for something she may need,
To clothe her children or her household feed.
Thus strength and honor shall attend her way;
It will rejoice her at some future day.

She guides her house with wisdom, prudence, love,
And teaches them the way to realms above;
Advancing years her children round her rise;—
Some children learn their mother to despise,—
How different hers; her virtues they possess,
Her name they honor, and they call her blest.

Her husband knows her worth and praise bestows.
Though many a virtuous daughter that he knows
Adorn her father's house by bounteous deeds,
She shines above them all; the best exceeds.
Though not of beauty, she may boast her share,
Her chief, her only care is God to fear;
Her works remain when she is called to rest,
Though lost on earth, she's found among the blest.

For the World's Crisis.

THE 2300 DAYS.

When the time for "the restitution of all things," a work which should be accomplished in connection with the return of Christ, was first proclaimed as being near, there was no one evidence among the several presented that seemed so clear and undeniable as the one drawn from a vision which was given to the prophet Daniel, and explained by an angel. The time given for its duration was long, including the rise and overthrow of oppressive governments, particularly noting one, the last of the great monarchies, and which should continue in some form until the end, and which should, more than the others, tyrannize over and destroy the saints of God.

"The fourth beast was grim and horrible, and marvelously strong; it had great iron teeth; it devoured and destroyed and stamped the residue under feet. It was very unlike the other beasts, for it had ten horns whereof I took good heed, and a mouth that spake presumptuous things."

The prophet saw in the vision that for a definitely long period this power would by craft prosper, and by prospering would destroy many; for it would "make war with the saints, and prevail against them,...and wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws, and they shall be given under his power, until a time, two times, and half a time." Daniel was informed that this wonderful power out of the fourth kingdom, which is made so conspicuous in prophecy, would presume to speak great words against the Most High; to magnify himself even to the Prince of the host; to stand up against the Prince of princes until he was broken without hand; that it would by peace and by flattery destroy many, cast down the truth to the ground, and practice and prosper. "Upon this I heard one of the saints speaking [the wonderful numberer], which saint gave answer unto the one that asked this question: How long shall this vision of the daily sacrifice and of the wasting abomination endure, that the sanctuary and the power [or host] should be so trodden down? And he replied, Unto the evening and morning, even two thousand three hundred; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed again."

If it was God's design to impart such knowledge of the time when earthly governments should cease, and the curse be removed, and the earth filled with his glory, so that those living in the time of the end might be ready for, and expect, their deliverance, he had only to give further some means by which they could more clearly understand when the vision commenced. This is soon furnished by the appearing of Gabriel to Daniel for this purpose; and in view of the instructions which he then gave, it now seems strange enough that we were led to expect this event about 1843 or '4, or, at furthest, 1846 or '7.

But the saints did not take the kingdom, as we then expected: whence our mistake? All because we were not careful to follow the angel's explanation of the vision, the time of its commencing, and the event that sealed it. We followed prophetic expositors, who seem uniformly to have commenced the vision with the going forth of a commandment to repair Jerusalem, which many of them dated at B. C. 457, which view we adopted, making the death of Christ, which we supposed occurred in A. D. 33, the seal of the vision, or the ending of the seventy weeks, or 490 years of the 2300.

Thinking that we had considered the vision as directed by the angel, we were confident we should see the sanctuary cleansed. Of course, time soon proved how inattentive we had been to that which the angel had come to show. And now, if we have been sufficiently disappointed by following men, would it be imprudent or hazardous to follow the word which was spoken by an angel? Their words thus far, I believe, have been considered "steadfast," and did not Gabriel say that "seventy weeks are determined [apportioned, allotted, set apart, cut off] upon thy people and upon thy holy city"? reaching, not to the birth, or baptism, or crucifixion of Christ, but beyond, to the period "when the transgressors are come to the full"; when the "wrath upon this people," the Jews, came upon them because they had finished, or filled up, the measure of their transgression; when the predicted war upon them and their city, in which "thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee around, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee," should overtake them; when "the people [or army] of the prince that shall come, shall destroy the city and the sanctuary." And "because they served not the Lord their God with joyfulness and gladness of heart," this prince would inflict on them, during one week or seven years war, all the judgments or curses which in former times had been threatened in case they should violate their sacred covenant with God. "And he [this prince] shall make a strong bond with many for the space of a week, and when the week is half gone, he shall put down the slaying and the meat offering," or cause it to cease forever; which was effected by the utter destruction of their temple. How literally all has been fulfilled.

According to the angel, one great purpose which the division of the 2300 years was to serve, making the 490 reach to the time when God should withdraw his protection from the Jewish nation, and leave them to be devoured by their enemies, was to "seal up [or make sure] the vision and prophecy." What might have been doubtful, is by this made clear. While some may be doubtful as to the event or the time assigned for the commencement of the vision in B. C. 426, no one doubts as to the event or time assigned for the close of the 490 years, and the commencing of the 1810 remaining years in A. D. 65.

The event with which the vision is now commenced, appears in its nature most fitting and appropriate: God's remarkable interference for the protection of the Jewish nation, from India to Ethiopia, who were doomed to destruction by the unalterable law of the Medes and Persians, and their wonderful rescue, was made an epoch in their history, that its memory should not perish from their generations; and in all the Old Testament there is hardly another transaction that is related at such length, or with such perspicuity and clearness.

Other events, as given by the angel, were to occur prior to the end of the seventy weeks, some of which were connected with time, as the birth and cutting off of the Messiah, both of which met with an exact fulfillment; also to "make reconciliation for sin, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to anoint the Most Holy," etc.; and all seems harmonious and simple, and easily understood, without any mixing up and confusion of dates and events; and I most fully believe that we now have, what we once thought we had, "the unanswerable argument."

The heirs of promise have the strongest grounds of assurance, that by 1875 they, with the innumerable company who throughout the past have endured such persecutions and trials on account of their faith and love, and who are yet waiting for their deliverance, will "return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

But at what time between now and then Jesus will come and take his people up from the earth, while he removes the curse and restores the Eden state, I do not understand. But we can now see that this world is almost in that condition in which the Bible assures us it will be at that time.

I hope God will help us to be ready, and wait and come to the glorious event.

LETTER FROM BRO. WILLIAM KELLAWAY.

BRO. GRANT:—Since I last wrote you, I have by the mercy of our God and Father arrived safely in America, and am now staying for a few days with Bro. Vanderbeck, of this place. I feel that I have entered upon a responsible era of my life—that of preaching the word of the kingdom. I apprehend how great a circumspection I shall need to deal impartially that "medicine of immortality," that men might not die, but live together with God and Christ in the blessed age. May He who alone can make fruitful and effectual the gospel declared in his name grant me strength for the laborious toils, the patient endurance, and the continual sowing, which lie before me.

Beloved brother, how does the Spirit speak? what are his directions to those entering on so important a labor as that I am urged to, with a special reference to ordination? Are there any examples to guide us? any arguments by which the mind can be convinced of its being a thing "in order"? Because, if so, I should be much pleased to be recognized among the brethren as a helper in the gospel.

If any of the brethren would be pleased for me to pay them a visit, I am ready to do so. But I feel at the same time that I am nothing. I can do nothing effectually myself in promulgation of such glorious truths as are to take hold upon a man wholly, body, soul, and spirit. To take hold of his body, and turn it to diligence in business instead of acts of righteousness; his soul, and move the fountain and vigor of his life to God and his fulness; his spirit, and make it productive in those blessed thoughts and holy desires which are the fruit of the Spirit of God, similar to the mind of God, and well-pleasing to the Father and Jesus Christ.

I trust, too, to help you in the Crisis work, if agreeable to you. My mind will probably be less distracted from meditation by day and night upon God's law; so that, if you think that a few strokes from this pen occasionally will be for the glory of God and the benefit of any reader, here am I at your disposal in the Lord.

I should like to see you much; in fact, I want to see you, to talk over the prospects of the truth in England, and hold sweet communion with you, for how few of the professing hosts are like-minded with us. But I will not lament. There will be much good done yet; for the in-cast seed will yet find a kindly soil to receive it in many a good heart and true.

Bro. Grant: God bless you and keep you for his church's sake, whom you serve with a willing heart; that, until the coming of the Bridegroom, you may retain the position you occupy, and that by God only through Christ, of being a soldier in the foremost ranks of the army of Immanuel.

And there is just one more question on my mind which I must unburden to you. Should I, if Scripture teaches ordination, have to take upon me any other name than "Christian"? because, dear brother, I could not but object to that. Those only who have grown "wanton" from Christ, and wish to "make to themselves a name," or are very blind and lean to their own understandings, in my estimation are the parties to whom the simple, aye, and divine name of "Christian" has grown distasteful. Such people, having an unhealthy state of mind, will always crave for some new thing. I trust, however, that you do not require a christian laboring among you to bear a cognomen other than that which saves; for there is no other name that saves us current among men, but the name of Christ.

Will you, dear brother, please answer these questions speedily, and then you will doubtless hear again from

Your brother in Christ, W. KELLAWAY.

BLESSINGS.

There is not one among us, however destitute or afflicted, though his life may seem to be all darkness, trouble, and disappointment, but has much, yea, very much to be thankful for. We are in constant enjoyment of many blessings, which in days of adversity seem to be forgotten. This life may seem to be all trials and perplexities, nevertheless it has its corresponding days of sunshine and joy.

"Life will have its evil years,
When its skies are overcast;
All the present thronged with fears,
And with vain regrets the past."

But in the life to come, if our peace is made with God, it will be one bright eternal day of happiness, and joy unspeakable and full of glory. There will be no sin, therefore the curse will no longer rest upon us; this earth shall be restored to its former loveliness, and (cheering thought) it is to be peopled by the redeemed of God. Then let us strive, in view of the great happiness and triumph that await us, to be more faithful servants, using the talents which have been entrusted to us to the best advantage, that it may be said of us,—"Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

"Let man conform his mind
To every changing state;
Rejoicing now, and now resigned,
And the great issue wait."

BREVITY OF LIFE.

What is all this struggle in the world for? What mean I by so many attempts to be something in the sphere of nothing? This is as if foam and bubbles should contend for station on the rapid stream, which in a moment are no more. Now we are engaged and entangled in a war, and this is the time for the patriot, the politician, and the hero to appear; but how many press forward to make their appearance for the sake of being seen, as if honor could bring happiness. This I see and condemn in others, yet am guilty of it myself, forgetting that I am but of yesterday, and to-morrow am no more. It is a shame to think so much about a few days, and so little of endless ages. Let me look to the generations past; then were patriots, politicians, and heroes, and some of them the favorites of fame; now that generation is gone, this is going; that has preceded this by one step, and this by another step shall follow that. How few of our deceased acquaintance are so much as remembered; and how soon, like them, shall we also be forgotten! Many prime servants of the crown are this day sleeping in perpetual silence, and their names possess almost the same repose in some antiquated registers, that are cleared away to make room for the present, as the present in a little shall be to make room for the future....

How frail is our life! a pile of grass, a withered leaf, dry stubble, a flower, a breath, brittle clay, fading flesh. How swift! a weaver's shuttle, an eagle, a ship, a wind that passeth away, and cometh not again. How short! a moment, a breathing. While I bewail a departed friend, death, suddenly seizing me, translates the lamentation to another tongue that is most nearly concerned in me, who also in a little time must follow me into the silent grave, and leave the protracted elegy to be continued by their nearest relations. Thus mourning is continued, though the mourners are hurried away in a moment. Surely I need not be so anxious about a life so short, a state so uncertain, and a world so vain; where I am only a stranger, a pilgrim, a sojourner, and posting away from every thing below. Let the world, then, go with me as it will, this shall not trouble me, who am daily going through the world, and shall in a little go entirely out of the world, to return no more. How, then, shall I spend this short life, my few winged moments, which are all numbered to me? Surely in nothing better than in looking out, and laying up for eternity. —"Solitude Sweetened."

THE SAVIOR'S BENEDICTION.

"Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."

What beautiful and expressive words; how comforting and soul-inspiring. They have been a healing balm to thousands of troubled hearts. He who uttered them has passed away from mortal sight, and now sits "on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty" on high. But his parting blessing rests on his followers yet, and his sacred words have passed from lip to lip, from heart to heart, and have been echoed and re-echoed through the cycle of more than eighteen centuries of time; and to-day the heart of the child of God thrills at their sound, and he feels the touch of an unseen hand, and the protecting presence of an unseen personage, amid the fiercest conflicts of life; and he follows the blood-stained imprints of his feet along the thorny path with unfaltering steps, for it is He who spake as never man spake who leads the way, "Whom having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable, and full of glory."

Not that our surroundings do not at times affect our happiness, but the heart at peace with God and man, and abiding under the shadow of the Almighty, has found the never-failing source of enjoyment. And though the clouds of adversity may lower frowningly, and the winds blow rudely, and all without betoken a fierce and relentless storm, yet he stands firm and unmoved amid the fury of the passing tempest, and his heart glows with holy trust, and his eye kindles, and in his face is mirrored the sweet "peace of God, which passeth all understanding," to which his heart is not a stranger. And he often repeats with child-like faith and confidence in Him who hath said, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee,"—"I know in whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." "The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." And if for a time his songs are more plaintive than usual, he is not less hopeful; for even while he drinks the bitter chalice, he passed back in thought through the vista of ages to the time when the "Man of sorrows" knelt in Gethsemane. He pauses there, and, as if it were a scene of the present instead of the past, he witnesses his agony, sees him sweat "as it were were great drops of blood." He follows him as the Roman soldiers lead him away. He sees the crown of thorns placed on his brow, and marks how calmly he bears each insult. He passes with him up Calvary's rugged mountain to the scene of death, and there beholds him die. It is enough. And he murmurs—"Not my will but thine be done." God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way of escape, that ye may be able to bear it." "For in that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted." And though he feels again the sorrows and trials of life, his heart thrills with something akin to happiness, and he feels that "all things work together for good to them that love God." "It is enough for the servant that he be as his master. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you; if they have kept my saying, they will keep yours also."

You may take away his life, but not his cross. It is a precious burden; he can not part with it. With the cross came peace and happiness, such as the world can neither give nor take away. It is his passport to the presence of the King eternal. Once there he will bear the cross no longer, but wear a crown instead forevermore. To part with it till then would be to part with peace and happiness.

To the world religion is a mystery, and the christian an incomprehensible being. He is looked upon "as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing." The grace of God has effected a mighty change in him, and the peace, which is the peculiar gift of Him who died on Calvary, to every child of God, causes his heart to thrill with joy. With him religion is a blessed reality. It is the acme of his desires to be a meek and humble follower of Jesus.

If true happiness exists in this world, it exists in the heart of the child of God. You do not meet him with the gay and giddy throng that are madly pursuing the pleasures of earth, vainly seeking for happiness where it does not exist, restless and dissatisfied, as their ideals of the future vanish at the approach of the stern realities of the present. He breathes the atmosphere of a holier sphere. It is no wonder that he is unlike those who have not been washed in the blood which cleanseth from all sin. It would be a great wonder if he were like them.

He sees beyond the misty outlines of time the flower-decked plains of paradise, and the rippling stream of life. He is almost beneath the wide-spreading branches of life's healing tree, and the gentle zephyrs almost fan his brow. Again he murmurs, "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

"And if while on earth we wander,
This our portion with its thorn,
What shall be when, breaking yonder,
Dawns the everlasting morn?"

He who has not learned the resolute lesson of self-help has made little progress as a student; has grown little toward real manhood. Half the world refuses to do its own thinking, to toil through the solution of its own knotty problems; hence half the world who will not do this must be subject to the other half who will. They who do the thinking will either directly or indirectly do the governing.

LADD'S SHEEP STORY;
Or, How to make up a Quarrel.

William Ladd was the President of the American Peace Society, and he believed that the principles of peace, carried out, would maintain good-will among neighbors as well as among nations. But there was a time when he had not fully considered this subject—had not thought much about it, as I dare say many of my readers have not. He believed that if a man struck him a blow, it was fair and best to strike right back again, without considering if there were not some better way of overcoming the offender; or if a man did him an injury, why, as people commonly say, he would give him as good as he sent.

He had a farm; and a poor man who lived on land adjoining his, neglected to keep up a fence which it was his business to keep in order, and in consequence his sheep got into Mr. Ladd's wheat-field and did much mischief. Mr. Ladd told his man Sam to go to the neighbor and tell him he must mend the fence, and keep the sheep out. But the sheep came in again, and Mr. Ladd, who was a very orderly man himself, was provoked.

"Sam," he said, "go to that fellow, and tell him if he don't keep his sheep out of my wheat-field, I'll have them shot."

Even this did not do; the sheep were in again.

"Sam," said Mr. Ladd, "take my gun, and shoot those sheep."

"I had rather not," said Sam.

"Rather not, Sam! Why, there are but three—it's no great job."

"No sir; but the poor man has but three in the world, and I am not the person that likes to shoot a poor man's sheep."

"Then the poor man should take proper care of them. I gave him warning; why didn't he mend his fence?"

"Well, sir, I guess it was because you sent him a rough kind of a message; it made him mad, and so he would not do it."

"I considered a few minutes," said Mr. Ladd, "and then I told Sam to put the horse in the buggy."

"Shall I put in the gun?" said Sam.

"No," said I. I saw Sam half smiled, but I said nothing. I got into my buggy, and drove up to my neighbor Pulsifer. He lived a mile off, and I had a good deal of time to think the matter over.

"When I drove up to the house, the man was chopping wood. There were but few sticks of wood, and the house was poor, and my heart was softened. 'Neighbor,' I called out. Pulsifer looked sulky, and did not lift up his head. 'Come, come, neighbor,' said I. 'I have come with friendly feelings to you, and you must meet me half way.' He perceived I was in earnest, laid down his axe, and came to the wagon. 'Now, neighbor,' said I, 'we have both been in the wrong. You neglected your fence, and I got angry and sent you a provoking message. Now, let's both face about, and both do right and feel right. I'll forgive, and you shall forgive me. Now, let's shake hands.' He didn't quite feel like giving me his hand, but he let me take it.

"Now," said I, "neighbor, drive your sheep down to my south pasture. They shall share with my sheep till next spring; you shall have all the yield, and next summer we'll start fair."

"His hand was no longer dead in mine. He gave me a good friendly grasp. The tears came into his eyes, and he said:

"I guess you are a christian, squire, after all."

"That little fracas with my neighbor about the sheep was," said Mr. Ladd, "my first step in devoting myself to the cause of peace."—Ex.

A FEW THOUGHTS.

As I was out to-day picking blackberries, I got so entangled in the briers, that there did not seem to be but one possible way to get out; and that was to turn back and go over a wall. The thought struck my mind, that I was in about the same situation then that I was in before I came to Christ. Then I was hedged in by the thorns and briers of sin, and the only way to get out of them was to go to Jesus for forgiveness, and ask him to help me to resist Satan and his various emissaries. I thought those briers were like sins, the farther I went into them the thicker they were. And so when we serve Satan, he is every day weaving his web closer and closer, until it is almost impossible to get out of it. But, blessed be God, he is strong enough to break all Satan's bands, and he will at last destroy him altogether. O, hasten the day when the earth shall be regenerated, when there shall be no more sin, or sorrow, or death; when Jesus shall reign King of the new earth; when the saints will walk the golden streets of the holy city, and the redeemed shall sing praises to the Lamb which was slain for our sins. Praise God for the hope he has given me of having a home in that blest land. A home in glory will be worth bearing all the poverty and sorrow of this wicked world. For what would all the joys of this world be when compared with the joys of eternity? To me they are as nothing.

Now, fellow sinner, I beg of you to break through the briers and thorns of sin and the world, and cast yourself at the foot of the cross, looking unto Jesus for pardon and peace. Jesus himself will lift you up, and you will find rest to your weary soul. You will find in God a dear heavenly Father; in Jesus a loving Savior and everlasting Friend, and, at last, a home on the evergreen shore." Take Jesus at his word. "Whosoever will, let him come, and take of the water of life freely." Thank God, salvation is free.

To you, brothers and sisters in Christ, of whatever sect, press on in the narrow way, bravely bearing the cross, remembering the promised crown, and the hope we have of a better country, even a heavenly. Pray daily that God will bless his cause, and gather a much larger number of loving ones together up here in the mountains and hills of the old Granite State. ABBIE.

For the World's Crisis.

TO THE SCATTERED FLOCK.

To the dear brethren and sisters of like precious faith, greeting: It is a source of joy to me to hear from you through the columns of the Crisis, and to know that God is prospering you in believing the plain teachings of the Bible. O how beautifully the Scriptures harmonize, when we get all prejudice out of our hearts, and come to God in faith believing, asking for that wisdom which he has promised to give so liberally. Amid all the error and false teachings of the present day, how cheering it is to the true child of God, who loves the truth, to know that God has a people who will stand out boldly and fearlessly upon the great and sublime truths contained in the sacred word.

Less than two years ago, I embraced the precious truths by which we are distinguished from other christian churches. In early life, I was taught that man has an immortal soul which ascends to heaven at death, or descends to hell, to receive its reward. It was a long time before I would give up my false notions, and believe in the Bible way of obtaining immortality through Christ, at the resurrection. Some of my friends expressed their regret at my being led away into such erroneous ideas, and look upon me as one departing from the true faith; but I thank God the light shines; and if we will give heed to it, we shall be led into the same old beaten paths which the prophets and apostles trod. How easy it is to understand the Scriptures, when we are led by the Spirit of God, and are really willing and anxious to know the truth.

Most certainly the coming of Christ is at the door. Indications in the natural world show this to be a fact. Signs in the heavens above, and upon the earth beneath, and the state of the church, all proclaim that it is even so. Are we ready to meet him at his coming? Are we really looking for and loving his appearing? If so, then it will be a joyful day to us. Let us be faithful unto the end, that we may receive a crown of righteousness. How cheering the thought, that these vile bodies are so soon to be changed and made like Christ's glorious body, to die no more, but to live on the earth when it is restored to its Eden beauty; when the New Jerusalem shall come down from heaven, "prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." How I long to be there with the saints of all ages. Let us watch and be faithful, that we may hear the welcome words: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Porter, Aug. 29th. ALBERT RICE.

ENGLAND AND NAPOLEON.

Mr. Purden, the editor and publisher of "The Vials," at Torquay, Eng., speaks quite plainly to the English people. In the Sept. No. of "The Vials," he says:—

"Whatever may be the result of the present war, there can be no doubt that it will teach the world one mournful lesson—the worthlessness and the corruption of Protestantism. For twenty years the Emperor of the French has been our faithful ally; we ourselves have repeatedly boasted of his friendship. He was our ally especially in the Crimean war; his troops saved the British division from destruction at the battle of Inkermann; his troops took the Malakoff battery, and gained Sebastopol, when our troops, through bad generalship, were obliged to fly headlong from the Redan. He has at all times shown friendship to this country, both in his public character as Emperor and in his private capacity as a man; has continued to show his good will, even after our flagitious conduct in the case of the Orsini conspiracy, and yet what has been the return which he has received from Protestant and British gratitude? No sooner has he got into difficulties than the British nation turns against him with an hatred amounting to ferocity. The Times, with its unvarying baseness, takes the lead. We exult over his misfortunes, and we foretell his immediate fall. We exaggerate every error that he has committed, and persecute him with abuse as if he had always been our bitterest enemy. All recollection of his services and his good will is scattered to the winds, and no nation in all Europe (not even Prussia with which he is at war) has shown such malignant hatred as the nation which for twenty years has boasted of his friendship.

Who, after this, will place any trust in the gratitude or the honesty of Protestantism? We made use of him to the utmost, especially in the Crimea; when we wanted his alliance against Russia we loaded him with flatteries; invited him over to our royal palaces, followed him in the streets with cheers and laudations; and when we wanted his alliance no longer we exulted in the Orsini conspiracy, acquitted, amidst a tumult of applause, the villain who had assisted in the infamous conspiracy, and made the fortune of Bernard, because we knew in our hearts that he had sought the destruction of our ally! And now we follow up with base consistency our plan of hatred and malignity. The moral degradation of Protestantism is greater than the physical degradation of the Emperor. He may recover from the one, but we never, by any possibility, can recover from the other. Baseness and ingratitude are stamped upon our history forever. Failure is only a weakness, but baseness is a crime."

TALK ABOUT CHILDREN.

A well-regulated household must have decided, fixed laws, and these laws must be obeyed. Children must be trained under established rules; must undergo a drill, a discipline; for nature, notwithstanding our faith, is refractory,—needs control,—breaks out in all manner of contortions, if let alone. She is so apt to take a wrong course, if not directed in the right. Then, all inherit from the old dame more or less indolence. Do not grown up folks need strong necessity to continually incite, urge, spur them to action? We would not even now dare, after our childhood's restraint and discipline are over, to throw off all obligation; to be free from pressing duties; to set aside must-be-dones, though they seem hard, at times; yet these alone save us from laziness and rust.

Human nature can be treated to ease and cushions, as a luxury, but taken as a "regular diet," is ruinous to all enterprise, all usefulness. So, there must be laws, strict but not severe, helping, urging, compelling children on to action involving future usefulness, though they may not understand the reasons, at the time. But we would not have all life bounded and hampered by law,—lost in machinery; we would not have childhood chained, but we do believe, most emphatically, in healthy, well-balanced training; it is the crucible that brings out the gold from the dross. Do not infer from this figure that we believe in a hot discipline. We have the utmost horror of the ruling of a household by a rod of iron,—of a government by fear. To see parents inspire terror instead of love; throw a cloud instead of sunshine, by their presence, is unutterably sad; but we think the time of parental severity has passed away, and we sometimes fear we are tending to the other extreme. There is no reason why parents and children should not enjoy the sweetest companionship; free, easy, confidential, yet marked with a certain respect; filial obedience on the one hand, and love and protection on the other.—Wood's Household Words.

☞ "I never," said a truly good man, "was really happy until I gave up trying to be somebody." The effort is made in two ways. To be one's own savior, in part: and to be one's own master, at least in part. In the first case, simple trust in Jesus is the remedy. In the latter, subjection to the will of the true Master. The more perfect trust in Christ, and the more perfect obedience, the more blessedness.

☞ A missionary writes that a Nestorian convert traveled sixty miles through deep snow and piercing cold, in order to be present at the administration of the Lord's Supper. How many members of the church in Christian countries do not travel sixty rods to enjoy such an occasion?

THROAT DISEASE.

Some years ago, a poor young man hired a small room in Boston for the purpose of selling old and new books at auction, in the long winter nights. He understood his business, the wants and tastes of the people, and was successful; his little room began to be crowded, while the heat of the stove, the smoke of segars, the fumes of tobacco saliva, and the emanations from a motley mob of human beings, made the apartment a poisonous hole. The audience was different every night and was continually changing, by individuals coming in and taking the places of those going out, but the auctioneer remained the whole time, not only breathing a vitiated atmosphere, but overstraining and overheating the voice-organs.

In this heated and exhausted condition he would go out into the cold air to his home. His mouth being open in walking, his throat and neck unprotected against the winter air, the voice-organs became diseased; presently they began to lose their power of throwing off the effects of the little colds taken from time to time which invariably settled in the throat. Meanwhile slighter causes gave colds, and longer time was required to get rid of them, and all at once he noticed that he was frequently hacking or hemming or clearing his throat; then a little tickling in the throat; next ever so slight a cough on rising in the morning. But while all this was going on, he was making a fortune, and he retired from business with a hundred thousand dollars and a consumptive cough, of which he died in less than a year after he gave up business.

This narration applies to clergymen, some of whom die every year long before their time, from simply exposing themselves to the outdoor air too soon after preaching. Some get on a horse or into a vehicle to fulfill an appointment miles away, and in the quiet condition of the body, while thus riding, and there being more or less wind in motion, the tender voice-organs are chilled in a few seconds, inducing, sometimes within an hour, more or less of clearing the throat by hemming.

In some constitutions, naturally feeble from age, or a too sedentary life, pneumonia is induced by such an exposure, followed by death in a few days. One of the most eminent and able clergymen of this generation thus perished not long ago. If men do not learn and obey the laws of our being, a miracle will not be wrought to save them from the penalty. Even in summer-time it is dangerous to ride immediately after delivering an address; take an hour to cool off slowly, and eat something first —for instance, a good warm dinner.—Hall's Journal.

HOW SHALL I DROP TOBACCO?

1. Don't trifle with the habit, as a thing of little consequence. Nothing is contemptible, Nothing should be treated as puerile, which conquers you and your fellow-men.

2. Don't imagine that you can drop it by degrees. The idea of using less and less, till the habit tapers down to nothing, is well-nigh ridiculous.

3. Use no Substitutes. Men of distinction, whose names are at hand, have recommended spices, hemp, pitch-pine, paper saturated in tar, and even tobacco of bad quality. These gentlemen, for the most part, however, found them of no service in their own case; for, in spite of substitutes, they died as they lived, using tobacco.

4. Don't try to give it up. Unless you have considerable grit and a will of your own, you will find trying and doing different things in killing off this king of appetites.

Give it up! Yes, give it up! This you have not done, for trying is not doing. Give it up understandingly, in view of many and powerful motives. Give it up in the fear of God, and in the strength he imparts. Concentrate the whole man upon the resolve; give it up once for all.

FOLLY OF WEARING CHIGNONS.

Copious perspiration will result from much bodily activity, and if the chignon be worn at such times, it will smell badly. Besides, those organs of the brain covered by the thick, heavy pad, will become unduly heated, excited, and probably perverted by this most unphysiological and unhealthy fashion. Headaches will follow; and even aberrations of mind will be traced to loading down the head with such artificial abominations as these. What are they but generators of brain fever? Do they not draw the blood to those parts, and produce abnormal action? Certainly they do; and the amative propensity, with its adjacent organs, are the ones injuriously affected. If ladies prefer to wear their hair in curls, braids, or in nets, of course it is their privilege to do so; but to pile on those ridiculous "waterfalls," vulgarly so-called, indicates something worse than foolish vanity. If modest and virtuous women realized the significance of the present head gear, they would drop it for very shame. —Ex.

ALCOHOL IN CONSUMPTION.—The experiments of Dr. Thompson concerning the effect of alcohol in "consumption" have been confirmed. Dr. John Bell, of New York, in a prize essay, to which $200 was awarded by the faculty, thus states his conclusions:—

1. The opinion so largely prevailing as to the effects of the use of alcoholic liquors namely, that they have a marked influence in preventing the deposition of tubercle, is destitute of any foundation.

2. On the contrary, their use predisposes to tubercular deposition.

3. Where tubercle already exists, alcohol has no effect in modifying the course usually run by that substance.

4. Neither does it mitigate the morbid effects of tubercle upon the system in any stage of the disease.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE PUBLICATION SOCIETY.

Mr. President and Brethren of the Advent Christian Association,—

There have been two meetings of the Society during the past year, both on this ground.

At the first meeting, Sept. 2nd, 1869, the following business was transacted:

It was voted—

That the Treasurer be authorized to execute the instructions of the Board of Managers of the Advent Christian Association to pay the expenses of their recent meeting in Boston (July, 1869).

That George T. Adams be continued as Business Agent the ensuing year, at the same salary as last year, $200; and that his salary as Treasurer be the same as last year, $300.

That the Secretaries of the two Societies be paid $20 each for their services the past year.

That whatever sum be received from the Turner donation, three-fourths of it be appropriated to the Tract Fund, and one-fourth to the Poor Fund.

That the Editor of the "World's Crisis" receive, in addition to his salary of $15 per week, ten per cent of all collections for the papers of the Society, made when absent from the Boston office, or from any temporary Campmeeting office.

That the officers of the Society receive the papers of the Society, and a copy of each new publication, free.

That the Treasurer be authorized to expend such sums as he may deem necessary (not to exceed $100) in encouraging and remunerating writers for the papers of the Society.

The following Resolutions were adopted:

That we raise $3000 for the Tract Fund the ensuing year.

That the Business Agent be authorized to get out an extra Crisis, or Circular, stating the object of the Tract Fund, and soliciting donations for the same, with such other interests of the Society as may be thought best.

That all advertisements or notices of books or other articles covering individual interests, be under the control of the Business Agent.

At the meeting of the Board in this place last evening, August 22nd, the following business was transacted:

The Secretary's minutes were read and approved.

The Reports of the Treasurer and Business Agent were read, accepted and adopted, and ordered to be read before the Advent Christian Association.

The reasons for omitting to issue an extra Crisis, or Circular, in behalf of the Tract Fund and other interests of the Society, as authorized at the previous meeting, were given by the Business Agent, and his action was approved. Whereupon, the Society adjourned, sine die. WM. B. HERRON, Secretary.

BUSINESS AGENT'S REPORT.

Brethren of the Advent Christian Publication Society:—

Time in its onward march has brought us to the close of another year. And being continued through the mercy and blessing of our heavenly Father, it devolves upon me, as your executive Agent, to report to you the business operations of the Society for the past year.

Since our last annual report, we have been obliged, in consequence of the widening of the street on which our office was situated, to remove the same. Fortunately we procured rooms on the same street, directly opposite our former office; and although our rent is considerably increased, it being now $550.00 per annum, with the additional expense of fitting up the rooms, yet for the situation, amount of room, and the eligibility of the same, our rent is considered very low. The accommodations are quite satisfactory to those engaged at the office, and to all of our friends who have visited us in our new quarters.

The Capital

With which we commenced the business of the year, as reported last year, was $14,703.86. Our present capital we put as follows:—

Property on hand, valued at	$9,959 30
Cash in the Treasury	899 51
Amount due the Crisis, valued at	5000 00
" " Young Pilgrim, valued at	400 00
" " on book acct.	300 00
Total capital	16,558 81

Our receipts the past year were $20,399.02, which is $140.38 more than the previous year, and received in about two weeks' less time. Of this amount, $690.00 were received from the Executors of the estate of the late Bro. J. Turner, of Levant, Me., it being the balance of $750.00, less revenue tax of $60 due the Society, to which reference was made in our report of last year.

The Book and Tract Department.

We have published during the past year 2,080,720 pages of tracts, several of which are new ones, namely, "Christian Union," "The Gate to Glory," "The Mystery of Iniquity," "Scripture, or Popular Theology?" and an old tract long since out of print, "The Final Judgment." We have also published an edition of 1500 copies of the "Jubilee Harp."

There continues to be a fair demand for the various books issued by the Society,—the Harp, Hymns, Question Books, Tracts, etc., etc. The value of books and tracts on hand at the beginning of the year, was $3.291.32. The cost of books and tracts made and purchased during the year, is $2,952.66. Due on books, sales about the same as last year. Total books and tracts, $6,243.98. The receipts for books and tracts were $3,881.85. Amount received from the tract fund for tracts granted, $752.89. Total sales and grants, $4,634.74. Value of books, tracts, and papers on hand, $3,572.42. Total, $8,207.16.

The World's Crisis.

This paper, which has the largest circulation of any devoted to the proclamation of the great truths of the speedy coming of the Lord Jesus, the unconscious state of the dead, their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked, has continued to enjoy about its usual degree of prosperity. At the beginning of the year we were printing a weekly edition of some 8700 copies, there being upon our subscription list, 8,492 names. We now issue an edition of over 9000 per week. The number of names on the subscription list is 8,774. The number of new subscribers is 1399; the number of stoppages 1125; making an increase of 274 during the year. The stoppages the past year are larger than usual, one reason of which, we think, is the fact that a large number of bills have been sent the subscribers, to which some have responded by sending the amount due, requesting the paper to be discontinued. Others have informed us of their inability to pay, and requested the paper stopped. The number of free subscribers on our list at the present time is 839, being an increase of 30 since last year.

The expense of our free list, at our usual rates, it will be seen, is nearly $2100.00. On the free list Maine has 137, N. H. 107, Vt. 33, Mass. 146, R. I. 30, Ct. 72, New York 100, Mich. 30, Wis. 30, Ill. 33, Iowa 22; the other States from 1 to 5 each.

The receipts for the Crisis during the year have been on the subscription list, $14,315.96; on the poor fund, $66.26. Total, $14,382.22. The expenditures about $13,500.00, not including outlays for new type, fitting office, etc. We are receiving a fair response to the large number of bills sent out to subscribers, who are largely in arrears. Some who have been in debt for the paper for years, have remitted the amount due, and have also paid in advance for some time to come; but from the larger portion we have as yet had no response. It is recommended that if, after a proper time, we do not hear from such, that their names be dropped from the list, that the Society be enabled to continue the Crisis to those who really desire it, but who are not able to pay for it.

The prospects of the Crisis are good. Various brethren have been, and still are, doing considerable to extend its circulation; but we fear there are many who are not as active in this direction as they might be. We hope the friends will renew their efforts to increase the influence of this messenger of the soon coming Lord Jesus.

The Young Pilgrim.

The number of names upon the subscription list of this paper is 4116; last year it was 4346. The receipts the past year have been, on subscription, $842.50. On the Pilgrim poor fund, $23.50. Total receipts, $866.00. The expenditures about $1300.00. The number sent out free is about 100. There is quite an amount due on the subscription. We have not sent out bills to the subscribers the past year. This should be done immediately after the Campmeetings.

The Tract Fund.

The amount received on the Tract Fund the past year is $1,268.95. Of this amount $690.00 were received from the Turner donation. Tracts and papers have been sent out for free distribution in most parts of the country. We believe there has been no application for tracts but what has been granted. Tracts and papers have been granted to the amount of $752.89, leaving a balance of the year unexpended of $516.06. The Tract work, next to the Crisis, we consider the most important of all our interests. Every one should have a package of good tracts, such ones as the present times demand, at hand ready to give to those with whom they meet, as the Lord may open the door, scattering the truth in all directions. Brethren, let us take hold anew in this matter, and be in earnest in spreading the truth the few days remaining unto the coming of the blessed Lord.

The Poor Fund.

The amount received on the Poor Fund the past year was $66.26. In addition to this, however, may be added a portion of the Turner donation—on faith of the same—$235.00, which was, by vote of the Society, applied to the Poor Fund. We are still receiving applications for the Crisis from many who are very poor, and, in some cases, quite destitute. And it often saddens our heart to read the letters received from some who are in debt for the paper, but who cannot at present pay, who do not want to give it up, yet feel that they must unless they are put upon the free list. We feel that there are those—God's worthy poor, who must have the paper just so long as the Society have the means to send it. There are many who are in arrears in their payments for the Crisis, which, if they would pay up promptly, would aid the Society greatly in responding to the call of those who are poor, and who are not able to pay for the paper, but who greatly desire it. Let every one do his duty in this direction.

Brethren, we have much reason to praise God for his favor and blessing enjoyed the past year; that our lives have been preserved; that our publications have had a good circulation, and that the means have been put into our hands with which we have been enabled to issue so much printed matter, proclaiming the coming and kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the necessary preparation to meet him. And while the evidences on every hand indicate to us that the great day of the Lord is near, and hasteth greatly, let us so engage in the work of the Lord, that when he shall come he may say unto us, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

All of which is respectfully submitted.

GEO. T. ADAMS,
Business Agent A. C. P. Society.

THE TAUCHNITZ NEW TESTAMENT.

The Tauchnitz edition of the New Testament, edited by Tischendorf, is having a wide circulation. It spreads before the multitudes in palpable form, some of the manuscript variations which have for centuries been known to intelligent students of the Bible. We are heartily glad to have it so. The thorough knowledge of the facts—all the facts—will prove, to the community as it has proved to a great company of scholars already, the firmest ground of confidence in the general integrity of our Scripture text, in the comparative unimportance of the variations, and in the power of ascertaining usually which is the true reading in cases of deviation. They will find the total and the special teachings of God's word to be unaffected, except as they are sometimes presented in a more striking manner or cleared of certain minor difficulties.

1. How came the variations? They are absolutely inevitable (without miracle) in the process of copying. You put a manuscript into the hands of a copyist or a printer, and especially let it be copied from copies, and you will soon find words changed, omitted, repeated, misspelled. A man sends an article to a review; and though it has passed two or three times under the proof-reader's eye, and perhaps once or twice under his own, how almost certain it is to contain some provoking errors. Multiply this by the thousand upon thousand times that the New Testament was copied before the art of printing, and one can see how there must be a multitude of variations. A large gilt edged copy of the Bible published by the American Bible Society in 1841, which I read for convenience at family prayers, contains scores of misprints, some of them very absurd, which I recognize in an instant, and instantly know what they were intended for. I open the second volume of Bekker's Aristotle, and find an average of more than twenty various readings to a page throughout the volume. Yet that was edited from seven Greek manuscripts, while the New Testament has been examined in more than a thousand manuscripts, besides versions and quotations in the early Fathers. "The manuscripts of Terence's comedies, which are but six in number, and have been copied a thousand times less frequently than the New Testament, contain thirty thousand variations." Shakespeare's plays have been in existence but little over two and a half centuries, and that too since the art of printing. Yet if we compare the various printed editions, and take into account also the varieties of spelling as well as of readings, what innumerable differences! The New Testament text is in comparison with such works a marvel of stability.

2. How long have these differences been observed? Certainly for sixteen hundred years. In the first half of the third century, the learned Origen speaks of the "diversity of copies," others of the fathers speak of the different readings in particular instances, while the oldest manuscripts are marked with numerous emendations by different hands. The subject began to attract special attention in connection with the printed text. When Erasmus first published the Greek Testament in 1516, he had five manuscripts (not entire, however), and from these he settled his text. By the help of another manuscript he made some 420 corrections and changes in the second edition, and about 150 in the third. As his manuscripts were modern, his principal one being of the fifteenth century, the wonder is that his edition was so good. Six years later (1522) appeared the Complutensian Polyglott in Spain, containing the New Testament edited probably from six or eight codices, also modern. These two original editions, that of Erasmus and the Complutensian, formed in general the basis of the present Greek text. They modified each other; and as successive editions were published at short intervals, other manuscripts were compared, till, as early as 1550, Robert Stevens had compared sixty-five of them with the text of Erasmus, and Theodore Beza, thirty years later, many additional ones, together with the Syriac and an Arabic version. Numerous corrections thus took place, and in 1633 was published the Greek text which then took and has since retained the name of "the received text," the Elzevir edition. It is, with slight modifications, the text which until lately has been commonly printed, and is substantially that to which King James' version conforms.

3. What amount of investigation has since been expended upon the criticism of the text! An amount unparalleled in the history of literature. Passing over all intermediate labors, Dr. John Mill devoted the labor of thirty years to the work of collecting and comparing manuscripts, and lived but fourteen days after the publication. Then came John James Wetstein, who spent another thirty years in the collation, making journeyings to Germany, France, Holland and England. It was a work of marvelous labor; his various readings and authorities constitute a million quotations. After him came Griesbach, whose labors extended over nearly the same length of time. Schultz spent twelve years, and visited thirty libraries scattered through Europe, in accumulating materials; and Tischendorf has given more than thirty years to this work, visiting the libraries of Cambridge, Oxford, Rome, Florence, Venice, Modena, Naples, Milan, Turin, Verona, Basle, Zurich, Leipsic, Dresden, Munich, Vienna, Wolfenbuttel, the convent of St. Galleus, the monasteries at Cairo and the Libyan desert, those at Mount Sinai, Jerusalem, and the dead Sea, at Patmos, Constantinople and Athens. Six years he spent in journeying alone. These four men thus spent more than one hundred years of herculean labor on this investigation—without mentioning the labors of Walton, Fell, Bengel, Matthaei, Birch, Scholz, Lachmann, Knapp, Titmann, Scholt, and others.

As the result there have been found, and more or less collated, nearly a thousand manuscripts, covering parts or the whole of the New Testament, forty-seven of which are more than a thousand years old, others twelve hundred, fourteen hundred, and two (the Sinaitic and Vatican) fifteen hundred years old. Besides these, the early translations have been examined, of which the Latin and the Syriac date from the second century, the Gothic from the year 360, the Ethiopic from the fourth century, the Coptic probably from the fourth, and the Sahidic probably from the third. The quotations in all the Christian Fathers for the several first centuries have also been examined and compared. The whole world has thus been ransacked, and the field has been gone over. While we may hope that some other manuscripts may still come to light, scholars do not anticipate important additions to the present materials.

The Sinaitic codex, recently discovered, presents a striking correspondence to the Vatican, which has been known for four hundred years. Indeed, the reading of a given manuscript can often be largely anticipated from its general resemblance to others—the class to which it belongs. And when we take into account the immense number which have already been examined, representing every age and country, together with the exploration of the early fathers and the early versions also, the most that can be reasonably expected of other manuscripts, is that they shall weaken or strengthen readings already known, excepting mere and obvious mistakes; and little weight will be accorded to them in this direction unless they should prove of the very highest antiquity. Tischendorf well says, "No single work of ancient Greek classical literature can command three such original witnesses as the Sinaitic, Vatican, and Alexandrine, to the integrity and accuracy of the text." When we add all the other immense apparatus of textual criticism, there is no comparison between the cases. And one of the most striking testimonies to the general character of these numerous manuscripts, is the fact that a text formed by Erasmus from half-a-dozen copies taken at random, should conform so closely to the results of the most enormous research. When the investigation began, infidels like Collins hoped great things from it, as a means of weakening confidence in the New Testament; and good men like Bengel were anxious and almost alarmed. But skeptics long ago ceased to hope for any aid from these explorations, and good men began to see how gloriously and impregnably they were settling the basis of our faith.—Advance. (To be concluded.)

ANTICHRIST, FALSE CHRIST, AND FALSE PROPHET.

Greenfield, in his Greek Lexicon of the New Testament, thus defines the three words forming the caption of this article: "Antichristos, antichrist, an opposer of Christ." "Pseudochristos, a false Christ, pretended Messiah." "Pseudopropheetees, a false prophet, one who falsely claims to speak and act by divine inspiration; either one who pretends to foretell future events or who teaches false doctrines."

False Christs and false prophets shall arise after the setting up of the abomination of desolation, as we learn from Matt. 24: 15–24. The abomination is foretold in the fifteenth verse; and, the order of events being progressive, we reach the 24th verse before the rise of the false Christs and the false prophets. Bearing this order in mind, no one can mistake the time relative to the other things foretold in the same discourse of our Great Prophet—Jesus the Christ. Let the living, when those deceivers shall appear, remember the words of Jesus: "Behold, I have told you before." 25th verse.

Antichrist is used by John only, and in the following places: 1 John 2: 18, 22; 4: 3; 2 John, 7. Four times in the singular, once in the plural. Jesus the Christ was a man—the "many antichrists" were just so many men; and "the antichrist" will be a man. The Christ, being the Son of God, held and taught the best of principles, but they were not the Christ. They may be appropriately called Christian principles. The antichrist will hold and teach the worst of principles, but they will not be the antichrist. They may be appropriately called anti-christian principles. The anti-christ cannot differ so widely from the "many antichrists" that, while they were men, he is or will be abstract principles!

Webster, in his Unabridged Dictionary, says: "ANTICHRIST [Greek anti, against, and Christ.] A great adversary of Christ; the man of sin; described in 1 John 2: 18; 2 Thess. 2; Rev. 9."

By not translating the Greek article before antichrist in the four places where the noun is found in the singular, King James' translators failed to give the English version the definiteness of the inspired Greek. We will quote with the article:

"Little children, it is the last time: and as ye have heard that the antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrists; whereby we know that it is the last time." (1 John 2: 18. "Who is the liar, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is the anti-christ that denieth the Father and the Son." 22 v. "And every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God: and this is that spirit of the antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world." 4: 3. "For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is the deceiver and the antichrist." 2 John 7.

"Ye have heard that the Antichrist shall come." He is minutely described in the prophecies of Daniel, and partially by Paul, and by John in his first Epistle, and in the Revelation. In subsequent numbers, we shall present so great a collection of prophetic testimony characterising him, that he can be as certainly known to be the antichrist as Jesus of Nazareth was certainly known to be the Christ. Let this thought abide in your mind. The antichrist will be revealed before the Christ, and will continue on earth till the Christ return.—The Key of Prophecy.

THE PRAYER OF FAITH.

"The prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord will raise him up, and if they have committed sin, it shall be forgiven him."—JAMES 5: 15.

How blessed it is to believe God's precious word. Why will not men accept it, and be saved from much trouble here, and eternally in the world to come? I believe with all my heart that our daughter, living in Ill., was raised from a bed of sickness, and to all appearance from death, by the earnest prayer of faith of God's dear children in Rochester; and how dear they have seemed to me ever since. God bless them. She was taken on Saturday with congestion of the brain, and in a short time was a raving maniac. It took two men to hold her on the bed. She grew worse, and on Monday morning we received a dispatch to come as soon as possible, if we wished to see her alive. Wife started the same night, with a sorrowful heart, not knowing whether she would find her alive or not on her arrival. Tuesday, it was supposed by the neighbors she would not live the day out.

The same evening we met for prayer in Rochester. I felt I must go and request the church to pray for her. I did so with a heart overflowing with grief, nevertheless believing in my heart that whatsoever we asked in faith believing, nothing doubting, we should receive; and, glory be to God forever, he did hear his children cry at that time; for they were in earnest, and their prayers were effectual in her behalf; although hundreds of miles apart, yet the healing balm was applied by the great Physician. I have it from her own hand, for at the self-same time she began to recover, and on the arrival of her mother, Wednesday morning, she was composed and rational, and talked freely of home and friends in R. It seems also that at the same time we were praying, her mother, who was riding on the cars, seemed to lose all anxiety for her daughter, when a little while before it was all anxiety mixed with hope and fear. She could not tell what it meant, but felt assured all was well.

In a letter to me a few days ago, my daughter writes: "How glad I am for praying parents, and to be connected with a praying church. I felt that night as though somebody was praying for me, although I did not speak of it at the time for fear some would scout at such an idea; but those were my honest convictions."

With these evidences, how can I doubt? how can any one do less than to believe that the blessed book is the sure word of God? Brethren and sisters, let us have more living faith in the promises of the great I AM; for now "the just shall live by faith."

I have penned these lines to encourage others to lay hold upon that faith that will take no denial, and for no other motive but to glorify God. Yours looking for speedy redemption,

N. MCCULLOCH.

For the World's Crisis.

NOTHING BUT CHRIST.

When we start out on life's journey, with what bright hopes we look forward to the future. In our imaginations we picture to ourselves a long, smooth path, all strewn with roses. But as we journey on year after year, through the various walks in life, how vastly different many of us find it from what we at first imagined. How many sad disappointments beset our pathway; how many heart-rending sorrows it is our lot to bear, that we little dreamed of before; and those bright hopes that are anticipated with so much joy, all blasted; thorns now beset our pathway instead of roses, dark clouds hovering over us, that we expect each moment to break in sorrow o'er our heads. Our lot looks to us the hardest of all to bear; and we wonder why it is that we should have to encounter such great trials in life, while so many others seem to glide along smoothly on life's journey.

O, poor, short-sighted creatures that we are. Bright and joyous were the hopes we anticipated for the future in this life, but what hope had we of an inheritance in the life beyond this? None at all; our minds were so deeply engrossed in the pursuit of earthly pleasures, that we saw not the importance of seeking the kingdom of God and his righteousness.

Was it not necessary, then, that the Lord should lay his hand heavily upon us, in order to bring us to realize that it is not "all of life to live, nor "all of death to die"? Let us not murmur nor complain beneath the chastening rod, but remember that "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," and rejoice that he has led us in a way that was for our own spiritual good; to teach us to leave the world, with all its vain and transitory pleasures behind us, and seek after those pleasures that are lasting, that fade not away; to live for Christ, and do all that we can for the upbuilding of his great and glorious cause. May the language of our hearts be—

Farewell, vain world, I bid adieu,
Your glories I despise;
Your friendship I'll no more pursue,
Your flatteries are but lies.

You promise happiness in vain,
Nor can you satisfy;
Your highest pleasures turn to pain,
And all your treasures die.

Had I the Indies east and west,
And riches of the sea;
Without my God I could not rest,
For he is all to me.

Portland, Me. M. E. CHUTE.

—Cheerfulness will ever characterize a "happy home;" for it radiates like the sunshine, lighting up its own little world, and giving brightness to others, that but for its genial warmth, would forever remain amid the shadows, cold and desolate.

NEW VOLUME.

This number of the Crisis begins a new volume. We purpose to spare no pains in making "our paper" such an one as should be in every christian family; one that all who read it will be anxious to see in the hands of their neighbors and friends. Now is a good time to get new subscribers. Please show your paper to others, and ask them to read it, and become subscribers. By so doing, many new ones may become interested in the blessed hope of soon seeing Jesus.

We would earnestly request all preachers, who are in sympathy with the Crisis, to present it before their congregation to obtain new subscribers. With a little extra effort on the part of each preacher, a large addition may be made to our subscription list, and the readers of the paper receive a special benefit. Come, brethren, lend a helping hand. The truths we love so well should be spread as far as possible. It is a duty we owe to our fellow men. Let us all awake to the importance of this great work. Time is short. Work while it is called to-day.

APPROACHING EVENTS.

The signs of the times are thrillingly interesting. Never before have the tokens been so bright in favor of the speedy coming of Christ. But a few more jots and tittles remain to be accomplished before the coming of the "King of glory." The fall of Rome may be expected as one of the closing events just before the advent of our Redeemer. The present signs indicate that she will soon go down. For more than a thousand years she has boasted of her glory, and been called "the eternal city," while her popes have held sway over kings and emperors, who have supported the papal heads in their exalted position; but now she is about to come down and sit in the dust, like old Babylon. She shall "no more be be called the lady of kingdoms." Her "cup" is full. Her end has come. Soon we may expect to hear the proclamation—"Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen;" and hear her lovers crying, "Alas! alas! that great city that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls; for in one hour so great riches is come to nought."

When she goes down, and her sympathizers are mourning over her fall, the "holy apostles and prophets" are called on to "rejoice over her;" hence they must have a resurrection from the dead soon after her overthrow; but they cannot rise from the dead before the coming of Christ; consequently his coming must soon take place

Dear Brn. and Srs., let us keep "unspotted from the world."

CAMPMEETING AT MECHANIC FALLS.

Thursday, Sept. 15th, we left Boston for the Mechanic Falls campmeeting. The ground is pleasantly located on the bank of a river, about half a mile from the village. There were over twenty tents, including the Maine Mission Tent, in the charge of Bro. and Sr. Taylor, whose labors have been much blest during the summer. We found some earnest workers in the vineyard of the Lord, who are anxiously waiting for the coming of the Son of man.

At a meeting in the mission tent, there was interesting talk from those who have been laboring in the south. They uniformly state that the field is all white for the harvest, and they wonder that so few feel ready to assist in the good work of sending the gospel of the kingdom to those hungry souls. Touching appeals were made to those who had the means to help, and were not made in vain. We have reason to thank the Lord that some feel so interested for those out of Christ, that they are willing to make noble sacrifices for the purpose of getting them to come to Jesus. May the Lord increase the number of laborers and helpers. A thousand faithful men and women are needed to-day to go through the south, and elsewhere, proclaiming the good news of Jesus' speedy coming. Who will go? There are a number of faithful souls who would be glad to go, but have not the means to pay their necessary expenses. Who will help them?

It is a heavy cross to leave home and dear friends to go among strangers, be slandered, threatened by the enemies of the cross, be shunned by respectable people, professors of religion, and their ministers; have poor and scanty fare, with scarcely a welcome from any one; yet there are many who are willing to endure all this gladly to please the dear Savior, and persuade some more to be his followers. Let those who cannot go as missionaries, deny themselves, make a sacrifice, and share in the burdens of those who are called to go forth and proclaim the glad tidings that earth's night of sorrows is about to close forever. Again we inquire, who will help? Time is short. There is no room for delay. If we do any thing, it must be done quickly. The last sands of time are dropping out. Soon the door of mercy will be closed. Shall we make an extra effort in these last days to save men? Shall we have any occasion to repent of any thing done for the glory of the Lord?

The campmeeting was a pleasant success. Several were converted, and two baptized. The love-feast Sabbath morning was a refreshing season. One hundred and thirty-five testified for Jesus in forty-five minutes. Many have received special benefit from the meeting. It is purposed to continue the meetings there till the Lord comes. It was estimated that some over three thousand were present Sabbath day. We had good order and attention. There was preaching at the stand by Bro. Wellcome and the writer, and Sr. S. K. Taylor (formerly Sr. S. K. Paine) preached two very interesting sermons in the mission tent. All appeared satisfied with the result of the meeting.

WILL YOU HELP?

The time has come for every christian to do all he can to arouse a careless world and formal professors from their perilous condition. This is the time for action. One good act is worth a dozen resolutions to do something. There is abundance of evidence that the tracts sent out are doing a great work. This should encourage all to do more. Good tidings are coming in from all directions in favor of these silent, but successful messengers. Who will help scatter them?

The following is a sample of what tracts may do, and have done:

"A Baptist missionary, while taking a tour through the mountainous regions of Burmah, found a village in which a large number of inhabitants were familiar with christianity, and the way opened for its establishment among them. No missionary had ever visited them, and their only source of instruction was a small bundle of religious tracts, which had been obtained by one of their number some years ago from a distant town."

Let us sow the seed with a liberal hand. Many hearts are eager for the light that may be received from the reading of tracts. Come, lend a helping hand.

WHAT NEXT?

We have come to a period when thinking, observing men, are anxiously inquiring what is coming. They are satisfied that some great event is about to transpire. When they inquire, "Watchman, what of the night?" they get no response from many, because they are asleep from the stupefying effects produced by fairs, festivals, fun and fashion. Such see no danger and give no alarm, because they are blind leaders of the blind. This adds much to the perils of these last days. When the watchmen are asleep, what will the people do? If no alarm is given, of course they will continue asleep. Will it be well with the watchmen? What saith the Lord? "If thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand."

But what next? When Rome falls, we may be sure that the coming of Jesus is the next great event. A little time may elapse between the two, but the triumph of the just cannot be long delayed. Soon the sleeping martyrs will rise to sing the song of Moses and the Lamb. What sublime scenes are about to open upon an astonished world.

The impression is deeply made on the minds of the thoughtful that the present state of things cannot continue much longer. Says the New York Herald of Sept. 15th:—

"One of the most remarkable events in the wonderful transformation that Europe is undergoing through the Prussian-French war is the extinguishment of Papal sovereignty. The superstructure of the temporal power of the Pope, which has existed over a thousand years, and which has stood so long the shock of revolutions and falling dynasties, has been over turned finally by the events of the last few weeks. True, its foundations were undermined by the great French revolution at the close of the last century, and modern progress since has shaken it fearfully; but it has been propped up by the monarchies of Europe from time to time, and within the past few years it has been supported by the bayonets of soi-disant modern Charlemagne—Napoleon the Third. With the fall of this aspiring Emperor, this so-called eldest son of the Church, the last prop is taken away. The temporal sovereignty of the Pope and its last supporter have fallen together.

Whatever may be the results of the war in other respects, whatever government may be established in France or transformation take place in other parts of Europe, Papal secular dominion is at an end. The French soldiers have left Rome, never to return to uphold the papacy. . . . .

No one can contemplate the extraordinary events of the time without asking if there be not a Providence directing them. History affords no parellel to them. . . .

The oldest sovereignty of Europe, that of the Pope, is rapidly passing away like a mist before the sun. The Prussian monarchy, in defending itself, has raised a revolution that threatens its own existence. The conqueror is embarrassed by his own success and knows not how to allay or direct the storm he has evoked. The crowned heads and aristocracies are greatly alarmed and at their wits' end. All Europe is in a ferment. The light of intelligence is permeating through the masses of the people and they are clamoring for their rights and liberties. Evidently we are at the dawn of a wonderful transformation in the world. The people of this age may be able to say, with Simeon of old, we have seen the salvation, now let us depart in peace."

As Simeon lived at the time of the first advent of Christ, so we live when we may not die till Jesus shall come again in great power and glory. We have been watching and waiting for over twenty-seven years for the return of the Just One, and the hope never looked more blessed than at the present time. There is a certainty about it now that we have not seen and felt before. All doubts are gone. Jesus is soon coming. Let all the saints lift up their heads and rejoice.

We do not expect to see the public stirred up again on this subject as in time past. They have resisted and rejected the accumulating light, till they are left in darkness to embrace the lies of demons, and follow the lusts of the flesh. As in the days when Israel left Egypt, their pillar of fire was a cloud of darkness to their enemies; so now, that which brightly illumines the pathway of the waiting ones is but a subject of ridicule by the fashionable throng. Well, let us bear it patiently. We are almost home.

THE SIEGE OF PARIS.

The siege of Paris by the Prussians is fairly begun. The results remain to be seen. If Paris is compelled to surrender, as we have reason to believe will be the case, then the Republic will be crushed, and King William will be ready to treat with Napoleon, and give him his throne again. How strange are the fortunes of war. Its results are as uncertain as the fortunes of gamblers. To-day the earth may tremble at the words of a ruling monarch; to-morrow he may be fleeing for his life.

The leaders of the present republic of France are much like the men who introduced the French revolution in 1792; and if these should continue in power, we might expect similar results. Human nature is now the same as then; and when its passions are aroused, as is the case now in France, we must expect a reign of terror. The Prussian siege may prevent this for the present. The condition of Paris is critical in the extreme. Like ancient Sodom, it has long been the seat of folly and fashion, pride and vanity, voluptuous pleasure, irreligion and infidelity; but for the present she is shut out from the rest of the world. That haughty city has boasted like a Nebuchadnezzar, and like him may be soon humbled in the dust. The Most High still rules "in the kingdom of men," and the time is at hand when all the kingdoms of this world must be dashed in pieces to make room for God's everlasting kingdom.

THE SPIRITUALISTS' DEVIL.

In the Banner of Light, Aug. 17th, 1870, we find the following question proposed to a spirit: "Will you describe the Devil?" The spirit answered: "To me there is no such being. The devil, to me, is good not understood." Then it follows that when Jesus was "tempted of the devil," he was tempted with "good not understood." If this were true, we might say, What a pity that he did not understand that the devil was "good."

One very good way to test the correctness of the use of new terms is to put them in the place of the old ones. Let us try the spirit's meaning of the word devil. "The tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that sowed them is the" "good not understood." Matt. 13: 39. "Have mercy on me, O Lord, . . . my daughter is grievously vexed with a" "good not understood." Matt. 15: 22. "And Jesus rebuked the" "good not understood," and the "good not understood departed out of him." Matt. 17: 18. "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the" "good not understood" "and his angels." Matt. 25: 41 "Jesus of Nazareth . . . went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the" "good not understood," "for God was with him." Acts 10: 38- "Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the" "good not understood" "and he will flee from you." Jas. 4; 7.

That which is truly good, though not understood, should be sought after by the righteous, instead of being resisted. We have often noticed that the spirits do not speak well of our heavenly Father, but almost invariably try to bring the devil into favor. They speak of the "good devil," but not of the good Lord. There is a harmony of parts in Spiritualism, when we admit that the whole system is contrived by the devil and his angels. Its foundation rests on a lie, and its whole superstructure is supported by lies. As Paul says of these "seducing spirits," they "speak lies in hypocrisy." There is no good in them. When they speak lies they exhibit their true nature. We would as soon go among harlots for modesty and virtue, as to the spirits for truth.

LAWS OF INTERPRETATION.

In the "Sunday Magazine," for July, Samuel Cox gives the following good rules for Bible readers:—

"All sound commentators admit that, when any words of Scripture can be taken literally, they ought to be taken literally; that when, by taking them as they stand, we can get good sense and sound morality out of them, we ought to take them as they stand, and not betake ourselves to spiritual, mystical, or figurative methods of handling them."

"We ought to interpret Scripture by Scripture, to read any one passage by the light which other passages shed upon it—a law so obviously good and wise that it needs no vindication."

RESULTS OF WAR.

The war in Europe has caused much trouble to the tourists. A private letter from Berlin says that after the government monopolized the railways, people had to stand all day waiting for tickets, without being able to reach the ticket offices, on account of the rush. Their baggage was lost and left behind. "In one place four hundred trunks were left, with all the brilliant summer toilets, and silks, and laces, and jewels." They were obliged to go without them, or not at all.

THE BIBLE BANNER.

We have just received the Prospectus of a new monthly, to be issued Jan. 1st, 1871, by Bro. H. A. King, 240 Broadway, New York. It is to be called "The Bible Banner," and to be edited by Brn. J. Couch, W. Sheldon, A. A. Phelps, and H. A. King. This is not started in opposition to any now published, but as a kind neighbor to assist in the great work of spreading the precious truths in the Bible, specially adapted to the present time. Bro. King is ready to make noble sacrifices to assist in arousing a sleeping world and church to prepare for the coming kingdom.

From our intimate acquaintance with Bro. King, we feel assured that "The Bible Banner" will be worthy the patronage of every friend of Jesus and the Bible.

Prospectus of THE BIBLE BANNER.

We are living in a "grand and awful time." The last rushing years of probation are crowded with events of unparalleled importance. Ordinary events are lost in the constant whirl of exciting scenes. An age of wonders is compressed within the limits of a single year. The signs of the times are ominous. Satan was never so busy or successful as now. He works with sleepless vigilance and marvelous efficiency. Well knowing that his time is short, he is exerting every energy to prosecute his dark designs. The hosts of sin are marshaling for the final fray. The dispensation of mercy is hastening to a close, and the day of retribution is about to dawn. The moral heavens are growing darker, and the cup of a doomed world will soon be full. Shall we not sound the notes of alarm?

We have fallen upon perilous times. The dark waves of infidelity sweep on with ruinous results. Never was the world so reckless of eternal things. Never was the atonement of Jesus so generally repudiated. Wickedness abounds. Pleasure rules the hour. The most deadly moral poison permeates society. The authority of God is defied. The Bible is rejected. Pride and passion, and profanity and prodigality, are the staple products of the age. Selfishness and rebellion have brought forth a hateful progeny. Can anything be done to stay the terrible tide of ruin? While the legions of Satan are so busy, shall we fold our arms "in lazy lock"? While the devotees of error are so defiant, shall the friends of truth be dumb?

Bible theology has become sadly perverted. The traditions of men have been substituted for the truth of God. Pagan principles are largely interwoven with the religious theories of the day. Many a creed harmonizes with Platonic philosophy more fully than with the Book of God. A spiritualizing method of interpreting the Scriptures has become generally adopted, resulting in great mysticism and confusion. Current theology is so constructed as entirely to supersede the necessity of Christ's personal coming to raise the dead and judge the world. Is it not time to lift our voice in advocacy of a pure Bibleism?

The practical developments of popular Christianity are equally deplorable. The standard of piety has been fearfully lowered. A compromising spirit prevails. Policy is substituted for principle, and proxy-worship takes the place of pure devotion. The nominal church is practically married to the world. A frigid formalism has chilled her vitals and palsied her power. The soporifics of Satan have taken effect, and the masses of Christian professors are dozing and dreaming on the very eve of swift-coming judgment. Whoever sees these terrible facts, and refuses to cry aloud, assumes a responsibility that is absolutely appalling. We cannot consent to bear it.

God speaks. Above the clamor of the flesh for seclusion and ease—above the hum of business and the babble of tongues—above the clash of arms and the roar of battle, we hear a voice that comes with distinctiveness and authority: "Occupy till I come." "Sow beside all waters." "Work while it is called to-day." "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." We cannot be deaf, and we must not be disobedient to this divine commission. Therefore, following our convictions of duty, and trusting in God alone for success, we have decided to publish, on the first of January, 1871,

The Bible Banner!

This paper will be issued monthly, at 240 Broadway, New York City, as long as God shall smile on the undertaking. It will be neatly executed in double quarto form, and in other respects as worthy of your patronage as we have ability to make it. THE BIBLE BANNER is designed to elucidate the fundamental features of Bible truth, in the various departments of Doctrine, Phophecy, and Practical Piety. Special attention will be given to the Nature of Man, the atonement of Christ, the Signs of the Times, the Coming of the Bridegroom, the Resurrection of the Dead, the Destiny of the Wicked, the Redemption of Earth, and the Crowning of Christians in the Kingdom to come. We shall use our best endeavors to make the BANNER an able expositor of Bible Doctrine, and a stirring advocate of experimental and practical godliness. It will ring out the clarion notes of truth on the living issues of the age, and seek to merit the respect of intelligent Christians everywhere.

The whole enterprise will be placed on a thoroughly missionary basis. The editors have no stipulated salaries. The expenses of clerks, office-rent, etc., will be paid by private donation; so that the income may be appropriated to enlarge the circulation of the paper. By this arrangement, we expect to scatter gratuitously a goodly number of copies, every month, in the various literary and theological institutions of the country, and to introduce the pure truth of God on these subjects into many new and destitute fields. We hope thus to set in motion a current of influence that shall eventuate in the salvation of many who would otherwise perish. It is not our intention to oppose or supplant any existing publications, committed to the advocacy of Bible Christianity, but to add another voice for the right—to reinforce the army of the living God.

While we spread our Banner to the breeze, and launch out in the name of our glorious Captain, we earnestly desire your prayers, your pens, your names, and your hearty co-operation. Shall we have them? Let the response be emphatic and prompt! Roll up a liberal list! Begin at once. We shall try to give you more than the worth of your money. Canvass your neighborhoods, and send us the results as soon as possible. Shall we not have Five Thousand subscribers to commence with the year? If it suits your convenience, you can communicate with any of the editors; but as a standing regulation, all letters should be addressed to "The Bible Banner," 240 Broadway, New York City.

THEOLOGICAL SCARECROW.

It has become evident that something must be done to keep people from investigating the truths of the Bible; and as argument does not answer the purpose, an effort must be made to frighten the people away by raising the cry of "Materialism." From the pulpit and the press comes this great cry of "Materialism." Read from the Book of Heaven a score of positive statements on a given point, and the cry of "materialism" is supposed to be powerful enough to outweigh the whole, or at least sufficient to scare every body, and keep them from examination. Some are as badly frightened at the cry of "materialism," as they would be at the cry of "mad dog"; and so the term is used as a scarecrow by those who are destitute of arguments.

Although the term was once applied to a system of ill repute, it is certainly preferable to immaterialism, which is a term expressive of all the fundamental errors of Christendom and Heathendom, such as Mohammedanism, Catholicism, Mormonism, Spiritualism, and many others. Bible materialism cannot be scoffed into oblivion. "The first man was of the earth, earthy," or material; and Christ himself was born of a material virgin, with a material body, which, after being raised from the dead as a material body, is presented as the Divine pattern; for when he shall come from heaven, he "shall change our vile body" and fashion it "like unto his glorious body." Then we shall be material beings to all eternity, clothed with immortality.

Such materialism and its kindred truths can be found in the Bible, and can not be frowned out of it. Jehovah has placed them there, and they can not be displaced. But modern immaterialism, now so popular, never had a place there. Let theologians cry "materialism" when they can talk nothing more sensible. We glory in Bible materialism, and repudiate the long train of errors that owe their origin to the immaterialism of the age.

IMMORTALITY.

The question is often asked, "Is there any difference between immortality and eternal life?" Strictly speaking, there is a difference, and yet the one cannot be possessed without involving the other. Immortality is simply deathlessness; and a deathless being must necessarily live eternally, and to live eternally would be to possess eternal life; hence, immortality involves eternal life. Thus it is apparent that eternal life is the result of immortality, while immortality is the basis of eternal life.

In the sense of a present investment, deposited in Christ, the saint is said already to have eternal life, but in no other sense: "This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son [not in us]. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."—1 John 5: 11, 12. Even if this text could be made to teach an immortal life of the soul of the saint, instead of a life deposited in Christ, 'who is our life,' it would still cut off the claim to inherent immortality of the soul, by denying it to all who are out of Christ; thus involving the gift of immortality at conversion, and its loss at backsliding—the loss of deathlessness!! W. S.

TOTAL DEPRAVITY.

The Scriptures clearly teach the doctrine of human depravity, and deep depravity too; but the doctrine of total depravity is quite another thing. Total depravity would reduce man to a demon, with no redeeming qualities about him. This is not true of the human race.

Bad as men are in the carnal state ordinarily, they can on one hand become worse, and upon the other hand they are susceptible of good impressions, and are reformable. Some faint traces of primitive manhood may be found in the worst of men, as a nucleus around which good thoughts may cluster as a starting point for reform. Man has not fallen so low but what it is possible for him to rise again. Divine love is still exercised toward the race for their recovery. "Whosoever will, let him come"; but first "come to repentance" and pardon. W. S.

PRACTICAL AND EXPERIMENTAL RELIGION.

The practical department of the christian system is good so far as it goes, and cannot be dispensed with; but there is another feature equally as essential, namely: experimental religion. We may practice many good works, and desist from many bad works, and yet be destitute of the "renewing of the Holy Spirit," and void of heavenly peace. Let the practical and experimental be combined, and let the experimental be the main-spring of the practical work, and then we shall possess a religion that will pass the test in the coming day of accountability. With the inward, experimental element predominating, we shall possess a relish for the practical. While we give prominence to the practical, outward phase of religion, let us not overlook nor underprize the experimental, or inward principle of Divine love, "which is shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Spirit."

W. S.

SALVATION.

There are two stages in the work of salvation,—moral, and physical; the one freeing men from the guilt of sin, and the other redeeming them from the effect of sin. The incipient stage of salvation is enjoyed in this life, being the result of pardon, by which men are saved from condemation; but the grand culmination is at the coming of the Savior the second time; for "unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Then the saints will be saved from death and mortality.

So salvation may be said to be enjoyed in this life, and also be said to be obtained in the future; but unless its incipient stage is enjoyed in this world, its fruition cannot be enjoyed in the "world to come"; for purity must precede perfection. W. S.

AMBOY CAMPMEETING.—This meeting was a refreshing time to many of the saints in the great West. Several made their first start for the paradise of God, and six happy souls were baptized by Eld. D. S. Clark of Amboy. Ministers and people came from several States to enjoy the feast. The most of the preaching was refreshing and instructive, and produced a salutary effect on the community at large. The prayer and conference meetings were seasons of deep interest. The general feeling was, We are on the last end of probation's last plank. W. S.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 24th, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

THE JUDGMENT IMPENDING.

AN EARNEST APPEAL.

My dear brethren, believers in the immediate coming of Christ:—We have truly arrived at a most momentous period in the history of our world; when events are speaking in thunder tones the swift approach of Christ to judgment;—the closing events on the great prophetic chart are now being fulfilled, and prophetic dates end in A. D. 1873–5.

At a meeting of the A. A. Mission Board held in Boston, Sept. 13th, 1870, there was a deep feeling manifested in the great work of doing all that is possible to arouse a slumbering church and the world from their sleep, to a preparation to meet Christ, who is about to descend from heaven "with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God." After consultation, the Board thought it advisable to invite Brn. Miles Grant, S. G. Mathewson, J. Couch, and Wm. Sheldon, to go South as soon as practicable, and make known to the people the "kingdom of God," and the immediate coming of Christ. And the Secretary was appointed to write an appeal to you for funds to carry forward this great missionary work.

1. In the first place, we would say, it is our firm belief that there are men and money enough in the Advent body to publish this last warning to the entire world. For the work of the next three months, $50,000 is the smallest amount that we should think of appropriating, as stewards of the Lord's money, in publishing this great message to the world; and $500,000 should and would be appropriated by us in the next twelve months in this great work, if we did really believe the Lord is coming as we profess to do. We ought to publish in pamphlet, or sheet form, with a bold heading, the evidences from prophecy and chronology of our immediate proximity to the day of Christ and the judgment, to be scattered as far as possible. God calls upon us, by the fulfillment of prophecy and the startling signs of the present time, to awake out of sleep, and go to work with all our might and proclaim, The Lord is coming!

2. Let us stop pampering our appetites with luxurious food, and filling our houses with costly furniture, and adorning our persons with costly apparel, and sell that which we cannot consistently keep with our obligation to Christ as his stewards to be faithful. The influence of an inordinate love of these forbidden things will prove disastrous to us, and peril our salvation at the coming of Christ. All this fashion and show is as injurious and worthless as briers and thorns, and will soon be consigned to the flames. Let us not deceive ourselves in indulging in that which will prove our ruin.

Let each one, out of love to Christ and a perishing world, at once take hold of this work and give as the Lord has prospered them, and send to Geo. T. Adams, the Treasurer of the A. A. Mission Society, 167 Hanover St., Boston, all funds for this great object.

L. T. CUNNINGHAM, Sec. of the Board.

P. S.—I wish to say to all those brethren who have this world's goods in trust from Christ, who are able to give $500, or more, to carry forward the great work of proclaiming the near coming of Christ to judgment, I have a proposition to make to you: I will be one of a hundred to create a fund of $50,000, to be used in publishing brief expositions of the prophecies that most clearly and comprehensively prove our close proximity to the great day of judgment. And this money to be raised in three months from the first of October, 1870. Also, this money to be placed under the control of the Advent Christian Publication Society, to publish on the subject above stated, in as many languages as the Society may think advisable. Also, the money to be used with as much economy as possible in reaching the great result desired. Any wise suggestions as to the above object will be thankfully received. Let us have a quick and hearty response to the above proposition by all that are able, and send your names to Geo. T. Adams, or to the writer, L. T. Cunningham, Newton Upper Falls, Mass.

We heartily concur with Bro. Cunningham in his earnest appeal to the brethren and sisters, and also hope that we shall not only be fully aroused to the importance of engaging in this work more faithfully than ever before; but that we shall so present ourselves, by prayer and supplication before the Lord, that we may clearly understand his will, know just what he would have us do, and be so fully endowed with his Holy Spirit, that we shall give cheerfully, liberally, and promptly, according to what we have, and to those objects our heavenly Father would have us, to his glory and the good of our fellow beings,—"In the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him."

THINGS AS THEY ARE.

I am often asked, Why do not our preaching brethren economize their labors, and not spend their money and time on the railroad in going from place to place, to spend only one Sunday?

I answer, the preachers are not responsible for this fault, for the churches through their committees regulate that matter. The committee write to A, B, or C, to come and supply their desk and preach a certain Sunday. If he has no appointment for that Sunday, he does not feel at liberty to decline. If he writes them he will come, and stay two or three Sundays, and be with them through the week for their benefit, the reply comes, We are supplied.

Now what can be done by the preacher? He can give his advice, and feel the embarrassment of the condition; but with or without scrip he must cheerfully run over the track, and deliver his message, and often feel the necessity of putting in evening appointments, so that when he returns to his destitute, loved family, he may be able to partially supply their needs.

These things ought not to exist, as a general rule. There is a remedy, and it ought to be adhered to. The remedy is in the churches. They could and should bring about the improvement. But how? When you invite a man to come to feed the flock of God, ask him to come and stay with you two or more Sundays; then he will be with you through the week, visit, and attend your prayer-meetings, and feel a responsibility for the cause, and for you, that he cannot otherwise.

The cause of Christ and the preachers sustain a great loss on this race course. They take cars' ride from thirty to sixty miles to their appointments, and come in Saturday evening. Sunday, they come before you. You are cheered with the flow of soul, delighted with the harmony of the truth they utter, strengthened by the vigorous faith they manifest; but Sunday is over and gone, and they are gone also. They return to their homes, and find a lack of means that would take the last bit of courage out of them, had they not learned to trust the Lord and wait for a recompense at the resurrection of the just.

A third part of what you give the preacher is paid out on the railroad, and often more. You do not feel it, but the preacher and his family do. Yes, and you would feel it sensibly if out of your weekly pay of nine dollars three dollars should be kept back. There is a wrong, and with all our faith in God we often feel it. And this wrong brings leanness to the people of God, and why? Because it is not doing as you would be done by. None of you would come and work for me at any mechanical business for ten dollars a week, and pay out four dollars of it on the cars.

Now, brethren, good religion prompts men to love their neighbors as themselves, and those who live out this golden rule will have an hundred-fold here, on the common principle of "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Do not count me your enemy, because I tell you the truth. I write this not for my good, but for yours. The Lord is soon coming to reckon with us. The signs are not of doubtful import; they are filling up the last jots and titles of the prophetic pen; and shall we heed the last notes of warning?

Brethren, let your liberality be known, that the cause of Christ be not hindered. The calls for labor are heard in every direction. Men filled with the spirit of truth and the importance of the times are wanting. Means to help those who have the woe on them to carry this gospel—"Behold the Bridegroom cometh!"—into new regions, are wanting. Will any, by withholding that which is meet, peril their salvation and the eternal life of others?

A word to the wise may be sufficient, but the love of the world, and covetousness, will keep multitudes out of the kingdom of glory. "He that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them," will stand in the evil day.

A RESPONSE.

To the Editor of the Young Pilgrim:—

The appeal in behalf of the Young Pilgrim touched my heart, for I was not aware of the low state of its finances, and the thought of suspending its publication shocked me. What! in these last days of crime and temptation, cease trying to shield tender hearts from the wiles of Satan, when we profess to be looking for the speedy return of the Lord! Is this consistent, to spend money in self-gratification, and allow such publications as the dear "Pilgrim" to die, from sheer neglect?

May God open the eyes of those in whose care he has entrusted the treasures of earth, to see their obligation to him, and their hearts to feel the necessity of aiding in the rescue of the children and youth of our land from the snares and traps of the enemy which surround them.

I wish it were in my power to send you enough to relieve your embarrassment, but mine must be the "widow's mite," for the present, at least. I can count one towards a larger circulation, and enclose for the remainder of the present year and the coming one, if time continues. Of course, it will be published—it must not be stopped. I am willing to do what I can to assist in extending its circulation.

How few there are who could not save fifty cents per year for the Young Pilgrim, and thus delight the hearts of their children with its semi-monthly visits; but how hard to make people realize it! May God prepare us to work more efficiently for him.

Extracts from Letters.

SR. C. R. DANKS writes from Fond du Lac, Wis., Aug. 22d, 1870:—"My faith remains firm in the soon coming of our Lord. Truly the path of the just shines more and more, and we can see more clearly that we are just at the end of probation. I thank God his children are not in darkness, that that day should come upon them as a thief; but oh, what darkness covers the people. It seems discouraging, sometimes, to undertake to enlighten them on the great truths of the Bible, there is so much ignorance and prejudice; but we must do all we can, so they will not rise up in judgment and say we did not warn them. I feel that I have got something to do. I feel the "wo," and may God help me to be wholly given up to him, so that he can use me to his honor and glory. I do not claim much talent, but God forbid that I bury what little I have. I do feel that it is high time that we all wake up to our duty, and improve the talent the Lord has given us, for we have but a short time to work. The judgment day is just upon us. May God pour his Spirit upon us, and may we all come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

Bro. J. Maxim writes from South Carver, Mass.:—"I am happy to say that the campmeeting at Tremont was a complete success. Much good was done in reclaiming backsliders, and by bringing some sinners to repentance and to the love of Bible truth. Since the meeting, the good seed there sown has taken effect and sprung up in this place, inducing a few of us here, of like precious faith, to commence weekly prayer and conference meetings for social worship, and for the edification of the true followers of Him who said he should come again in like manner as he ascended. We meet every week at some dwelling house, on Tuesday evenings. Although destitute of a preacher, I trust we are not destitute of the Spirit of our Master, who said that when two or three are met together in his name, there he will be in the midst of them. We would respectfully invite any Bible preacher or layman, who shall be traveling this way, to give us a call, and so scatter broadcast the good seed of the coming kingdom."

Bro. G. A. Streeter writes:—"Our tent meeting in Hardwick, began Sept. 3d, and closed the 8th. We had a good meeting. As this was outside of the village, the congregation was composed mostly of hearers that never went any where. A great interest was manifested. Two were baptized; one went around to her neighbors and confessed to them, and then came to meeting and confessed there. One arose for prayers. The meeting was in a pretty grove, a good one for a campmeeting. The way is open for one. We took a vote to see how the people felt, and all voted to have a campmeeting, if the Lord did not come. Our doctrines have not been preached much there. I was there last Sunday, the 18th, and had a good season. A weekly prayer-meeting is established, as a union meeting. Pray for me."

Sr. A. B. Becker writes from Springwater, N. Y., Aug. 25th, 1870:—"We have been having an interesting season in our quiet village. The tent was pitched here June 28th, and meetings continued over five Sabbaths. Brn. Fenn, Stevens, and Hobbs, were the principal preachers; though Bro. Coggswell and Bro. Wendell made a short stay with us. We had a good attendance, and much interest was manifested, notwithstanding the efforts made against us. There were fourteen baptized, and many others brought to a knowledge of the truth. We are getting quite strong in numbers, and are in hopes of having a place for worship very soon. Let us have the prayers of all God's children."

Bro. F. H. Burbank writes:—"May the Lord bless you in proclaiming the "crowning truth" of immortality through Christ alone, and that at his appearing and kingdom. Though we do not agree on the question of the resurrection, yet I pray that God will bless the mission of the "Crisis" as it heralds the above named truth. I wish success to every tract, pamphlet, magazine, newspaper and book that advocates it. Often do I wish that we could see eye to eye on all points as we do on this one. But, if we cannot, we can do one thing and that is, we can keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

Sr. E. E. Towslee writes, Sept. 17th:—"The church in Hoosick, N. Y., is in a rising condition. I was with them last Sabbath, and we had a refreshing season. We endeavored to show them the necessity of abiding in Christ, the true and living vine, as the only sure way of entering in to his everlasting kingdom, so soon to be established. May God grant we may all be prepared for the great and solemn event."

Trimmer. Died, at Hemlock Lake, N. Y., May 19th, 1870, Emeline L., wife of Wm. Trimmer, aged thirty-three years.

Sr. Trimmer leaves a large circle of mourning friends and neighbors, who thronged the Baptist meeting-house at Hemlock Lake on the occasion of her funeral, which was attended by the writer. The silence of the chamber of death was made doubly solemn by the deep sighs and sobs of a loving husband, children, and other relatives. Thank God, the morning of light and immortality is near when the sleepers in Jesus will arise to meet the Savior in glory. Wm. A. Fenn.

Allen. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Charlton, Mass., Sept. 2nd, 1870, Nancy, wife of Bro. Elbridge Allen, aged twenty-seven years, four months, and twenty-seven days.

In Sr. A. we have all lost a friend, and the family a loving wife and affectionate mother. She leaves a husband and five precious little blossoms to mourn her loss. This dear sister embraced the faith of the soon coming of Jesus in 1867, and has ever since been a faithful follower of Jesus. She died in the triumph of faith, expecting soon that the last trump will sound, when they that are Christ's at his coming shall awake to sing the songs of the redeemed.

Although unconscious of all around her, she repeated the whole of that beautiful prophetic hymn,—

"We are voyagers on an ocean."

She then exclaimed, "I want to live with Jesus." She died as one going to sleep.

☞ The Third Napoleon's career, commencing at Strasbourg in 1832, and ending at Sedan in 1870, and thus embracing nearly forty years of exile, patience, conspiracy, adventures, imprisonment, escapes, political maneuvres, palace life, victorious war, and successful statesmanship, is without parallel in history, and is only possible with one whose character is also without a counterpart among the remarkable men of ancient or modern times. Behold the contrast! A few weeks ago at the head of one of the most powerful nations of Europe—a nation he governed almost at will; to-day, a prisoner of war, a dethroned Emperor, despised and contemned by his late subjects! Such is destiny.

☞ Von Moltke is reported to have abandoned the notion of trying to storm Paris. He will seek to compel its surrender by starvation, and is reported to have pledged himself that within three weeks not a morsel of food shall enter the city.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

Epinal, Sept. 20. Toul has again been attacked, but the Prussians were repulsed and their guns dismounted.

Berlin, Sept. 20. Queen Augusta received yesterday a letter written by the Emperor of Russia, warmly congratulating Her Majesty upon the great victories that the armies of Germany has so signally obtained.

The letter when read to the Count, was received with indescribable satisfaction, as it set at rest all the floating rumors as to the hostility of the Emperor to the attitude recently taken by Prussia in the European conflict.

Florence, Sept. 21. The following particulars of the occupation of Rome by the Italian troops are received:

The Zouaves made a desperate resistance at Porta San Panrazio Campo Militare, Porta Maggiore and Porta Del Popolo, but after the fighting had continued for half an hour, orders were sent to them peremptorily from the Pope himself to cease firing. They obeyed unwillingly, and many of them broke their muskets in their vexation. Colonel Charette threw his sword into the Tiber.

Berlin, Sept. 22. The Emperor Napoleon is preparing a manifesto to the French people.

The members of the late Senate and Corps Legislatif will probably reassemble at Limoges, in the northeast of France.

Villa Alban, Sept. 21. The Italian troops entered Rome through Ponta Pia, firing on the mercenaries as they advanced. At last the Pope ordered the white flag to be hoisted, and hostilities ceased. The national forces then quietly occupied the city.

London, Sept. 21. [Special to New York Tribune.] The Tribune's special correspondent at Berlin telegraphs to-day that the American Minister on authority learns that Favre will be received in a private capacity only, and will be informed by Bismarck that Germany much insist, as a condition, sine qua non of peace on the surrender of the forts on the Moselle and Rhine, by which Germany was threatened and attacked.

A dispatch received in London yesterday, from Bismarck, says that Favre was cordially received at the King's headquarters at Fervieres, Rothschild's Chateau. Preliminary discussions were held relative to the time and modes, and convoking a constituent assembly, in view of securing a sufficient guarantee for the fulfilment of conditions to which the Provisional Government may yield its consent.

Tours, Sept. 21. The Government has ordered the troops in all parts of the country to converge on Paris.

An Earnest Appeal to America from the Conquered Provinces.

The Tribune's special from Bricy, the 17th, says the distress is so great in the Departments of Moselle, Meuse, Meunthe and Ardennes that the authorities have prepared an appeal for aid to all neutral nations, especially America and England, saying that the people, who are dependent on their crops and their cattle, have nothing left remaining. Their houses, stables and barns have been destroyed, and the meadows and fields have been trampled down. They have had no harvest at all. Their cattle, sheep and swine have been seized, and their laborers pressed into the army. There is not even corn enough left for seed. Starvation and pestilence impend. "You, my American brethren," adds the appeal, "must know the desolation in which we live. Yet you have been quickly restored. Your country is naturally rich and ours is naturally poor. Our resources cannot compare with yours, consequently our sufferings are unspeakably greater. We implore you to send us aid." The appeal is signed by mayors and other civil and ecclesiastical authorities of the numerous villages and towns between Metz, Nancy and Sedan.

Berlin, Sept. 23. Count Bismarck has issued a circular to the North German representatives concerning the demands of Prussia. He declares the acquisition of Metz and Strasbourg, and the extension of the German frontiers to Forbach, is necessary in order to prevent future aggression upon the part of France. Bismarck affirms that Germany is indifferent as to what character of government France chooses. She does not want to interfere at all with the internal affairs of France.

London, Sept. 23. A railroad has been finished around the fortifications of Paris.

The bombardment of Toul continues incessantly and furiously.

The French Tireurs at Thionville make constant sallies, and have inflicted much damage on the Prussians.

Arrangements have been made at Lille whereby the complete inundation of the country may be effected in twelve hours.

The Prussians have occupied Dourdan, 18 miles southwest of Versailles.

No Prussians are reported anywhere in the department of Aube.

M. Thiers, before leaving Tours for Vienna, passed the night with Prince Metternich, Austrian Minister to France.

The road from Paris to Orleans is gorged with all sorts of vehicles, loaded with the effects of Paris refugees.

The siege of Metz has become a mere blockade.

The safety of Tours is threatened, as the Uhlans are at Orleans and Blois.

London, Sept 23. The French have attacked the Prussians to the south of Paris, and have totally routed and driven them in disorganized masses toward the city. The slaughter was terrific. The Prussians advanced, and took a favorable position. The battle was fought at Clamont, Mendon and Verriers.

London, Sept. 23. [Special to the New York Tribune.] Louis Blanc writes from Paris, the 14th, as follows: "We are yet hopeful. Don't suppose that we expect to escape from the consequences of war into which we have been dragged in spite of ourselves. We desire peace on equitable and honorable conditions. If we cannot have that, we are ready to accept war to the knife."

The following is a Berlin telegram:—

"Russia is in motion to seize the Black Sea and probably the Dardanelles. A war between the Czar and Sultan is imminent"

London, Sept. 25. The reports of a revolutionary outbreak in Paris, incited by the Reds, are denied. A late arrival from there brings information positively contradictory to the announcement that there has been any insurrection or fighting in the streets of the capital, accounts of which have been received through Prussian sources.

It is rumored that heavy fighting is in progress between Forts de Vanvres and Montrouge, resulting from an attempted movement of the Prussians into position between those fortresses.

A conflict occurred on Friday at Sceaux. The Prussians attacked the town but were repulsed. Their artillery upon the heights of Sceaux participated in the fight.

An official statement from the war office just issued, shows that the total number of German troops now in France is 650,000.

London, Sept. 25, 1870. The French journals published at Tours concur in acknowledging that M. Favre's mission to the Prussian headquarters has been abortive, and declare that the French people prefer extinction to humiliation. Strasbourg, Toul and Verdun, the Germans already consider theirs, and demand that they shall remain so. But M. Favre and his colleagues in the provisional government are a unit in the rejection of such demands. Should any terms be reached, they must have the sanction of a European congress, which would meet at Brussels.

La France says peace is impossible on the terms proposed by Prussia, without ruin and shame. Nothing is left us now but to make a dogged resistance.

A letter from Marshal Bazaine, dated 19th September, sent to the headquarters of Prince Frederick Charles, to be forwarded thence to the King, it is reported, expresses his willingness to surrender on condition that his troops be permitted to retain their arms and be paroled, not to resume hostilities for three months.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Sept. 23. This afternoon there was an informal meeting of the members of the Evangelical Alliance at the Young Men's Christian Association Rooms, corner of 24th street and 4th avenue. A reception will be tendered to those ecclesiastics who come from Europe despite of war, and ready to be present at the Grand Alliance to be held here this month.

The Hon. Wm. E. Dodge occupied the chair, and after Rev. Mr. Eddy of Brooklyn had made the opening prayer, a set of resolutions were passed, tendering a hearty welcome to the following gentlemen, most of whom were present: Rev. James Davis, one of the secretaries of a British organization; Rev. James Argus, D. D., of Regent's Park College, London; Rev. Dr. McCauley, of the London Relief Tract Society; Rev. Henry Allen, Editor of the Irish Quarterly Review; Rev. Dr. Mullen, of the London Missionary Society; Rev. Prof. Revel, of Waldensian Theological Seminary, Florence, Italy; Rev. Isaac G. Bliss, agent of the Bible Society, Constantinople, Turkey; Rev. Dr. Grand Pierre of Paris, with several others. Suitable acknowledgements in neat replies were made, and the meeting adjourned.

Hartford, Sept. 24. A very imposing ceremony took place at St. Patrick's Cathedral last evening, on the occasion of five young ladies taking the white veil. The Cathedral was filled to repletion. To-morrow morning four other young ladies take the black veil.

War Items.

☞ Communication with Paris has been entirely cut off, at least so far as official dispatches are concerned. The State Department has not received a line from Mr. Washburne for several days, and the members of the Diplomatic Corps are without intelligence from that point. It is a question for the future to decide whether King William will allow the representatives of foreign nations in Paris to communicate with their governments. The State Department officials seem to think that this will not be permitted for the present.

☞ The Prussian forces now before Paris number four hundred thousand, and Prince Frederick Charles has one hundred and fifty thousand between Metz and Rheims.

☞ The submarine cable between Prussia and Sweden has been cut by the French.

☞ The number of men under arms in Paris is stated at 438,000, including 180,000 volunteers from the provinces.

☞ Paris is entirely shut in, and all avenues of communication are cut off, except via Berlin.

☞ The people of all Italy are enthusiastic over the accomplishment of the Italian unity. The large cities are covered with bunting, and fireworks and illuminations attest the general joy.

☞ Garibaldi is prevented from leaving Caprera and guarded as a prisoner. Italian war vessels are cruising off the island.

☞ A telegram received from Havre says that fresh complications between Russia and Turkey in regard to war between the two powers is probable.

☞ The Strasbourg theatre was burnt during a performance. Two hundred persons, mostly women, perished in the flames. This horror has cast a gloom over the entire city, and the beleagured inhabitants have been completely prostrated by their awful calamity.

☞ An English correspondent with the Prussian army finds one serious defect in the Prussian military system. It is the utter absence of any means to shelter the troops at night. The troops have no tents, no blankets; nothing but their cloaks. Against such violent exposure men cannot last. The writer says that unless Von Moltke can redress the evil speedily, he will find he has a more relentless enemy to contend against than the French.

☞ The Times correspondent, writing from the headquarters of the King, at Rheims, on the 8th inst., says that upward of thirty establishments there manufacture woolen cloths, employing ten thousand working people, and that all of these are idle and on the point of starvation. Hundreds of applications have been made for information on the subject of emigration to the United States.

☞ Marshal Bazaine has intimated, in an intercepted letter to his wife, written before the battle of Sedan, and subsequent to that of Gravelotte, his disposition to renounce Napoleon. He has certain disclosures of Napoleon's perfidy to make, which, he says, "will at once place me in a proper position before the new Government;" and he fixes the time for making such revelations "as soon as Napoleon shall have been dealt with as he deserves."

Religious Items.

☞ Mr. and Mrs. Palmer have commenced a series of holiness meetings in San Francisco.

☞ A correspondent of the Christian World writes from Madrid that "Upon the very spot where lie the remains of thirty-six thousand of our fellow creatnres who suffered martyrdom during the time of the Spanish Inquisition, and which has lately been excavated, stands a man of faith with the Bible in his hand, and offers one of the gospels of the New Testament for a half-penny. In a few hours hundreds are bought, and all the half-pence are laid out in bread and meat for the poor Spaniards."

Items.

☞ No less than nineteen young women are studying medicine at the University of Zurich, in Switzerland. All of the subjects of instruction—anatomical and surgical, as well as medical—are treated of before the students of both sexes, and that without the least embarrassment. At Vienna in Austria, at Moscow in Russia, and at Paris in France, the same plan of educating the sexes together in the medical schools is pursued with the same happy results.

☞ The oldest newspaper in the world is published in Pekin. It is printed on a large sheet of silk, and, it is said, has made a weekly appearance for upward of a thousand years.

ONE STEP MORE.

What though before me it is dark,
Too dark for me to see?
I ask but light for one step more,
'Tis quite enough for me.

Each little, humble step I take,
The gloom clears from the next;
So, though 'tis very dark beyond,
I never am perplexed.

And if sometimes the mist hangs close,
So close I fear to stray,
Patient I wait a little while,
And soon it clears away.

I would not see my further path,
For mercy veils it so;
My present steps might harder be,
Did I the future know.

It may be that my path is rough,
Thorny, and hard, and steep;
And, knowing this, my strength might fail
Through fear and terror deep.

It may be that it winds along
A smooth and flowery way;
But seeing this, I might despise
The journey of to-day.

Perhaps my path is very short,
My journey nearly done,
And I might tremble at the thought
Of ending it so soon.

Or, if I saw a weary length
Of road that I must wend,
Fainting, I'd think "my feeble powers
Will fail me ere the end."

And so I do not wish to see
My journey or its length;
Assured that through my Father's love,
Each step will bring its strength.

Thus step by step I onward go,
Not looking far before;
Trusting that I shall always have Light for just "one step more."

RESURRECTION THEOLOGY.

We are irresistibly compelled to the conclusion that death reigns. Centuries ago it secured a foothold in our world. On some principle it has an existence on our globe, and before inquiring whether it will ever cease to exist, it may be well to inquire on what principle it now exists. How did it chance to enter our world? Was its introduction a component part of the divine plan? And is is all the misery and sorrow resulting from it chargeable upon Deity? Or is it the work of an enemy? Let inspiration reply: "Sin entered into the world, and death by sin;" so if sin had never entered, death would never have prevailed on earth. Although sin brought death into the world, it is not here as a punishment for the sins of those who now fall under its power, but a calamity entailed on the human race by the sin of Adam and Eve, who for their own sins were consigned to a state of mortality, to ultimate in death, and while in this state became the parents of the race. To illustrate: Suppose a man and his wife were to render themselves obnoxious to the wrath of an earthly potentate by transgression, and should be punished for their crime by being banished to a remote island, and while in that state of banishment should rear a family of children; it would be true that the banishment, so far as the man and his wife were concerned, would be a direct punishment for their transgression, while in the case of the children, sharing the same state, it must be regarded as a calamity, and not as a punishment for their own crimes. So with Adam and Eve; after being consigned to this state of mortality and death, their posterity became sharers in the same, not as a punishment for their own sins, but as a result of the sins of the first pair. All now die alike. Sin does not make the Adamic death any more certain, nor does righteousness exempt men from it. The sinless and the sinner alike fall under its power: "after this the judgment and penalty."

Successive generations of men have lived and died, and still millions are annually joining the pale nations of the dead, till the kingdom of the king of terrors defies competition in population. And still the tide of emigration from a land of life to the realm of death is undiminished. The closing paragraph of every man's life may properly end thus: "He fell asleep." The "sleep of death," to many, has already been a long sleep. Will they sleep on, and sleep forever? Is there no end to the sleep of death? Without the interposition of Divine power, the slumbers of death can never be broken. Will that power ever be exercised to wake them up? Revelation only can furnish an answer to this question. Human reason, from its low stand-point, can furnish no proof of a release from death. Without the aid of revelation we can only speculate with reference to futurity. We can follow man through life, and into dark death, but we can go no further without the light of revelation. We instinctively pause and inquire, Is there no future for the dead? Reason is dumb—at best it can only guess—it cannot speak with certainty.

But "there is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets," and he has seen fit to reveal the great secret of human destiny. The Scriptures of truth contain many clear statements concerning a future life by virtue of a release from death, or a resurrection of the dead, and these statements are not meaningless. They indicate a resurrection as literal as death itself, for the resurrection is promised for the express purpose of counteracting the ravages of death by liberating its captives from their bondage; thus unfolding the great doctrine of a literal release from literal death. And this exhilarating hope has gladdened the hearts of ancient seers, holy patriarchs, inspired prophets, apostles and saints, from an early point in time down to the present hour. It has lit up the hearts of mourners with the light of joy in the very presence of death, and stayed the flowing tears. Though death has ever looked dark and repulsive, God's people have long had their eye fixed upon a coming future of deathless perfection, when living men should cease to die, and dead men live again; so, unlike "others which have no hope," they have laid their friends away to sleep for a while, with the strong conviction that they should meet them again, when by the interposition of Divine power they should be awakened from death's dreamless sleep.

Abraham, the friend of God, recognized the power of God to liberate men from death, by raising them from the dead; for when commanded to offer up Isaac, he readily prepared to obey; "Accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead."—Heb. 11: 19. Abraham believed that Divine power could make dead men live again. This is the only principle that can roll back the dark cloud of death, and impart life to dead men. And on a coming day this power will electrify the sleeping saints, and they shall wake up, possessed of angelic vigor, blooming in immortal health, to die no more.

Inspired men who lived under the old dispensation exulted in the thought of a future release from the dominion of death. Let us hear these ancient witnesses. Job speaks on this wise: "So man lieth down, and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake nor be raised out of their sleep. O that thou wouldest hide me in the grave, that thou wouldest keep me secret until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldest appoint me a set time, and remember me. If a man die, shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come. Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee; thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands."—Job 14: 12–15.

"I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another."—Job 19; 25–27.

Job looked far into futurity, even down to "the latter day," and though destined to become food for worms long before its arrival, he expected that then his Redeemer would "call" him from his slumbers, and that in his flesh, with his own eyes no longer dimmed by death, he should see the Lord; thus furnishing a reply to his own question, "If a man die, shall he live again?" He distinctly saw a future life, not in death, but beyond it, "in the latter day," after he had been hid in the grave, and been called therefrom by his Redeemer's commanding voice; and then, when "the heavens be no more," or "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise," he expected not only to "awake" out of the sleep of death, but to experience a "change" that should make his future existence enduring. For that "change" he was willing to "wait" the "appointed time"—not for a change at death, for he tells us, "If I wait, the grave is mine house."—Job 17: 13. The "grave" was to be his waiting place; and the "change" was to come after he had there waited the "appointed time" of death's reign. Then "dead men shall live."

David affirmed: "As for me, I shall behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness."—Ps. 17: 15. David knew that he must sleep the sleep of death, but he expected to "awake" therefrom, clothed with his Redeemer's "likeness," bearing "the image of the heavenly" Adam. He clearly foresaw a future life to commence when the sleep of death should end.

Isaiah asserts: "He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall be taken away from off all the earth; for the Lord hath spoken it."—Isa. 25: 8.

"Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead. . . . . The earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain." Isa. 16: 19–21. This statement refers to "dead men," and to the "dead body," and positively affirms that they "shall live." Though now "asleep" in death, they shall "awake." Though now low in the grave, they shall "arise." Though now speechless, they shall then "sing." The very ones now dead, and dwelling "in the dust," shall hereafter live; for as the dew reinvigorates the lifeless herbage after the winter is over, and gives it new life, so when the long winter of death passes away, and the resurrection springtime occurs, God's life-giving power, like dew from heaven, will reanimate "dead men," and they "shall live" once more."

Jeremiah thus speaks concerning the children slaughtered under Herod: "Thus saith the Lord; a voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation, and bitter weeping; Rachel weeping for her children, refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not. Thus saith the Lord: refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy. And there is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again to their own border." Jer. 31: 15–17. See an inspired explanation in Matt. 2: 17.

The Scriptures pronounce death an "enemy," and all the dead, as really as the slaughtered children of Judea, are in the land of the enemy. But are they to remain there through all coming time? No. Hope lights up the future with the assurance, "they shall come again from the land of the enemy." Death extorts many tears while capturing his victims from happy circles; but the tears are dried up when inspiration's sweet voice whispers the consoling promise: "They shall come again from the land of the enemy." Though death can gain a temporary victory over the saints, God will ultimately "swallow up death in victory."

Ezekiel relates this great promise from God: "Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O, my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live." Ezek. 37: 12–14.

God's people, now dead and confined in their "graves," are hereafter to come out of their graves, and "live." Infinite wisdom has promised a release from death, and infinite power will be exercised to fulfill the promise. God makes promises to be fulfilled, not to disappoint his people. Daniel received this statement from the angel Gabriel: "Many of them [or, "the multitudes of them"] that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Dan. 12: 2.

Death's sleepers must awake, or cease to sleep the sleep of death, which is equivalent to being made alive; and that this is the angel's meaning, is made certain by the statement that some shall awake "to everlasting life,"—leaving us to infer, what is elsewhere plainly taught, that some will, on account of unholy character, awake to a life that is not everlasting.

Hosea reports the Lord as saying: "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction." Hosea 13: 14. Could testimony be stronger? To ransom men from the power of the grave, and to redeem them from death, is God's method of giving men a future life. Death obliterates life, and the resurrection obliterates death, and restores life. We have found the testimony of the Old Testament witnesses on this topic clear and harmonious. Such men as Abraham, Job, David, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, and Hosea, believed in a future release from death. Were they all in the dark? Were they trying to deceive us? Or did they blunder into the use of language that expressed the very reverse of their sentiments? Far from it. They understood what they were talking about, and talked to be understood by others, and to be believed. They did not use words to conceal their faith, nor to darken council by blind phraseology. Nor can their testimony be perverted to teach a spiritual resurrection as a substitute for heaven's theory of a release from death. The "dead body" is to arise; "dead men" are to live; those that "dwell in dust, are to "awake;" people that have been deposited in "graves," are to "come up out of their graves;" and men now dead are to be "redeemed from death."

The testimony of the New Testament witnesses on this theme is also clear. Let us learn the mind of Jesus: "Then came to him certain of the Sadducees, which deny that there is any resurrection. . . . And Jesus answering, said unto them. . . . They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he called the Lord the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living." Luke 20: 27, 34–38.

"Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice; and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." John 5: 21. "And this is the Father's will that sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." John 6: 39. Jesus saith unto her, Thy brother shall rise again. Martha saith unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day. Jesus saith unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." John 11: 23–26. Thus spake the Son of God on this great question of a future release from death. In John 6: 40, Jesus states: This is the will of him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." These statements seem too plain to be misunderstood. They speak of future life, not in death, but after the slumbers of death are broken, and of endless life for the saints.

Paul says: "This I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my Fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets: and have hope toward God, which they themselves, also, allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." Acts 24: 14. "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" Acts 26: 8. This question needs to be reiterated generally at the present day of skepticism. And many need to be reminded of the Savior's address to the Sadducees who denied that the dead were to rise: "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God." Matt. 22: 29.

A familiarity with the Scriptures ought to remove doubts from the minds of all Bible believers; and the "power of God" to perform what he has promised should not be questioned. The Savior here recognizes the power of God as the only prerequisite to a resurrection; and this power can be exercised on sinners as well as saints; but the indwelling of the Holy Spirit is made a prerequisite to a resurrection to immortality, or a resurrection like Christ's: "If the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. 8: 11. God quickened Christ with "the power of a endless life," and he will also, or, in like manner, quicken those who possess the Holy Spirit. The prerequisite to this quickening into endless life, is the possession of the Holy Spirit.

The "power of God" will resurrect all men, regardless of character; but the indwelling of the Spirit of God is made a prerequisite to a quickening like that experienced by Christ at his resurrection, of which the apostle affirms: "Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him." Rom. 6: 9. It was the power of God that raised Lazarus, and others; but as Christ was the "first born from the dead" to an immortal life, they must have been raised to a mortal state, and the wicked will hereafter be raised on the same principle. But we will not here pause to argue that point. W. S.

BUFFOONERY IN THE PULPIT.

Is it not very inappropriate, and must it not be displeasing in the sight of God, for men to act the harlequin in the pulpit? More than once have I left the house of worship with a sad heart, after hearing the preacher of the gospel attempt to entertain the people with jokes, puns, and much of the clownishness of low and vulgar amusement. The fact that it may be natural for us to indulge in such things is not sufficient to justify us in offering so great an outrage to the sacred office of an ambassador for Christ.

This evil is becoming quite common, and I think it is the duty of the religious press and clergy to remonstrate against it. In some quarters the evil has reached a sufficient magnitude to provoke such remonstrance from some of the press, and I hope the Crisis will yet be added to the number, for all our preachers are not entirely free from the evil.

The following is from the Methodist:—"In the effort to detach the pulpit from the old-time dryness and dulness, some have gone to the opposite extreme, and have sought to make the pulpit attractive by sallies of wit, laughable hits, amusing anecdotes, grotesque gestures, vile puns on sacred texts, and a general airiness more suggestive of a place of amusement than of the house of God. The old mannerisms of the pulpit are discarded, it is true; but new mannerisms are introduced which are even more offensive to good taste, and greater stumbling-blocks to usefulness. We make equal protest against whining, canting, drawling, and the flippant, salesmen style of preaching which would present before the people the serious truths of religion, as though they were of no more consequence than dry goods or vegetables. Harlequin in the pulpit, with cap and bells, and parti-colored clothes, and comical grimaces, would scarcely be more out of place than some men who have intruded themselves therein. . . . .

"To bring the harlequin might bring as many people around the pulpit of an inferior man as a noted genius could gather by its most masterly efforts; but while in the latter case the attentive throng would be drawn toward a purer and higher life, in the former the gaping crowd would smile and be merry, and fail to see any difference between the truths of religion and the jests of a buffoon."

We who profess to be proclaiming the last solemn judgment-message to the world, should above all others be reverential and serious.

THE DARK DEEP RIVER.

Art thou near the dark deep river,
Where the surging billows roll,
And the waves are closing over
Every stricken panting soul?

Art thou near the dark deep river,
Where the monster holds his sway—
Unrelenting with his quiver,
Full of darts to shoot away?

Art thou ready for the river,
For the dark and turbid tide?
Dost thou fear the archer's quiver,
As you near the river's side?

Ah! is Jesus now thy Savior?
Hast thou oped to him thy door?
Or, will death then take thee over
To the bright and golden shore?

Though we all may cross the river,
And his victims soon may be,
Death can never take us over,
But will leave us on the lee.

Christ alone can then deliver
From that dark and gloomy grave;
He will take us from the river,
From those waters he will save;

For he crossed the dark deep river,
And has felt its chilling sting;
But he conquered death forever,
And his children he will bring;

For he has the keys of hades
To unlock the doors of death,
And restore their lifeless bodies
Which had yielded up their breath.

Then to Him be praise forever,
That the serpent's head was bruised,
When he crossed the turbid river,
And old Satan's host confused.

With his angels at the river,
In bright glory he'll appear;
And his children he will gather,
For his trumpet they shall hear.

O, how soon will He deliver
From the monster's iron hand,
And will bring them from the river
To fair Canaan's happy land.

When they rise from that dark river,
With bright angels in the throng,
They will be with Christ forever,
And will sing the heavenly song.

Yes, in loudest strains of vict'ry,
Over death and hell's dark grave,
With the ransomed host of glory
We'll sing his power to save.

— We may safely lay it down as a rule of life, that things of at best doubtful expediency are always best avoided. Let not your good be evil spoken of.

— Never trifle with sacred subjects. Always speak of God with seriousness and reverence. Never ridicule the devotions of a simple mind.

— The fact that men have misinterpreted the Bible is no more argument against it than the fact that men have misinterpreted nature is an argument against a true science.

— Irritability urges us to take a step as much too soon, as sloth does too late.

— An humble man is like a good tree: the more full of fruit the branches are, the lower they bend themselves. "Through much tribulation ye must enter the kingdom of God."

— To teach the meaning of a word thoroughly is to teach the nature of the spirit that coined it; the secret of language is the secret of sympathy, and its full charm is possible only to the gentle.

— We have no right to speak evil of any man, or to report any harm of him, no matter how true the report may be, unless we have a just and benevolent end in view.

— Language is only clear when it is sympathetic. You can, in truth, understand a man's word only by understanding his temper.

Is there a chord within thine aching breast
More sensitive to pain than all the rest,
That oft is pierced by cruelty and wrong,
Until thou fain wouldst cry, "O Lord, how long?"
Tell Jesus.

— Christianity requires us to do good to men, to make them happy, to conceal their faults, to publish their excellences, to rejoice in their prosperity, and sympathize in their troubles, and, in all things, to treat them as we should, in like circumstances, desire ourselves to be treated.

— A real christian loves close, pointed, searching preaching, and seeks not the ministry of those who speak with enticing words of man's wisdom.

— Liberality should have banks as well as streams, say some. True; but even the banks should be green and verdant. When we can not relieve another's wants, we can at least refuse with kind and courteous words.

Then, count not lost the hopes that fall
Like leaves in autumn, one by one,
Nor deem the light is vanished all,
As the dark, dreary night wears on:
You shall know at last that loss was gain,
That through your weary, toilsome way,
As you saw the stars in your life-sky wane,
The night was leading to heavenly day.

— Educate the whole man—the head, the heart, the body; the head to think, the heart to feel, and the body to act.

— Silence is one great art in conversation.

CRUCIFIXION.

There is a reciprocal crucifixion which I should desire and seek after; first, that the world may be crucified unto me; and, secondly, that I may be crucified unto the world. This is a noble figure representing the christian's full and free disentanglement from the world. To break the connexion, and cut asunder the bands between two persons of the closest friendship, sameness of sentiment, and oneness of interest, it is not enough that one party be crucified, for the other may still have affections and feelings after the mangled, though once amiable companion; but when both are crucified, all bonds are broken, and all ties are eternally dissolved. When one becomes noxious to society, an enemy to the commonwealth, and a rebel against just authority, then he merits such an ignominious death as crucifixion.

Well, then, the world is an enemy to the life divine, noxious to the welfare of my soul, and a rebel against the authority of heaven. Therefore I should earnestly seek to have it crucified to my affections, and my affections to it. When a person is crucified, his friends need expect no favor from him, and his foes need fear no harm at his hand. So, if the world be crucified to me, I shall neither court its smiles, nor fear its frowns. I shall expect nothing, and I shall never be disappointed; I shall dread nothing, and I shall never be in danger. He that would win heaven must crucify the world; for while the world lives in the affections, it will always roll itself between the soul and heaven. Now, what a mighty mountain, what a steep ascent is this, the sad experience of unhappy thousands can tell, who never could climb over the terrestrial globe to the heavenly land; but, intoxicated with pleasures, choked with cares, and crushed with the ponderous mass, sink down to endless death. Again, as a crucified man, whose extremities are bored through, and whose body is besmeared with blood, and his countenance disfigured in death, is a very moving spectacle to every feeling beholder; so the world, crucified to the believing soul, will appear vain and empty, vile and abominable, and loathsome for the fond embraces of mental affection. And as a dead body soon becomes stinking carrion, so a crucified world, in the nostrils of a renewed soul, can send nothing up but an ill savor. All its perishing pleasures, which are rich perfumes to carnal minds, will be but like open graves to gracious souls.

Finally I shall be an immense gainer by this double crucifixion; for as no man will hoard up human skulls, bones, and putrifying carcasses, for a treasure; so the world, thus crucified, and all its vanities, shall be the object of my deepest contempt and loathing; while things spiritual, heavenly, and divine, shall share my whole esteem, and enrich my soul for eternity itself.—Solitude Sweetened.

KIND WORDS.

But few realize the importance of words. The wise man has said, "Words fitly spoken are like apples of gold in pictures of silver." "The words of the wise are as goads, and as nails fastened by the master of assemblies." They afford a weapon by which the direst foe may be disarmed, if properly wielded. They are the index of the heart; "for out of the adundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."

Could we but view the joy and peace choice words are sure to impart, how reluctant we should be to speak unkindly to any. How often it is the case when a tempted soul, just ready to yield to the artful foe of man, might be saved from ruin by a kind word. And yet words of bitterness more frequently fall on his ear, under such trying moments, than words of kindness. By some means we are more prone to rebuke than to pity, although doing it is like Satan's rebuking sin; for while we reprove another, we rebuke ourselves.

But when we view ourselves in the light of Christianity, nothing is more unbecoming than unkind words. It cannot be expected that we shall be instrumental in causing our fellows to embrace Christianity, as a desirable thing, unless we show its advantages over the natural state of the heart; and if a heart renewed does not develope that in words characteristic of its state, through what medium shall we look for evidence of a change? Does the admonition, "Be ye wise as serpents, and harmless as doves," bespeak aught but kindness? . . .

There is but one element that will beget within the heart words of kindness. How does that mother win the affections of her child? Is it by unkind words or acts that she becomes the most attractive being on earth to the child? Is it not rather those gentle caresses, and loving smiles, and kindly acts, that clasp the arms of the little one about her neck so closely? That unselfish love, flowing from a mother's heart, does not fail of reciprocation. Are the words of kindness she utters the result of formal teaching? or are they not prompted by the predominating element of love that reigns in her bosom? "He that loveth not, knoweth not God, for God is love." Let this principle rule the heart, and naught but words of kindness will fill the mouth. How sweet to sit in that family circle where this principle predominates. Strangely perverted must be the taste not to enjoy such a state. Look at that unfortunate one, who in degradation sits with depressed spirits and broken heart. Think you the cause of such ruin rests only on the shoulders of the sufferer? Ah! flatter not thyself thus; awful responsibilities may rest upon the heads of others for that sad state. Had a look of pity rested where scorn was seen, or had a word of kindness enjoyed the place of sharp rebuke, that poor soul might have been saved from ruin.—Herald of the Coming Kingdom.

For the World's Crisis.

PURE IN HEART.

Without doubt every true christian will desire to be in heart and life just what the Master requires. If we are saved at all it will be in the Father's own appointed way, by faith in Jesus Christ his Son; a faith that works by love, purifieth the heart, and overcometh the world. If our faith, therefore, is not of a kind or degree that enables us to put away from our hearts and lives everything that is unlike Christ, we have great reason to fear that it is not a saving faith. For if it saves us not now, how can we expect that it will save us in the day of the Lord's appearing?

Shall we then be "like him?" "Every man that hath this hope, purifieth himself even as he is pure." How plain the language. How apparent the duty. Will we attend to it? We know the blood that cleanseth; the fountain opened. Let us seek a deeper plunge beneath the crimson flood, and rise to newness of life, resolving, by that grace which "is sufficient," that henceforth as He is, so will we be in this world.

O the blessed experience of those who believe God's word, that "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin;" who walk in the light and lift up clean hearts to him; who love not the world, neither the things that are in the world; who look for the Lord from heaven, and are ready for his coming. For such there is no condemnation. O, let us be pure in heart!

The Conqueror and Conquered.—The Watchman and Reflector remarks the great difference between the proclamations and letters of King William and the late Emperor Louis Napoleon:

The former devoutly recognizes the hand of an overruling Providence, exhorts his people to put their trust in God and pray to him for the success of the right, urges his followers to mitigate the horrors of war by every means in their power, because the resort to arms is a terrible alternative to be used only when justice and honor are imperiled and can be saved in no other way, and insists that fighting must cease immediately upon the vindication of a righteous cause. Per contra, Napoleon's proclamations are those of a vain, imperious man, intent upon glory and the "pomp and circumstance of war." Whatever be the result of the great war, King William's frank and earnest avowal of a personal and national accountability to a Supreme Being will ever remain to his honor throughout Christendom.

HOW TO BE SANCTIFIED WHOLLY NOW.

You say, my dear brother, that you believe with all the faith you have, that Jesus will save now, etc. I think you will never be able to get one step further until you believe that he doeth it now—not that he will, because that suggests something in the future. You may be saying, How can I believe that he does purify my heart, until by some sensible realization the Holy Spirit bears witness to my heart of the fact? Let me ask, "Did you never trust the word of a friend, without some additional assurances, something beside the bare declaration?" Let me give a case in point. You ask me by letter, if I will come to Z. In return I write, 'Your invitation is accepted, and you may expect me to be with your people on the first Sabbath of next month.' Would you hesitate under such circumstances announcing to your people on the strength of my word, that we would be with them at the time appointed? I am sure you would not. How singular it would be should you write in reply to my letter, "I cannot realize that you do accept my invitation." I certainly would think strangely of it, but would probably write in return, "No matter what your feelings may be in regard to the subject, I of course do accept your invitation, and on the authority of my word you may announce the fact to your people."

The Bible is God's Word. The conditions upon which God will receive you stand written. See 2. Cor. 6: 17, 18 You comply with those conditions. That is, you separate yourself from the world, and lay all upon the altar erected by God, whereunto the unholy may come and be made holy—the unclean and be made clean. And now you want the evidence that God does receive you.

If in the case above quoted your people should ask, "How can we know that Mrs P. will come," you would say, you may know it, because she says so. "But we want the evidence that she will come." Would you not say, "Mrs. P's. word is its own evidence"? Now I will say on the same principle, but in a much higher sense, God's word is its own evidence. My word is fallible, and the accomplishment of it subject to contingencies, God's word is infallible and not subject to contingencies. Heaven and earth shall pass away before one jot or tittle shall fail. His word is spirit and life—the living voice of the living God.

And now that you have complied with the conditions upon which God has promised to receive you, it is the duty of the present moment to believe that he does receive you. Do you ask why? Because it stands written, "I will receive you." If you ask when, God says now. To doubt it, is to grieve his Spirit. "He that believeth not maketh God a liar!"

You say that you do believe that God is both able and willing to do it now. Mr. Wesley says, "To this confidence, that God is both able and willing to sanctify us now, there needs to be added yet one thing more, a divine evidence and conviction that he doeth it. In that hour it is done. God says to the inmost soul, 'According to thy faith be it done unto thee!' Then the soul is pure from every spot; is clean from all unrighteousness."—Guide to Holiness.

HEALTH AND DISEASE IN CHARACTER.

A dyspeptic man resembles a mill with the water-gate always open. The constant flow keeps the mill grinding with an incessant clatter; but as the head of watar falls, however, the movement of the machinery becomes feeble and fitful. If we repair the gate, so that the water may be shut off during the night and allowed to accumulate, there will be an accumulation of power at the disposal of the millwright, and he will lose the dyspeptic character, and become regular in his digestion and recuperative in his habits.

The rich blood that flows in the arteries of a healthy man nourishes every part of the system—the brain to sustain thought, the muscles to give physical strength, and to all the vital organs, to prompt them to do their duty with energy and with watchful care; and hence he sleeps at night, and can rest when he is tired.

A dyspeptic man is never positively active. He is simply irritable, and acted upon by all exciting causes, which leave him with too little firmness to regulate his movements. He is at the mercy of every wind that blows. His character is a sort of grotesque wriggling and jerking, such as is produced by the puppet-holder.

If one could have his own will, he would be awake to the beautiful, the agreeable, and the good, oblivious to the painful experiences of the past, and insensible to the offensive in the present. This is beyond the power of the nervous dyspeptic, and is attainable only in good health.

The degree of health is not determined by the amount of food digested, nor, necessarily, by the rotundity of the form. It is enjoyed by him whose supply of nutriment is equal to the demand of his system, and not in excess. A man with "shrunk shanks," concave abdomen, with cheeks sucked in and lips too scant to cover his teeth, may have money, titles, and position; but he is poor—wretchedly poor and miserable. He may have a large brain, and be ambitious of intellectual honors; in which case his caliber is too great for his metal. He will quiver from his own discharges, and do more damage to his friends than to his enemies.

Our half-starved man is so transparent and talkative, that all he is he has credit for, and he is often rated too highly.

A man in full vigor of health can restrain his speech and action; his mind is not leaky; and when he has thought enough to excite the dyspeptic almost to madness, he is calm and prudent, acting with decision and power, or remaining studious and receptive still. He may pour forth a torrent of eloquence in an irresistible flood that carries away his audience but not himself. He rides calmly on the storm he has created, and of which he is master. He is a happy man. He loves himself, to be sure; but he is in love with all creation, and inspires love in all with whom he associates.

To sacrifice any degree of health for the gratification of ambition is to make a ruinous exchange. In the education of children, or in self-improvement, nothing should be considered an equivalent to the smallest degree of lost health. One idea in a healthy brain will bring about results better in every way than can be produced by a dyspeptic man under any circumstances; for ignorance is impossible to a man of good health and good natural abilities, who moves in the society of intelligent men.

An anecdote is told of a gentleman who received two applicants at the same time for the situation of coachman. He asked one of them how near he could with safety drive to a precipice that must be passed to reach the house. "I can drive you," said this applicant, "within an inch, with perfect safety." At this reply the other applicant rose to leave, remarking, as he did so, that it was of no use for him to compete for the situation against so great skill and courage. "Why," said the gentleman, "how near can you drive?" "If I were to drive for you," said he, "I should keep as far away as I could." "Very well" said the gentleman, "you are just the man I want."

I have known many parents to urge their children forward in their studies to the very verge of prostration, watching them closely to save them from going down altogether; and I am sure, could they know the consequences of their driving, and the ruinous depths of the abyss so near at hand, they would go to the greatest distance that absolute safety demands. —Ex.

CARE OF THE FEET.

Many are careless in the keeping of the feet. If they wash them once a week, they think they are doing well. They do not consier that the largest pores of the system are located in the bottom of the foot, and that the most offensive matter is discharged through the pores. They wear stockings from the beginning to the end of the week without change, which become completely saturated with offensive matter. Ill health is generated by such treatment of the feet. The pores are not repellants, but absorbents, and this fœtid matter, to a greater or less extent, is taken back into the system. The feet should be washed every day with pure water only, as well as the arm-pits, from which an offensive odor is also emitted, unless daily ablution is practiced. Stockings should not be worn more than a day or two at a time. They may be worn one day, and then aired and sunned and worn another day, if necessary.—Scientific American.

SWEET VOICES.

There are a great many different voices in this world. None are alike. Men, beasts, and birds, all have their peculiar tones. The lion's roar, the wolf's howl, the eagle's scream, are very different from the bleat of the lamb, the low of the patient cow, the coo of the gentle dove, or the liquid music of the bright-winged oriole.

Now these voices all tell the characters of their owners. Gentle voices come from gentle sources. And you can tell by the simple sounds of the human voice whether persons are sad, or glad, or mad.

I have heard boys' voices which sounded like the yelp of a dog, or the waul of a mad cat. I have heard other voices that sounded like the squeal of a dying pig, or the ugly grunt of some indignant porker. Then I have heard other voices soft and gentle as the notes of doves, or musical and glad as the morning songs of birds.

Now I think that "out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh." Ugly boys and girls have ugly voices; and sweet voices bubble up like springs of gladness from the depths of loving hearts. Let us see to it that our voices are sweetened by Jesus' love, and then all we say will be words of grace and peace.

How does your voice sound, now-a-days?—Little Christian.

THE THREE SIEVES.

"Oh, mamma!" cried little Blanche Philpott, "I heard such a tale about Edith Howard! I did not think she could be so very naughty. One—"

"My dear," interrupted Mrs. Philpott, "before you continue, we will see if your story will pass the three sieves."

"What does that mean, mamma?" inquired Blanche.

"I will explain it. In the first place, Is it true?"

"I suppose so; I got it from Miss White, and she is a great friend of Edith."

"And does she show her friendship by telling tales of her? In the next place, though you can prove it to be true, Is it kind?"

"I did not mean to be unkind, mamma, but I am afraid I was. I should not like Edith to speak of me as I have spoken of her."

"And, Is it necessary?"

"No, of course, mamma; there was no need for me to mention it at all."

"Then put a bridle on your tongue, dear Blanche, and don't speak of it. If we cannot speak well of our friends, let us not speak of them at all."—Children's Hour.

THE BEST THAT I CAN.

"I cannot do much," said a little star,
"To make the dark world bright!
My silvery beams cannot struggle far
Through the folding gloom of night!
But I'm only a part of God's great plan,
And I'll cheerfully do the best that I can."

Happy Children love each other.—We heard of a brother and sister who loved one another very much. He was the older, and was taken sick and died. They laid him out in his own little bed, and her mother took his little sister to look at him. I cannot tell what she felt and thought as she stood and looked at his sweet face, as white and cold as marble; but she wept very much. At last she said:

"Mother, may I take hold of his hand?"

After a little time she placed it in hers, when the dear child, lifting it up and stroking it gently, said:

"This little hand never struck me!"

Oh! how pleased she was to think of that. Little children, love one another.

ROUND THE CROSS I LINGER.

AIR.—"Juanita."

Sadly I linger
Round the cross of Calvary,
Where Christ my Savior
Groaned and died for me.
While my heart is grieving,
Thinking of my sins he bore,
I am peace receiving,
Life forevermore.
CHORUS.—Jesus, my Savior,
Round the cross I linger yet;
Jesus, my Savior,
I will ne'er forget.

Sins which were many,
Rolled upon him heavily;
And he so meekly
Bore them on the tree.
He was sweetly saying,
"Weary child, oh, come to me";
I his call obeying,
Found salvation free.

There in the fountain,
All my sins are washed away;
From that lone mountain
Breaks a light to day.
Jesus lives forever,
With eternal glory crowned,
He's my loving Savior;
Peace through him I've found.

RESURRECTION THEOLOGY.

(Concluded.)

Having learned that the saints are to experience a resurrection of some kind, we now inquire—

IS IT LITERAL, OR SPIRITUAL?

As Christ is introduced as the resurrected first fruits of the holy dead, the nature of their resurrection is unmistakably indicated by his: "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept. . . . Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming."—1 Cor. 15: 20-23. Christ, by his resurrection, having become the first fruits of all the sleepers that are to be his at his coming, let us examine the resurrected specimen, or "first fruits," that we may the more clearly learn the nature of the great resurrection-harvest of the holy sleepers. This harvest must correspond with the sample, or "first fruits." If Christ, the "first fruits," was literally raised from the dead, then the saints will also be literally raised. But was Jesus actually raised from the dead? Let the testimony of the Bible answer. After Christ had slumbered in the grave three days and nights, some of his friends visited his sepulchre, and were thus addressed by angels: "Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, but is risen."—Luke 24: 5, 6. And to prove that they were not deceiving them, they add: "Come, see the place where the Lord lay."—Matt. 28: 6. And though "they entered in," "they found not the body of the Lord Jesus."—Luke 24: 3.

Afterward Peter visited the sepulchre, and found only "the linen clothes laid by themselves," but Jesus had left the sepulchre. Even the Jews were compelled to admit that the sepulchre was vacant; and to evade the conclusion that he had been raised, they circulated the report that his disciples had "stolen him away," which they never would have done if he were still in the sepulchre. But the sepulchre was empty, and the fact could not be concealed; but how was it dispossessed of the body of Jesus? Was he really stolen away? or had he been raised from the dead? Angels affirmed, "He is risen." Did they tell the truth? The conflicting statement of the watchmen, "His disciples came by night, and stole him away while we slept," would not be admitted as evidence in any court. Witnesses should testify what they know, not what they guess; and men know nothing about what is transpiring while they are asleep. What will such testimony as this weigh against the evidence of wide-awake angels, who could not be bribed by money to tell a lie? Did the angels utter the truth in saying, "He is risen"? They did, for Jesus subsequently appeared to his disciples, and at first they fancied that he was an angelic spirit, but Jesus said to them, "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself; handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have."—Luke 24: 39. He even ate fish and honey in their presence, to convince them that he was a material being after his resurrection. And to Thomas, who had said, "I will not believe" he is risen, "except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails," he exhibited his hands with the print of the nails, saying, "Be not faithless, but believing." For forty days he remained on earth after his resurrection, frequently appearing to his disciples, at one time being seen by over five hundred witnesses, and then ascended to the throne of God, after which he made this affirmation, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore." Rev. 1: 18.

The "first fruits" was once literally "dead," but is now literally "alive," to die no more. Thus Christ's literal resurrection is the sample, and ours must be of the same nature: "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."—1 Thess. 4: 14. Where did God bring Jesus from? "Brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus." If God brought Jesus "from the dead," and if God shall bring "even so them also that sleep in Jesus," he must certainly bring them from the dead, just as he did Jesus. Then "the dead in Christ shall rise"—"the dead shall be raised"—"dead men shall live." Such testimony cannot be invalidated.

Many now insist that the resurrection taught in the Bible is realized at death, in the release of a "spiritual body" from the material body, claiming that the spiritual body is an immortal personality imprisoned in a material body, awaiting a release at death, this release being what is meant by a resurrection—the raising of a deathless man out of a dead man. We reply—

1. Even if it were true that the "spiritual body," spoken of by the apostle Paul, were an immortal personality dwelling within the material body, it could not be the subject of the resurrection; for the prophet affirms that it is a "dead body" that shall "arise"; not a deathless body rising out of a dead body; "thy dead men shall live"—not deathless men.

2. While it is true that Paul speaks about a "spiritual body," it is not true that he represents it as dwelling within the material body. The natural body has its time of existence first, then it is "sown a natural body," and slumbers in the grave till the resurrection; then it is "raised a spiritual body" (1 Cor. 15: 44), as in the case of Christ the "first fruits": "That was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; afterward that which is spiritual."—1 Cor. 15: 46. The spiritual body is simply the dead body in its resurrected and changed state, being thus made spiritual and immortal; for "as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly."—Verse 49. The natural body has its existence before the hour of death, but the spiritual body begins its existence at the resurrection.

3. Death is not the epoch of time at which the resurrection is due, but "at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised" (1 Cor. 15: 52), which sounding of the trumpet shall occur, not at death, but when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first."—1 Thess. 4: 16.

These considerations stand opposed to this spiritual resurrection theory. The very beings who die are to "live again." And Christ affirms of the resurrected saints, "Neither can they die any more," showing that persons who once died are to experience a resurrection, instead of a class of deathless beings.

The argument that will invalidate the future literal resurrection of the saints, will militate with equal force against the past literal resurrection of Christ; and the argument that will overthrow that doctrine will obliterate the christian's hope; "for if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain."—1 Cor. 15: 16.

Can we afford to blot out our only hope of salvation for the sake of exterminating the doctrine of a literal resurrection? Let us beware of such a step. If there is no future release from death for the saints, then Christ was never released from death in the past as the "first fruits" of the sacred slumberers; and if Christ has never been released from death, we are without a Savior, for he certainly died on the cross. But to change the form of the proposition, if Christ was literally raised from the dead as the "first fruits," or sample, then our resurrection must be just as literal as his. To deny a literal resurrection of the saints in the future, is just as strong a denial of the literal resurrection of Christ in the past; and to admit the literal resurrection of Christ in the past, is to concede the future literal resurrection of the saints. The Revelator, in a vision of the future, says, "Death and hell [hades] delivered up the dead that were in them." Death's captives must be delivered up; and so long as death holds men under his power, they are not delivered up; hence a time must come when death will cease to hold men. "The dead small and great" must "stand before God."

IS IT NECESSARY?

1. The resurrection is indispensably necessary to a future life. Isaiah announced the death of Hezekiah in these words: "Thou shalt die, and not live."—Isa. 38: 1. Then to die is, not to continue to live in another state, but to "not live." Death obliterates life in man as really and as fully as it does in the beast. "As the one dieth, so dieth the other."—Eccl. 3: 19. Death totally extinguishes the principle of life in man, more fully than the life of a tree is extinguished by cutting it down. "For there is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease. Though the root thereof wax old in the ground, and the stock thereof die in the ground; yet through the scent of water it will bud, and bring forth boughs like a plant. But man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake nor be raised out of their sleep."—Job 14: 7-12. David says: "He made way to his anger; he spared not their soul from death, but gave their life over to the pestilence."—Ps. 78: 50.

Thus death robs man of life, but the resurrection restores it.

2. The resurrection is a prerequisite to future consciousness. "For in death there is no remembrance of thee"—God.—Ps. 6: 5. Death obliterates the memory. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146: 4. The process of thinking is stopped by death; and the wise man tells us, "The dead know not anything."—Eccl. 9: 5. The resurrection will restore consciousness.

3. The resurrection is absolutely necessary to future reward, for the Savior said, "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just."—Luke 14: 14. The resurrection will bring the reward; and if reward is connected with the resurrection, the resurrection is rendered both needful and indispensable.

Said Paul: "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not?"—1 Cor. 15: 32. What availed all his conflicts and struggles for the cause of Christ, even to being cast into the amphitheatre of wild beasts at Ephesus, unless the dead rise again? He could reap no reward till the "resurrection of the just"; and if that failed, the reward could never be obtained.

Paul endured all the trials of life with his eye fixed on "the better resurrection," exclaiming, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."—Phil. 3: 11. He had an insatiable longing, not for a resurrection, but for the resurrection, that special "resurrection of the just," or "better resurrection." If reward were attainable without a resurrection, he would not have felt so intensely anxious about the matter. He elsewhere speaks of several results that would grow out of the non-resurrection theory, detrimental in their nature:

"If there be no resurrection of the dead," then

1. "Christ is not risen"; and, if so,

2. "Your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins"; therefore,

3. "They also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."—1 Cor. 15: 13-18.

The object of Christ's mission was, that "whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but might have eternal life"; and Christ affirmed, "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." The righteous enter death not doomed to perish, but to come forth "to life everlasting"; while death seals the sinner's doom till the judgment, for "he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption"; and such shall "utterly perish in their own corruption."—2 Pet. 2: 12. But "he that soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting."—Gal. 6: 8. The resurrection is the reaping time; hence, if we would reap eternal life, we must wait till the resurrection. This makes the resurrection decidedly a needful event. It is "the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou [God] shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great" (Rev. 11: 18); and as Christ shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing" (2 Tim. 4: 1), and also to raise the dead when he "shall descend from heaven" (1 Thess. 4: 16), this reward of prophets and saints, both small and great, is inseparably interwoven with the resurrection, thus making the resurrection necessary to reward.

Thus we have been enabled to discover that a release from death is certain, literal, and needful. The resurrection will restore life to the dead; and immortality, which the saints will then put on, will perpetuate life eternally. The resurrected saints will never become infirm, will never shed tears of sorrow, never be sick, but like the angels of God they will forever bathe in an unbounded sea of felicity, without a wave of trouble, and unruffled by the wind of adversity. It will be a sinless and perfect future. The pure of every age and clime will be there: "Neither can they die any more," for "there shall be no more death." "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." Death will then make no more ravages, break no more happy circles, and sadden no more hearts. "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

IS A RESURRECTION POSSIBLE?

As in the days of the Sadducees, many still deem it incredible that God should raise the dead. Not being able to measure the power of God, they blindly pronounce impossible just what God has repeatedly promised to do, and thus "do err, not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God." But the feeblest claim ever made is, that there can be no resurrection without a surviving identity, or personal entity, while the body is dead. Could such an entity raise the body, or preserve its dust any better than Jehovah? Does God need any such help? Will any man's identity ever be obsolete in the mind of the Infinite God, so that he will need identity-keepers to prevent a blunder in his work on the resurrection morn? Where does God tell us about needing disembodied personalities to preserve man's identity in death?

The grand reason why man needs a resurrection is, because death kills him, and not because it leaves him more than half alive; and the reason why God has promised to raise him is, because he can do it, and no other power can do it. God will need no help from identity-keepers, but by his resurrection power will reconstruct man mentally and physically, the same responsible being, with infallible precision. W. S.

LOOKING FOR CHRIST EVERY DAY.

We are not looking for Christ every day. He will return one second time only; and that will be in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. Paul says of Christ: "And unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin, unto salvation." Heb. 9: 28. He forewarned his disciples against being deceived in reference to his return. He told them not to look for him in the desert, nor in the secret chambers, but in the clouds of heaven. Among the remarkable discoveries of our day are these: that the conversion or the death of a man is the second coming of Christ to him! But suppose the conversion or the death to occur in the desert or in the secret chambers, there would be a sad failure; for Christ forbids our looking for him in these places!

How can a man's first or third conversion be Christ's second coming even to him? If a man should never be converted the second time, Christ would never come to him at all, for he has already come the first time. In order that Christ's second coming be at death, a man must die "the second death." Rev. 20: 6: 14, 16. The first death of a man therefore can not be the second coming of Christ, even to him! Indeed, as conversions and deaths cover all the moments now passing, there would be no point of time left either for Christ's leaving or returning! But is it possible that all that is said about Christ's second advent dwindles down to the conversion or the death of a single individual at a time? How fearful the responsibility of the man who thus detracts from the unequaled glory and majesty of our Lord's second coming!—Prophetic Key.

For the World's Crisis.

THE "REST" REMAINING.

"For he spake in a certain place of the seventh day on this wise: And God did rest the seventh day from all his works, and in this place again, If they shall enter my rest, seeing therefore it remaineth that some must enter therein, and they to whom it was first preached entered not in because of unbelief. For if Jesus [Joshua—margin] had given them rest, then would he not afterward have spoken of another day. There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God."

The rest remaining to the people of God, then, is "another day" which Jesus will give instead of Joshua. Joshua did not give it. Jesus, his antitype, has not given it; it is to be given; therefore it remaineth for them at the appointed time. "A day of rest." A day promised. How? In type. 1st, by God keeping the seventh day as a day of rest; and 2nd, by commanding his people to keep the same and for the same purpose—a day of rest. It is a type of a day of rest remaining to God's people. What is a type? A shadow or sign of good things to come. "The law having a shadow of good things to come."

The law, then, had these shadows or signs, given by or through the types incorporated in the law. For instance, in the tabernacle arrangements are types or "the patterns of things in the heavens." The lamb without spot or blemish was a type of Christ, the better sacrifice, "who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God." These were all real. The whole tabernacle with its service were all material realities, and were not lost until they reached their antitype. The lamb sacrifice was real, and met its antitype in Christ, a real, material sacrifice.

In prophecy God has given signs by symbols, or he has given symbols which are signs, and which really and truly stand for coming events. They cannot fail. Thus God speaks to man.

A type is a shadow or sign of good things to come. If a symbol is one of God's signs, and cannot fail, and he has given signs also by types, can they fail? If God has given a type of a coming day, is it possible for that to fail of reaching its antitype? If six days were a type of six thousand years, is not the seventh day a type of the seventh thousand year? How can one day, the seventh, be a type of eternity? Can eternity in any sense be called a day, when there is no measurement of time there? If God has given time in the type, is the antitype without time? If God has given time in the type, and that denotes time in the antitype, and that is one thousand years our time, is it any part of eternity? If no part of eternity, and yet is time, a period of time, is it not that rest Jesus gives his people—the day of rest remaining for the people of God?

If Jesus gives his people rest when he comes, and that rest denotes time, as in the type, the seventh day denoting the seventh thousand year, a period of time, is not that what Peter means in speaking of "a thousand years as one day"—"the day of the Lord"? And does not John, in giving a reign of blessedness with Christ of a thousand years after the resurrection of the saints, which takes place at his coming, refer to the same event—a day of rest?

If so, what right have we to say the 20th of Revelation is all symbolic, and that the thousand years are past already? If the thousand years are past, where is the rest and blessedness promised to God's people by that type? If the thousand years are symbolic, and do not mean a thousand years, then will not the type fail of reaching its antitype?

If the keeping of the seventh day as a type-day denotes only an indefinite period of time, I know of no reason why we should look for the end of the age at the end of six thousand years of earth's history. Consequently the church has been in darkness from its earliest history to the present, and is likely to be, upon the end of this age, or dispensation, and the coming of the Lord.

"There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God." S. K. GIBSON.

For the World's Crisis.

THE JUDGMENT.

The old theory of punishing men before they are judged has long since been exploded, and now the theory of judging them before they are raised wants exploding also, and then theology will be pretty straight. As this thing is easily done, we have a good reason to hope,

I. "He [God] hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world."—Acts 17: 31.

II. He "will judge the living and the dead at his appearing."—2 Tim. 4: 1.

III. "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hades gave up the dead which were in them; and they were judged, every man, according to their works." Rev. 20: 13.

From this last text we learn that they are "raised" before they are judged, and as they are judged at the appearing of Jesus, it is evident they are raised then, unless the word "at" signifies a thousand years subsequent. If that is the signification, then when Paul says, "They that are his at his coming," he undoubtedly means a thousand years after, and hence there would be no raising the saints till the close of the millennium. Such a position is too indefinite for me.

But, says one, the judgment at the coming of Christ is a decisive one, while the one spoken of after they are raised is an executive one; that is, the judgment is decided at the coming of Christ, and at the end of the thousand years they are raised, and the judgment is executed upon them. What! the judgment executed upon them "out of the things written in the books"? The judgment is executed by casting them "into the lake of fire," which, according to the Revelator, takes place after they are "judged out of those things written in the books."

Daniel says, "A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him; thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him: the judgment was set, and the books were opened." Dan. 7: 10. If this language teaches anything, it teaches us that when He comes "in flaming fire," the books are opened; and as the dead, both good and bad, are "raised" to be judged when the books are opened; and as they are judged at the appearing of Christ, it is positively proven that the dead, both good and bad, are raised at the coming of Christ.

This position is fully sustained by the Savior, in Matthew 25:—"When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations, and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats: and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. . . . Then shall he say also unto them on his left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire. . . . And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal."

When he says to the righteous, "Come," he says to the wicked, "Depart"; when the good get "eternal life," the bad receive their "everlasting punishment." Paul informs us that their "everlasting punishment" is "everlasting destruction," "when He shall come to be glorified in his saints"; and Jude declares he "cometh with ten thousand of his saints [or, holy myriads—see Emphatic Diaglott], to execute judgment upon all, ... the ungodly,"—not simply one generation. Jesus said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Paul tells us when that damnation is meted out, and in what it consists. He says, "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ [have not believed and been baptized], who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power; when he shall come to be glorified in his saints."—2 Thess. 1: 8, 9.

Language could not be more explicit. The commission was given eighteen hundred years ago; with the fact declared that all, who do not during the entire dispensation comply with the conditions, shall be condemned; and that condemnation is pronounced upon them when the books are opened: they are condemned to everlasting destruction, which is to be inflicted "when he shall come," and not a thousand years subsequent. Hence the legitimate and only conclusion is, that they are brought before the Judge, their sentence pronounced, and their punishment inflicted, at the coming of Christ; and as this can not be done until they are raised, the resurrection of both righteous and wicked must take place at the appearing of the Savior. THE GREATER JOY.

There was joy in the breast of the mathematician of Syracuse when, in the hearing of the wondering people he thundered out his glad "Eureka," and they deemed him mad; there was joy in the spirit of Columbus when the timid lamd birds sat upon the shrouds of his vessel, bearing upon their timid wings the welcome news of a new world; there is joy for the gold-finder when the rich ore glitters in the cradle; there is joy for the emigrant when he glimpses the home of his childhood again; there is joy for the child when he goes his wondering way into another and yet another secret of existence; there is joy for the poet when he sends a glad thought careering across the minds of men; but there is no joy so pure, so free, so unremorseful, so satisfying, as when the glad disciple clasps his brother's hand, and says; "We have found the Messiah, which is, being interpreted, the Christ."

Brethren, do you know that joy? do you remember when it first coursed through your veins? You remember how it made all creation become invested with a richer beauty; you remember how the music of the woods and of the waters was tuneful because the new song had been put into your own lips, even of praise and thanksgiving to God. But if there be any of you that know nothing about it, come to Jesus now. He waits to bestow it upon you; there is not one of you who need be away from it; there is not one of you who need live below this great inheritance.—W. M. Punshon.

ALL GOD'S WAYS EQUAL.

This is a truth at all times, and in all circumstances, to be acknowledged, that all God's ways are equal. Yea, they must be so, seeing he is infinite in his wisdom, excellent in counsel, free in his decrees, independent in his procedure, and holy in all his works. When Adam was in a state of innocency, all God's ways were equal in his eyes, and, admiring the wisdom of the Creator, he gave names to all the beasts according to their nature; hereby showing his own wisdom, without quarrelling at the size, shape, or end of their being. But no sooner did he fall from God, and become unequal in his way, than he complains, even in the face of God, that his ways were not equal. "The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat."

Such, alas! is the language of my complaining at the dispensations of Providence. If adverse, I dare even go so far as to wonder how or why God deals so and so with me, so and so with his people. And because my unequal soul, that is set at war with itself by sin, cannot fathom his ways which as far transcend my conceptions, as the heavens transcend the earth, I anon conclude them unequal. Ah! foolish, vain conceit; can any thing be crooked in the Eternal mind? Can any action deviate from the standard of equity in the Judge of all the earth? Can he be at variance with himself, who is harmony and unity? Could I glance the glorious plan in the infinite mind, I should fall down astonished, and confess, "He hath done all things well." His wisdom is the same, though I cannot comprehend it; his equity is the same, though I cannot perceive it; and his kind design the same, though I should not believe it. Although, in the death of my dearest relations, or distress of any kind, I cannot learn why heaven deals so and so, and why the time, the place and circumstances are such and such; yet I may be assured, that there is a divine equality in the spotless procedure; for he will never depart from the rule of rectitude to afflict his people.

But, again, what condescension is it in God, to make his people see on this side death the equality of his doings, so that they cry out, "Now I know that thou hast afflicted me in faithfulness; and it is good for me that I have been afflicted." Yet, what though such a prospect should be reserved to the day of revelations, when the vail shall be taken down, and all the ways of God shown to his people? It is not enough that he does it, who is equal in all his ways, plenteous in justice, and superabundant in goodness. And though I know not the meaning of present dispensations, yet it ought to satisfy me, that he who sends them is not only the Governor among the nations, but the Shepherd of his people, and perfects what concerns his saints.—Solitude Sweetened.

For the World's Crisis.

TELL JESUS.

How blessed, when all things look cold, dark, and dreary, and sorrows fill our hearts, and we feel as if we could not bear up under our heavy load, to go and tell Jesus all our complaints, and feel that he listens to our cries, and in due time will give us joy for heaviness. It is blessed to tell all to Jesus, in the long, dark, cheerless night, when all around is hushed in the stillness of the midnight hour, and we are pressed in spirit beyond measure, and trials and privations are crowding upon us, and our body so racked with pain that in the bitterness of our hearts we cry out, This is more than we can bear. How sweet then to know that Jesus' ears are ever open to hear us, and his loving, watchful eyes never slumber nor sleep. It is then blessed to pour out our soul in prayer, telling Jesus all our sorrows, wants, griefs, and sad afflictions; and, best of all, we can tell Jesus every thing. No matter how small or how little it may seem to us, Jesus hears all, and is never weary with our complaints, but says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

"What a friend we have in Jesus,
Who does all our sorrows know!"

How sweet to have Jesus lead us, and to know he will never lead us wrong; and he delights to hear us call upon him, and never wearies of our long and continual coming to him with our sorrows or joys. We never can weary him with our importunity, for he is so willing to hear us when we call upon him. He lives, and loves to pray the Father for us. Yes, his ears are never shut to the cries of his suffering bride.

Dear ones, let us cling closer to Jesus; go to him with everything. It is blessed, blessed, beyond all expression. L. B. WEAVER.

CONSISTENCY.

By inconsistency we destroy the potency of all our efforts to do good, either by word or deed. We must practise, then preach. The power of example is very great. Every one, however humble his state may be in this life, exerts an influence either directly or indirectly over his companions; so a good man by good words and a corresponding purity of life, may by his daily intercourse with others be instrumental in preaching many practical sermons, and doing much for the cause of Christ.

"I see the right, and I approve it too, Condemn th wrong, y t the wrong pursue."

This is true to a greater or less extent of us all, both saint and sinner; but it should not be so; "seeing the right," we should not only approve it, but pursue it too; we should never sacrifice principle for expediency.

We should love truth and honor for their own sake, living up to the standard of right under all circumstances. Many men in this life lead apparently faultless lives, perhaps having the form of godliness, making a cloak of religion in order to gain influence and popularity, which they would lose were they not to restrain their naturally depraved proclivities; there should be a deeper motive, a principle of action, a power within, which loves to do right in spite of all difficulties and persecutions. The true motive is found in love for Jesus Christ; love for him inspires a deep and pure desire for true righteousness, which can be found in no other way. He will give us grace and strength to keep the law both in letter and spirit.

If we would teach others the way of life, we must first be in full knowledge of that way ourselves, for we can not expect to be safe guides over a road we are strangers to. Then let us strive to live up to our precepts, making our calling and election sure; we can then reasonably expect our words, accompanied by God's blessing, to carry weight to the sinner's heart; then can we help our fellow travelers on their journey Zionward, and in turn be helped by them. We should have a realizing sense of the nearness at hand of our Savior's advent, in order to be ready, knowing as we do the fatal results of being found without oil in our lamps.

Let us endeavor to live uprightly and consistently in all things, then we can claim the promises which are for those who love and serve the Lord. We have no righteousness of our own, we are of ourselves unworthy, but He has died for just such sinners as we are, therefore we may come with all assurance to claim the inheritance with our Mediator. CYRUS MENDENHALL.

LOVE.

"Get the heart, and you have got the man." Love "makes drudgery divine." Love cannot help itself; it outruns and leaves law far behind. The question is not, What must I do? What may I do? In grieving its object love grieves itself. This is the secret spring of the believer's actions, which makes him often pass in the world as an enthusiast. Love will stop at nothing; it takes up its cross and struggles after its object over every mountain and hill of difficulty. It was this strengthened Mary when the soldier quaked with fear. It was this kept her hovering round the sepulchre when all the disciples went to their own homes. Love desires all to be partakers of its own bliss; it overleaps human opinion; it runs on with an unceasing cry, "What shall I render for such benefits?" "Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth."—The Church.

THE COMING OF CHRIST.

When conversing with devoted christians in the different churches, we find almost every one is satisfied that we are living in the last days of this dispensation, and that Christ is soon coming. We learn this conviction is spreading rapidly among the true followers of Christ. This is just what we have expected to see a short time before the opening of the great day of the Lord. We think all the true followers of the Savior will be expecting him at the time of his coming. If necessary, the Lord could send his Spirit to all who have not had a chance to hear the evidence of his return, and convince them of the fact in a single day, so that they would lift up their heads and rejoice, because their redemption was at hand.

Now is the time to go in love to those who have not seen the glorious light which is shining so brightly on the prophetic Scriptures which point to the close of this dispensation. There are many noble hearts longing for the truth, and ready to give it a hearty welcome, as soon as it is presented to their understanding. If those who see the truth will only be faithful, and in a meek and quiet spirit present the evidences of Christ's coming to those who truly love Jesus, they will see most happy results. The King of kings is at hand. Let us publish the good news in all directions.

IMMATERIAL THINGS.

It is said the soul of man is an "immaterial substance." To those who make such a statement, we offer the following proposition:—Nothing immaterial can exist independent of a material organism. Love, hatred, joy, desire, attraction, thought, music, animal magnetism, sound, life, pain, etc., are immaterial; but do not exist any longer than the material organisms with which they are connected. They are not entities, or personalities, which exert any power or influence after the physical organisms are destroyed from which they proceeded. Hence, it follows that if the soul is immaterial, it can not exist after the destruction of the material organism with which it was connected.

AFFAIRS IN EUROPE

There is no abatement in the war-spirit in Europe; but, on the contrary, it is increasing in bitterness. The condition of Paris is truly terrible. There is imminent danger of another revolution in the city, that may not be unlike the one in 1793, when blood flowed most freely, and the lives of men were respected no more than that of dumb beasts. France is passing through a fearful crisis. It is evident that she must be humbled. There are yet no signs of repentance for her vanity, pride and infidelity. She does not acknowledge the God of heaven as her ruler.

Frequent engagements take place between small bodies of French and Prussian troops; meantime the siege goes on with a firm purpose on the part of her enemies. Of necessity there must be much suffering in the city. It is said Napoleon is preparing an address to the French people. A careful observer says:—

"Altogether, Paris seems determined to prove that Bonapartism is the best condition it is fit for, and to convert the Prussian besiegers from enemies into deliverers."

Russia is moving her troops upon Turkey. It is thought the Turks will soon be driven out of Europe. Says the Chicago Tribune of Sept. 24th:

"We have, for months past, been expecting the stirring news which at last comes to us from Berlin, that Russia, which has been massing vast numbers of troops on the frontiers of Poland, and Hungary, ever since the Franco-Prussian war broke out, is now moving them down to the Black Sea for the expulsion of the Turks from Europe, and the seizure of Constantinople and the Dardanelles. In the general reconstruction of the map of Europe; when Germany and Italy are completing their unity, France is prostrate, and England dare not say her soul is her own, now is the time for Russia to carry out her hereditary policy, which was thwarted by the Crimean war. Now she can swoop down not only to the Dardanelles, but straight on through Asia Minor, and over the Holy Sepulchre and the Sacred Mountains of the Crucifixion and the Law, or across the Suez Canal, and up the Nile to the Pyramids and the Mountains of the Moon. There is not only nothing in European Turkey, but nothing in Asiatic Turkey, or Egypt, to stop Russia from extending her sway over the entire domain of the Eastern Roman Empire.

In European Turkey, the major part of the population are Greeks and Franks, as all persons of Western Europe are there styled. Only about one-fourth of the population are Turks, who could not sustain themselves in power at all but for the preponderating number of the Turks in Asia."

The Italians took possession of Rome Wednesday, Sept. 21st. It will be observed that on this day, the sun crossed the line, and rose and set at 6 o'clock in all parts of the world. At the same time the Pope's temporal power went down, and the keeper of the tower was compelled to ring the great bell, which is only rung on very special occasions.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE ADVENT TIMES has been changed to quarto size.—We learn that the Western campmeeting, at Amboy, Ill., was a pleasant and good meeting. A committee was there appointed to consider whether it is practicable to move the Times from Buchanan to Chicago.—Bro. J. B. Wadsworth was married Sept. 7th, in Memphis, Tenn., to Sister Mary Valle, who has been laboring in that city. Bro. Wadsworth has been scattering tracts through the South, and visiting from house to house, publishing the glad tidings that Jesus is soon coming. May the happy pair be at "the marriage supper of the Lamb."—We have accepted a challenge from Dr. Houghton (Spiritualist) to discuss the moral tendency of "Adventism." The Dr. affirms that it is "demoralizing." His challenge led us to think of 1 John 3: 3,—"Every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he [Christ] is pure."

AN OMISSION.—In our notice of the Alton Bay campmeeting, there is an omission which gives a wrong impression. After saying that "Bro. York preached in the Mass. Mission Tent," it should be stated that those who had been interested in the coming of the Lord since 1843-4, were invited to meet in the tent. That "meeting continued four hours."

CHICAGO.—We had a very interesting meeting in Chicago, Sabbath, Sept. 25th. We have never seen the church more alive in the Lord than at the present time. The prospect is encouraging. Six rose for prayers in the evening. The Spirit of the Lord was with us. Our love-feast in the morning was a very heavenly season.

SPIRITS AND JESUS.

The demoniacal spirits do not think it best to directly denounce Jesus as an imposter; but whoever believes their subtle teachings can come to no other conclusion. One grand object of the spirits conducting Spiritualism is to destroy the foundation of christianity, cause the people to let go of Christ as our Savior, and then lead them into the dark labyrinths of infidelity, where not a ray of christian light is allowed to shine. The following is a sample of spirit-teaching. The question and answer are from the "Banner of Light," Sept. 10th, 1870:—

"Q. It was asked sometime ago at this circle, if Jesus of Nazareth was really the son of Joseph and Mary; and if not, if he was the son of Herod Antipas and of Hester—which was true? The presiding intelligence answered "neither." As there are many conflicting statements circulating touching the human parentage of Jesus, would it be deemed unsuitable to give at present some positive enunciation as to who were the true father and mother of the child Jesus, born at Bethlehem?

A. We are told, not in your sacred books, but by those in spirit-life, whose words are far more sacred to us, that the human personality of Jesus was brought into physical life by the union of Mary and Caiaphas, the high priest. That is the statement of the problem, which it may be hard under certain Christianic circumstances to solve. Nevertheless it can be solved satisfactorily and thoroughly, through profane history. Set aside all the biblical records concerning this man and rely solely upon profane history, and although it gives but little, that is far more reliable than all that you find within the lids of your Bible concerning his parentage."

It hardly seems possible that such lying, blasphemous spirits could claim that they are trying to establish ancient christianity in its purity; but such is the fact. They boast that Spiritualism contains all that is calculated to elevate man to a higher life. While they deny God and his Son, our Savior, they pretend theirs is the true christian system. If Papacy, that honored and worshiped Father and Son, was THE ANTICHRIST;" and "The Antichrist" is the one "that denieth the Father and the Son" (1 John 2: 22); what term shall we apply to Spiritualism that does deny "both the Father and the Son?"

THE SEA OF GLASS.—At a future time, those who have "gotten the victory" are to "stand on the sea of glass." But where is this "sea of glass"? And what is it? Many speculations have been indulged in upon this topic. Some have fancied that it is the atmosphere beneath the saints after their translation. Others have conjectured that it is the New Jerusalem as John saw it shining in the distance, thus resembling a "sea of glass." Neither of these claims are scriptural. John locates "the throne of God and of the Lamb" in the New Jerusalem (Rev. 22: 3.), and also tells us that "before the throne was a sea of glass" (Rev. 4: 6); hence, the "sea of glass" is within the New Jerusalem, "before the throne." There the saints will "sing the song of Moses"—the song of deliverance; "and the song of the Lamb"—the song of redemption—after Jesus comes. W. S.

THE SOUTHERN WISCONSIN CAMP.—This meeting was not designed as a State meeting; but for a sectional meeting, it was a success. The following ministers were present: G. G. Godfry, G. Thomson, N. A. Hitchcock, J. Adrian, G. Dyson, E. P. Graves, G. Button, and the writer. Some sinners were gathered into the fold of Christ, some wanderers reclaimed, some brought into the truth who were already saints, and a vast amount of prejudice dispelled. Five were baptized. It was a time of rejoicing among the saints. The Lord's table was surrounded by seventy happy souls. It was a season long to be remembered. W. S.

KEEP IT BEFORE THE PEOPLE.

Jesus said, "I will come again," and that saying can neither be misunderstood nor invalidated. It cannot be misunderstood, because the connection in which it occurs demands a literal interpretation. "I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself."—John 14: 2, 3. Was the departure literal? Did he not literally "go away"? Certainly. Then he must "come again" just as literally; for if the "I" stands for a personality in the first part of the statement, it must as really signify a personality in the latter part. The departure and the return must be alike personal. "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven," and "every eye shall see him"; and to put the matter beyond cavil, we are taught to "wait for his [God's] Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus."—1 Thess. 1: 10.

The identical Jesus who was once literally dead, and literally "raised from the dead," is now in heaven; but the Father will once more "send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you."—Acts 3: 20. His coming is both certain and real.

Keep it before the people. It is a truth that cannot be erased from the Bible. Why fear to hold it up everywhere? Shall its want of popularity deter us from advocating it? If the apostles had waited till their mission and message had become popular before they ventured out, where would Christianity have been? God works through human agencies; and shall these agencies, with heaven's truth in their hands, be cowardly, because men do not relish that truth? Remember you are not sent because the truth is already appreciated, but because it is not appreciated; and in a measure you are held responsible for its spread.

God has angels enough to preach his truth in every realm, but he did not see fit to commission them to do this work, but committed it to the hands of men, with the understanding that they should be faithful in promulgating his truth.

Keep it before the people despite its unpopularity. But always hold it up in the lamblike spirit of the Master, "speaking the truth in love," and not for the mastery. Never be ashamed of unpopular truth, nor shun the reproach which it awakens. It is easy work to befriend the truth when all are in sympathy with it; but God wants men who will not be ashamed of his truth at any time, nor any where. While multitudes inquire, "What is popular?" let us inquire, "What is truth?" And then let us place ourselves on the side of truth, even if we have to stand there all alone. Especially let this be our decision with reference to the great truth under consideration—the coming of Jesus.

Keep it before the people, for it is an event of great importance, because then he will verify his promise, "I will receive you unto myself." It will bring the great gathering day, when angels will be sent out to gather the elect from every realm. Yes, he will come in kingly grandeur, "and all the holy angels with him." Every angel will then leave heaven to escort Jesus down to earth, and to gather the saints. Such a shining army of celestial beings as earth never witnessed will surround the "King of glory" when he comes "to be admired in his saints." But this grand event, though delightful to the saints, will thrill the ungodly with terror, for it will bring to them "the great day of his wrath."

Keep it before the people, that Jesus said, "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man as his work shall be."—Rev. 22: 12. If he is coming to bring "reward," not to a few only, but to "every man," his coming is an event of special importance.

And, indeed, as man cannot be rewarded independent of judgment, and as Christ is to "judge the quick and the dead at his appearing," reward cannot be given till Christ comes. So the coming of Christ is the great event upon which hangs our future reward. Without Christ's coming, no judgment; without the judgment, no reward.

Keep it before the people. Our message is one of mighty magnitude, involving the grandest events in human history. "Cry aloud and spare not," but "sound an alarm," and "give the trumpet a certain sound," that all may prepare without delay. W. S.

THE WAR IN EUROPE.

Has the recent war anything to do with the fulfillment of prophecy? This question is constantly being propounded to us, both by our friends and enemies. It is supposed that the Advent people ought to understand the matter, and all wonder whether we can furnish a satisfactory solution. We would not enter into speculation concerning the final result of this war, as to its length, or as to whether the French Republic will be a permanent government, or whether King William will again enthrone Napoleon over the larger half of France, reserving the balance for himself; but we are satisfied that this war is paving the way for the fulfillment of prophecy, if it has not already paved the way; for the Papal power must be thoroughly humbled, and the Mohammedan Euphrates be more fully "dried up;" and hitherto France has stood in the way, by supporting the Pope, and by keeping Russia from interfering with Turkey; but now this hindrance is removed, and prophecy will be fulfilled in due time. W. S.

"THERE SHALL BE NO MORE DEATH."

What richer sound can salute the ears of a mortal man than—"No more death"? This world is a realm of death, and none are yet death-proof. None are willing to challenge death to thrust his dart at them. They fear to enter the conflict, knowing that death will be victorious. But inspiration whispers in the ears of God's people concerning a time to come, when death shall cease to break their ranks, and the saints all become undying.

But as the cheering affirmation falls upon the ear—"There shall be no more death," the question arises, When and where shall this be realized? Certainly not while mortality exists, for mortality is but the step-stone to death; nor where mortality continues its existence, for there death will do its work: nor does the statement refer to a realm of deathless spirits, for such spirits could never have died; and to talk of "no more death" among them would be to talk nonsense. Reference is made to a class who once could die, and to a realm where death once had an existence. The connection locates this deathless state in the "new earth," after the judgment arrives, after the wicked are submerged in the "lake of fire," and after the "tabernacle of God" shall be "with men." "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened, ... and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books. . . . And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire. And I saw a new heaven and a new earth. . . . And I John saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men. . . . And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away."—Rev. 20: 12-15, and 21: 1-4.

So this deathless state belongs, not to heaven above, for death never made its ravages there; but to the purified earth, or earth renewed, where death has long reigned; but when the "former things" shall have "passed away," death will come to an end. When the wicked are consumed in the "lake of fire," when sin shall exist no more, when earth shall be made new, when the dead saints all live again, then "there shall be no more death," "no more pain," and "no more curse." Happy era! W. S.

THE PATRIARCHS IN PEACE.

It was said to Abraham, "Thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace" (Gen. 15: 15); from which modern theologians have deduced the conclusion that reference must be made to Abraham's soul, and not to the physical personality. Is this claim correct? We think not, for several reasons:

1. The text does not read, Thy soul shall go to the souls of thy fathers, but, "Thou shalt go"; and the latter part of the same text in speaking of the same "thou," affirms "Thou shalt be buried." Do disembodied souls have to be "buried"?

2. If the promise relates to Abraham's disembodied soul, and if it was tantamount to saying to Abraham that his soul should go to heaven, as we are told, then we should be driven to the revolting conclusion that heaven is filled with idolaters, for such were Abraham's fathers. Who will accept this conclusion for the sake of making the text teach the disembodied state? There is no other conclusion to be deduced from the assumed premise, unless it should be claimed that as Abraham's fathers died long previously, their souls must have gone to hell; then it would follow that in order for Abraham's soul to be with their souls, it must go to hell. Would it not have been a sad announcement to Abraham, if he had understood the promise to refer to his disembodied soul—to be told that his soul must go to hell, with the souls of his idolatrous fathers? Who would accuse Jehovah of talking thus to the "friend of God," in order to make this text teach the conscious disembodied existence of the soul?

3. There is a sense in which this promise could be fulfilled without admitting the wicked into heaven or driving the righteous into hell—fulfilled to Abraham himself, not his ghost; in the grave, and not in heaven, as in 2 Kings 22: 20; "I will gather thee unto thy fathers, and thou shalt be gathered into thy grave in peace." Also as in the case of David: "For David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption."—Acts. 13: 36. That part which went to its fathers firstly "fell on sleep," and, secondly, it "saw corruption." And it will not be admitted that immortal souls either fall asleep, or see corruption. W. S.

CHRIST'S COMING AT THE DEATH OF SAINTS.

Whether the coming of Christ is spiritual or literal, the judgment scene is interwoven with it, for it is expressly affirmed that he "shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing"; so if he appears at the death of the saint, the judgment must come then; but it is evident that this is not so, from the fact that certain events are connected with the judgment which do not transpire at the death of saints; as for instance: "The queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it."—Matt. 12: 42. Who ever knew the queen of the south to rise up at the death of a saint? And yet, this must then occur, provided Christ then comes, for the judgment is interwoven with his coming, whether literal or spiritual. And if that queen rises up every time a saint dies, she must have experienced thousands of resurrections, and consequently thousands of deaths. Such a queen should be pitied.

Again: "The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment." Do they rise at the death of the saint? They must if Christ comes then, for the judgment comes when he comes. Who is willing to believe that every time a saint dies, the men of Nineveh and the queen of the south "rise up"—that they are rising thus every day? Then give up the claim that Christ comes when saints die, for when he comes the judgment comes too, and when that comes the men of Nineveh and the queen of the south will rise. W. S.

THE POWER OF TRACTS.—While attending the Amboy Campmeeting, a western brother gave me the following incident:

In a western village a little girl scattered a few of our tracts among the people, and the camp was so stirred up by it that each of the four resident ministers met together and arranged to preach two sermons each on the doctrine of immortality. All but one, however, exhausted their stock of substitutes for arguments in one discourse. And now the people want to hear our side, where our preachers have never been heard. Let others scatter tracts and wake up an interest everywhere. W. S.

THE "ADVENT HERALD," edited by Bro. Orrock, contains many good things, though it lacks that rich vein of thought that might invigorate its columns if it were set right on the life and death question. But as half a loaf is better than no bread, we are glad that it contains as much truth as it does, and trust that it will do much good. W. S.

"PEBBLES."—Mrs. Hastings' "Pebbles" is an excellent thing of its kind, and will help stimulate others to do good works, and thus let their religion develope itself. Faith and good works should never be separated. W. S.

☞ Bro. Owen writes, that although much exhausted by his journey home, he feels by the blessing of God that he is gaining, though very slowly.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 24th, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

"LOOKING FOR THE KINGDOM."

Very often we see these words closing the communication of some one of the dear saints as they have taken up the pen "for Jesus," and written sweet, heart-cheering words for fellow pilgrims and travelers toward the heavenly country; or words of warning to those who crowd the broad and beaten path that descends to death.

Thank God, that while we tread the narrow way our voices may ring out over all the by and forbidden paths, reaching here and there those who need but the timely word of alarm to arrest them in their downward career and turn their steps into the way of life.

Many such there are needing only to be made aware of their danger and directed aright by some one who walking in the light sees clearly, and their salvation is the result.

Let your voices sound forth, ye blessed, faithful ones, laboring in the fields already white unto the harvest, remembering that the laborers are few. Let words of confidence and cheer pass from rank to rank, and let every heart rejoice as each signal light appears showing we are near our rest. And let not the powers of darkness have dominion over one soul that can be reached by a single glimmer of the light given unto us, not alone for our guidance, but to light others in the way. "Freely ye have received, freely give."

"God does not give light to be hidden under a bushel," wrote a dear brother, though a stranger in the flesh, a year ago, when I told him how earnestly I had been trying to trim my lamp anew, in a more blessed hope than I had before; and, as at one of the little meetings on the Alton Bay encampment while I was giving my feeble testimony for Jesus, that same brother remarked, "They want a bright light where you live,"—in my heart I thanked him; for welling up to meet it, was a more than ever resolute, determined "They shall have it."

By the grace given unto me, I am keeping and shall keep the resolution. Storms will come, clouds may gather and winds may blow, the waves of passion, bigotry, pride and prejudice may threaten our destruction, but we know in whom we have believed, and that he is able to keep that which we have committed to him. (Pray for us.)

Our own way is clearest, and we walk most firmly amid surrounding perils, when our light shines brightest. This should be sufficient to keep our lamps well trimmed and burning; but added to it we have the assurance that our labor for others shall not be in vain. We shall reap in due season if we faint not.

"Looking for the kingdom." Yes, in the attitude of earnest watchfulness and unabated zeal. Praying and waiting; keeping ourselves in the love of God; watching for souls as those that must give account; enduring hardness as good soldiers, content to be as our Master was, knowing that shortly, ah! yes, shortly, he will come again and all our sorrow will be turned into joy; when there are voices in heaven saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever."

By the grace of God I will meet you there.

PRINCIPLE.

Every man that has a common share of intellectuality, must have a care for the future. His ideas may be crude, and lack concentrativeness; but be they ever so indefinite, they will assume form at times, and the question will arise—What has the future in store for me?

All men desire beneficial results to follow their actions, especially when self is interested. But notwithstanding such desire, all do not work to that end. A man of clear perceptions will not affect a cause to-day that will benefit to-morrow and injure the day after, unless the benefit of to-morrow will more than counterbalance the evil of the day after. Yet when we come to consider the effect of a cause long delayed, we see men that are looked up to and revered for their depth of learning, of keenest perceptions, working a cause the effect of which will be to their everlasting damnation.

Now there is something radically wrong in such conduct, out of all harmony with consistency. What is it? I think it plainly reducible to this: their eyes are blinded, and their judgment warped by the realization of present benefit, not exercising faith in the future requisite to a proper deportment now. If such be the case, what is the remedy? Do all that you do from principle.

What is principle? may be asked. The meaning of the word in its eighth* sense will give our idea, viz: "A settled law or rule of action in human beings." The question may be asked, Can fallible beings settle upon a definite rule of action unai[illegible]d? We answer, No. Only the power that shapes the effect to the cause can lay down an absolute rule; and, coming right to the point, if we have no directions from the Author of the law of cause and effect, then we are in the dark. And if there is a reward for right doing unrevealed, we shall gain it only by chance.

This brings us to the Bible, and the question: Is its author God? Infidels tell us no. They not only fail to prove it, however, but they leave us in the dark as to the aim, object and end of our existence. Asserting the Bible to be a lie, without giving us something at least as good, will not be received as proof by an enlightened mind.

All men are possessed of an innate feeling that there is good to be had beyond this state of things. Some deny it. But we hold to the assertion still. What is it? The unbeliever says, That is none of your business. Let us illustrate that.

A father impresses on the mind of his son, say of the age of twelve, that if he will follow his wishes, at the age of twenty-one he will make him a handsome and valuable present. "Well, father, what are your wishes?" "O! that is none of your business."

Well, the boy arrives at the age named. He may get the present, and he may not; but if he gets it, it is not of merit. The very men who decree the Bible not of God, would call that man a fool. Yet they hesitate not to charge the Maker of all things with just such foolishness. Well, if they choose to believe and follow such teaching, they will reap damnation—the effect; and they will deserve it too.

The Bible, then, is our safety. In it, the principle of right, that is to be the law of our existence, is contained. And the merciful provision that has been made, through Christ, renders the plan complete. We see through that that we have a work to do, and a character to form, in harmony with the great principle of right, or righteousness, contained therein.

If the sceptic chooses to believe that he lives by chance, that his life is aimless, and he goes he knows not where, he is welcome to his faith; but I pray God to deliver me from it. There is no hope, no joy or life in it, and I do not want it.

Let us deny ourselves of present benefits, if they are to be obtained counter to the principle laid down. Let us work from principle, and not from feeling, unless it be in harmony with the principle. Do right because it is right, not because we feel like it, or are afraid of the law. Living thus, we shall gain the blessings promised, and enjoy them forever.

TENT MEETINGS.

I have just returned from the meeting at Shrewsbury. This is emphatically new ground. But one family of our faith in the town. We succeeded, after much search and entreaty by Bro. Burnham, who was there a day in advance of the tent, to get liberty to pitch the tent on land owned by Bro. Stone (a Congregational brother), but a little way from the Post Office.

I was there Wednesday and Thursday with Brn. Morrill and Burnham. The meeting has commenced well. The prospect looks favorable. The people came out well in the evenings, and were very attentive to the word spoken. Our brethren from Worcester came to cheer and help in this blessed work of trying to warn our fellow men of the soon coming kingdom.

This meeting is expected to continue through the next week, and over Sunday, the 9th of Oct. I expect to be there some next week.

These Mass. Advent Conference tent meetings have been the means, under God, of reaching people who could not otherwise be reached. Our meetings, since the Springfield campmeeting, have been very successful in scattering the light of truth relative to the all-important event,—the coming of the Son of man. The blessing of the Lord has attended them.

But we lack means to extend this great work. Protracted meetings should be held wherever an opening can be had. Shall the means be forthcoming with which to extend this mission work by the Mass. Conference?

Let your contributions be sent to Bro. C. Goodrich, Treasurer, Crisis Office. Those pledged and not paid will send in, so that the poor may have the gospel of the kingdom preached to them. L. BOUTELL.

IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

An eminent divine was once trying to teach a number of children that the soul would live after they were dead. They listened, but evidently did not understand it; he was too abstract. Snatching his watch from his pocket, he said:

"James, what is this that I hold in my hand?"

"A watch sir." "A little clock," says another.

"Do you all see it?"

"Yes sir."

"Do you know it is a watch?"

"It ticks, sir."

"Very well. Can any of you hear it tick? All listen now."

After a pause, "Yes, sir, we hear it." He then took off the case, and held the case in one hand and the watch in the other.

"Now, children, which is the watch? You see there are two which look like watches."

"The littlest one in your right hand, sir,"

"Very well. But how do you know that this is the watch?"

"Because it ticks."

"Very well again. Now I will lay the case aside—put it away, there—down in my hat. Now let us see if you can hear the watch tick.

"Yes, sir, we hear it," exclaimed several voices.

"Well, the watch can tick, and go and keep time, you see, when the case is taken off, and put away in my hat.

"So it is with you, children; your body is nothing but the case, the soul is inside. The case, the body, may be taken off and buried in the ground, and the soul will live and think, just as well as this watch will go, as you see, when the case is off."

This made it plain, and even the youngest went home and told his mother that his "little soul would tick after he was dead."

Such is the theology of the present day, and the method used to instil into the young minds of the children that old "lie of Satan," which, when once rooted, is so hard to eradicate. I tremble to think that such a doctrine is proclaimed from almost every pulpit in the land; taught in every Sunday and day school, and woven into almost every paper and book outside of our denomination; for I feel to-day the effects of such a doctrine, taught me in early life, and believed in later years, although, thank God, I have given up that idea now, and embraced the "present truth," but it was a struggle for me to do it.

No wonder the children could not understand it, for who can? It cannot be proved, there being no foundation for it, in reason or common sense, nature or revelation.

The illustration used above, to teach the immortality of the soul, would teach too much, if it taught anything, that of one soul within another. If the case represents the body, and the work inside the soul, what causes the watch to move? Is it not the main spring? Does the main spring represent another soul within this soul? How absurd.

How much better to take God's account of the creation of man to Moses—that the breath of life breathed into his (man's) nostrils at his creation, is the main spring that sets the whole machinery of man in motion.

OUR COMMISSION—"GO WORK."

It is presumable that the Lord and Master of the harvest, in sending forth laborers into his harvest, has not in a single instance failed to indicate the precise nature or kind of service required. A careful examination of the talents committed to us, the natural endowments and capabilities, whether mental, moral or physical, of each individual, will usually determine how each can best serve the cause of Christ in bringing before the world the principles and practice of a religion that shall promote in the highest degree both the glory of God and the happiness of his creatures. And since obedience to the commands and wishes of the Master is essential to all true service, a ready attention will be promptly paid to any expression or indication of his will. The primary direction, "Go work," is doubtless equally imposed upon all; would that all were equally earnest in the inquiry, "What wilt thou have me to do?" Wherever there is "a mind to work," we may be sure that work will be furnished and needful grace bestowed. Given then a place in the vineyard, ability to labor, and a knowledge of the service required, let us not fail in the performance of every duty, and when our Lord shall come, we may hear him say of us, each and every one, "She hath done what she could."—Woman and her Work.

Correspondence.

From Sr. F. M. Shimper.

BRO. GRANT:—I feel that love and gratitude to our Father call for a tribute of praise and thanksgiving through our paper.

My soul doth magnify the Lord, and rejoiceth greatly in the God of our salvation, for he hath regarded the low estate of his people in Vermont, and hath sent us living servants, with hot, burning words of living truth, "meat in due season" for the household, to encourage, quicken, and fully to prepare to escape the things that are coming on the earth, and with gladness to hail our returning Lord.

To this end we have been permitted to meet in a State capacity in the leafy grove, and under the wide-spread canvas. Truly, it was good to be there. O how light and bright the cloud looked to the way-worn pilgrim. How joyous to span the arch of the glorious message which has brought us out, lo! these twenty-seven years. Praise to our God, his name is Jehovah—"the fulfiller of the promises." My heart worships and adores.

But I wish to speak more particularly of the Lord's goodness to us in West Fairlee, a thriving little village nestling among the green hills, but upon whose inhabitants the teachings, doctrines and prevailing influence of Universalism has rested like an incubus for years. But in the great mercy of God, his young servant (Bro. H. F. Carpenter) came among us, with the true subsoil plow of the gospel, and furrows have been made in this deep strata of error and false doctrine. The axe has been skillfully laid at the root (immortal-soulism) of the tree, and many are evidently feeling a want of safety and unrest, while some have fled for refuge to Christ, and to the praise and glory of God are endeavoring to live by every word proceedeth out of the mouth of God; and are joyously looking for his Son from heaven. All praise, honor and glory be unto God and the Lamb forever.

Dear brethren and sisters, help us praise him, and at the same time pray for us; for, be assured, we prove that the enemy has neither gone a journey nor is asleep; on the contrary, he is up and doing, watchful and vigilant. But the Lord is our Helper, our Shepherd, our Shield, and through him we expect to come off more than conquerors, and greet all the redeemed host with joy and gladness when Jesus comes. Your sister in this blessed hope, F. M. Shimper.

West Fairlee, Vt.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. Morrill writes:—"Yesterday (Oct. 2nd) was a good day with us at Shrewsbury,—good audience and good interest. Some good laborers were with us from East Boston, and a large delegation of brethren and sisters came out from the Worcester church to help us, and brought Bro. Hemenway with them. He preached in the tent afternoon and evening. The Lord is blessing us. Baptized three after the afternoon meeting. Pray for us. We continue another week."

Bro. P. A. Smith writes:—"I write for the Crisis, to let those who are interested in my labors know my whereabouts and what I am doing.

Since I came home from Florida, July 2nd, I have preached at Springwater, Rochester, Lockport, West Barre, and Eagle Harbor. I have preached every Sunday but one since I came home. I expect to start for Florida next Wednesday, Oct. 5th; and after this, my address will be Jacksonville, Fla., until further notice.

The church here in Rochester are lifting up their heads, knowing their redemption draweth nigh."

Bro. T. K. and Sr. L. A. Wheeler write: "We wish to express our gratitude to you, and all others who showed their sympathy for us, by sending us aid by Bro. Wm. Willcutt, from the Springfield campmeeting, to help repair the loss we sustained by the burning of our barn, hay, wagons, farming utensils, etc., etc., by lightning, Aug. 25th. And others who may read this, having helped us, accept our thanks for your kind assistance. The hour indeed seemed fearful amid the lightning's flash and thunder's roar, and the fiery fragments that the tempest hurled around us in the darkness of night. Then it was we felt somewhat the value of the confidence we had in the promise—"Fear not, for I am with you." He was with us then, is with us now, and we expect he will be all the way through."

Obituaries.

Vittum. Died, Sept. 11th (of consumption), Sarah Abby, daughter of Alpheus and Almira Vittum, of Sandwich, N. H., aged twenty-two years.

Sarah's mental powers were uncommon, and her meek and gentle ways and innocent life endeared her to all who knew her. For some years she has read the Crisis, and believed the message of the coming of Christ and the kingdom of God near at hand, and with great earnestness has expressed to me her wonder at the rancorous spirit of opposition to this message, for a long time manifested in our midst. To her mind she could never reconcile the confusion of pagan philosophy (so commonly adopted) with the simple gospel taught by our Lord and his apostles; things so contrary that they cannot agree. Believing with child-like simplicity the written word, with hope of immortality through Christ alone, and perfectly resigned to the will of God, she peacefully fell asleep in the hope of eternal life at the resurrection of the just. Funeral discourse (on the resurrection) to a large company of friends, by Elder Hugh Beede. A. B. Hoyt.

Vanderbeck. Died, at Seneca Falls, N. Y., Sept. 14th, 1870, of typhoid fever, Cornelius Vanderbeck, aged fifty-five years.

Bro. V. was a consistent christian, and a member of the church in Rochester, N. Y. He has been in sympathy with the Advent people for the last twenty years. His funeral services were attended at Spencerport. Sister Vanderbeck and daughter mourn, but not without hope. Words were spoken by the writer at the funeral, from Heb. 11: 13, 14. Wm. A. Fenn.

Harvey. Died, in Concord, N. H., Aug. 17th, 1870, Mary W., wife of Abner Harvey, aged sixty-eight years and five months.

Sr. Harvey gave her heart to Christ in early life, and these long years of christian toil leave abundant proof that she was all prepared to meet the enemy death. We believe all is well with her. The mourning ones expect to hear her sing the song of the redeemed in a little while. The funeral was attended by Bro. Couch. Text, "Comfort one another with these words." J. T. Kimball.

Buzzell. Fell asleep, at Lincolnville, Crawford Co., Pa., Sept. 7th, 1870, Marshall W., only son of C. N. and Mary A. Buzzell, aged three years and eleven months.

Thus again has the enemy triumphed, and in nine hours our precious one yielded to that dreadful disease, cholera. Dear brethren, pray for us, for if it was not for our blessed hope we should be well nigh heart-broken. Oh, how our hearts echo the cry, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly," and bring our loved ones from the land of the enemy. May we be an unbroken family then. C. N. Buzzell.—Herald of Life.

Clark. Died, in Salem, N. H., Sept. 24th, of consumption, Bro. Hireh Clark (formerly of East Dennis, Mass.), aged forty-seven years and two months.

Rome.

The following is the text of the articles of capitulation for the surrender of the city of Rome, stipulated between the Commanding General of the troops of His Majesty the King of Italy and the Commanding General of the Papal troops, respectively, represented by the undersigned:

Villa Alboni, Sept. 20. The city of Rome, excepting that part which is limited on the south by the walls of Sante Spirito, and comprehends Mount Vatican and Castle Saint Angelo, forming the so-called Leonive City, its complete armament, flags, arms, ammunition and stores, and all objects belonging to the Government, shall be consigned to the troops of his Majesty the King of Italy.

2. All the garrison of the city shall depart, receiving the honors of war, with flags, arms and baggage. After the honors have been rendered to them they will lay down their flags and arms. The officers shall have the right to carry with them their swords, horses, and everything belonging to them. The foreign troops shall leave first, the others will follow in order of battle, with the left at the head. The garrison will leave to-morrow morning at seven.

3. Foreign troops shall be disbanded and immediately sent back to their respective countries. They will leave to-morrow by railway. The Government has the faculty of taking into consideration the right of pension, which they might have stipulated with the Papal Government.

4. The Roman troops will be formed in the depot, without arms. The Government will take into consideration their claims as to their future situation.

Tours, Sept. 27. Jules Favre to-day made an official report to the Government here of his mission to the Prussian headquarters. He says that a great many different solutions, with difficulty, have been proposed and rejected, and he determined at last to make a direct move. Therefore, on the 10th of September he demanded of Bismarck a categorical reply as to whether he would enter upon negotiations for peace. Bismarck's first answer was unfavorable, though he subsequently asked what guarantees France could offer. The Foreign Minister, who was acting as intermediator, advised Favre to seek Bismarck and make his demands in person. Accordingly M. Favre saw Bismarck, and expressed to him his love of France and liberty, and of his determination to accept no conditions which would render peace only a mercenary truce.

Bismarck replied, if he thought peace possible he would sign immediately; but the actual Government was too precarious and likely to be overthrown. France would not be any more apt to forget Sedan than she had Waterloo and Sadowa; she would soon attack Germany again.

Being pressed for conditions, Bismarck asserted that the security of his country demanded the retention of the territory the Germans now occupied, and mentioned in that connection the departments of the upper Rhine, lower Rhine and Moselle, with Metz, Chateau Salmis, and Soissons.

To the objection of Favre that the people of France would not agree to that, and he could not act without their sanction, Bismarck replied that he felt confident of that before, but as another war was certain, he wished to make it with all the advantages possible.

M. Favre then intimated that Europe might find the pretensions of Prussia exorbitant, and was certain that France would never accept them. She might perish as a nation, but she would not be dishonored. The country alone could decide upon the question of territorial cession, and M. Favre could not doubt what that decision would be.

M. Favre then intimated that Europe might find the pretensions of Prussia exorbitant, and was certain that France would never accept them. She might perish as a nation, but she would not be dishonored. The country alone could decide upon the question of territorial cession, and M. Favre could not doubt what that decision would be.

Bismarck would not listen to any proposition for an armistice.

The second interview occurred at Ferriers, on the 19th of September. On this occasion Bismarck seemed to accept the idea of an armistice. M. Favre asked for fifteen days. The next day Bismarck handed M. Favre his conditions, adding that the Germans must have a fort commanding Paris, more especially Fort Du Mont Valerian, on the western border.

M. Favre replied that it would be more simple to demand Paris at once.

Bismarck said that if these terms were not satisfactory the French must seek other arrangements.

M. Favre proposed a meeting of the Constituent Assembly at Tours.

Bismarck made the condition that the garrison at Strasbourg should surrender as prisoners of war. and upon M. Favre's indignantly refusing, Von Bismarck consulted the King, who insisted upon the surrender of Strasbourg, and wearied with his useless efforts, Favre retired, expressing the conviction that France would fight to the last. M. Favre concludes, from the manner in which all his efforts for peace have been met, the Germans are determined upon a conquest. He said that the interviews were not altogether useless, as they have proved, notwithstanding that Prussia declared she warred only against Napoleon and his army, she is really fighting the nation, which must rise en masse, either to disavow the Provisional Government or resist the enemy to the last.

London, Sept. 27. Evidence of a plot for another coup d'etat projected by the Emperor Napoleon with the assistance of Rouher and Cassagnac, has been discovered in Lyons. It is thought that the papers containing the details of the conspiracy were burned in Paris by Pietri, before his flight.

New York, Sept. 28. The following private cable telegram has just been received:

London, Sept. 28. Strasbourg has at length capitulated after one of the most distressing sieges on record. The sufferings of the people were beyond description, and Ulrich's force had become so weakened by sheer starvation that he at length made a virtue of necessity, and capitulated.

Prince Albrecht has occupied Orleans.

[Special to the New York Times.] The fall of Strasbourg is considered to make but little difference in the question as to the power of resistance of France. Everything turns on the ability of Paris to defend itself three months. That time maintained, the Prussians will never retain a fort in French territory. The whole country is rising in arms.

Tours, Sept. 28. The Ministry of France held a council yesterday to decide upon further measures for the defence of the nation. The Ministers were unanimous for the extreme policy of bitter, determined fighting, and unitedly resolved to offer resistance to the very last against the invaders.

The Tribune's special correspondent at Carlsrhue telegraphs on the 28th as follows:

At 8 o'clock this morning the gates of Strasbourg were occupied by the German troops. It was reported that the inhabitants, who were driven to desperation, succeeded yesterday in hoisting the white flag on the Cathedral, but Ulrich ordered it removed. The surrender was afterward compelled by the pressure of the citizens and garrison.

Florence, Oct. 1. The following is the formula of the Roman Plebiscitum:

"We desire a union with the Kingdom of Italy, under the Constitutional Monarchy of Emanuel and his successors."

Tours, Oct. 2. Advices are now being received from Paris by a very circuitous route. According to the latest intelligence from the capital, the investment by the German forces still continues to tighten steadily. Although the circle of the besiegers draws close, the Parisians remain undismayed, inspired by the recent success of the sortieing column. The vigor of martial law effectually prevents disorder.

Berlin, Oct. 2. The garrison of Soissons has made frequent sallies against the Prussians besieging the place. All these sorties have been repulsed, and the French driven back within their defences.

The capitulation of Fort D'Ivry, upon the southeast, had also previously been demanded. These two forts from their supposed vulnerability will be the first points against which they will concentrate their attacks. They will, however, encounter tremendous resistance. A reconnoisance upon the southwest of Paris discloses that the Prussians at Versailles are throwing up entrenchments and building barracks in evident preparation to remain in that quarter all through the approaching winter.

Lyons, Sept. 21. Everywhere on the way from Paris the roads are covered with soldiers, and the recruits of the army de la Loire, which is in the way of formation at Tours, and another at Durhone, under General Cluzeret, which is about to be organized. From Marseilles to Lyons these two armies will harass the Prussians during the siege. This is certainly the last hope of France. The people are more energetic and resolute than in other parts of France. They have assumed the direction of their own affairs.

Rome, Sept. 27. The city is quiet, and confidence is returning in business circles. The Pope and cardinals now show themselves in public again.

London, Sept. 29. The excitement here about the attitude of Russia is intensified to-day by further details of the military preparations of that power in the Baltic provinces and on the Polish frontier, and by the report that the Hungarian government at Pesth, fearing the consequences of the Russian demonstrations against Austria, insists upon co-operation, or at least upon the absolute neutrality of Austria, in the event of hostilities breaking out between Russia and Germany at the same time.

New York, Sept. 29. The World's London special says that Russia's warlike preparations are against Germany, not Bosphorus.

The Moscow Gazette says Russia loses power because France is no longer a counterpoise of Prussia.

An active friendship between the Prussian and Austrian Cabinets is remarked.

The Mobile are deserting in crowds. At Paris two hundred have been shot for insubordination.

London, Sept. 30. There is no abatement in the military preparations of Russia. Five hundred percussion muskets are daily turned into breech-loaders at the arsenal at Kier.

The Emperor Napoleon rides out daily in the environs of Wilhelmshohe, and is received with every mark of respect by the inhabitants.

London, Sept. 27. [Special to the New York Times.] It is now evident that the war must go on, and the chance is that France will be reduced to a second or third rate power.

Public opinion in England is reacting against Prussia. The pretensions of the latter are alarming the English for their own safety. Lord Cameron, in a speech at Eastwood, shows how sudden may be the collapse of Great Britain under the new system of warfare, and how defenceless England is.

He says that there is no military organization in England. The whole defensive arrangements are a vicious circle of incapacity, waste and routine, and whatever is to be done has to be done quickly, for England is living on the sufferance of other nations. Declarations like these from a man like Lord Cameron and Bulwer are frightening the English into remorse for not forcing the Government into active mediation.

French prisoners of war have been set at work constructing canals in Hanover.

The Paris Defences.

Later advices from Paris announce that the construction of barracks is being vigorously pushed under the supervision of Rochfort and Flourens.

A New Engine of Destruction.

The Mobiles have been armed with a new and dreadfully destructive engine. The invention has just been made, and is kept a profound secret. Greater results are expected from this weapon than from the famous mitrailleuse.

The Tours firemen are being enrolled.

Large numbers of breech-loaders have been distributed to such of the Gardes National as had inferior arms.

It is also announced that a force of one hundred and fifty thousand Cossacks have been called under arms, and that the squadron of the Baltic is ready for active service.

The Russian Minister at Berlin has been instructed to present a formal demand to Prussia, declaring it to be quite impossible that Russia can regard it as a question solely to be decided between Germany and France what the limits of either power shall be; and that the future of Russia, not less than the past, makes it the duty of the Russian Government to protest against, and if necessary, to prevent any change in the equilibrium of Europe, which would embarrass the freedom of action of the Russian Government, and particularly that Russia will never suffer the fixed boundaries of European States to be disturbed in obedience to a subversive and perverse doctrine of nationalities, so called.

London, Oct. 2. Reports from the Prussian armies state that unusual sickness prevails. The dysentery and typhus fever have been particularly disastrous in their ravages.

The Prince Frederick Charles has been severely attacked by the typhus fever, contracted by his untiring and ceaseless vigilance in visiting those of his corps who fill the hospitals.

A council of war was held to-day by the Ministers, for the consideration of the proposition to make a final effort with Prussia, in the interests of peace. A number of the ministers, led by Mr. Cremieux, were very enthusiastic in a declaration of war to the knife, and a terrible vengeance for the losses sustained by France.

Rome, Oct. 3. Later returns show that over 50,000 votes were cast in favor of the Italian unity, and less than fifty against it. Several monks and priests voted "Yes."

War Items.

☞ A letter from Wilhelmshohe reports the place as a general rendezvous for distinguished guests of the Emperor Napoleon. The hotel in the vicinity of the castle occupied by the imperial prisoner is crowded with visitors. Napoleon himself seems to be in perfect health. He makes daily excursions on foot and in his carriage accompanied by several adjutants on horseback. The rest from the cares and anxieties of official life seems to have been beneficial in its effect upon him. He does not betray any apprehensions of the future fortunes of his dynasty.

☞ Many well informed persons express a firm conviction that Napoleon, or his son, under the regency of the Empress Eugenie, will shortly be reseated on the throne of France.

☞ The Belgium forces, which had been partially withdrawn from the frontier beyond Namur after the surrender of Sedan, have been ordered forward again. The Count of Flanders has returned to Namur. Gen. Secocy is forming a camp of 20,000 men at Ailen in Belgian Luxembourg.

☞ The guns of Mont Valerian have dislodged the Prussians from St. Cloud.

☞ It is estimated that there are now 300,000 German troops around Paris.

☞ The siege of Metz has become a close blockade, interrupted occasionally by exchange of active hostilities.

☞ Troops in Poland are reported to have been strengthened, in consequence of the sympathy of the Poles with France.

☞ The large force, released by the capitulation of Strasbourg, will be employed in clearing upper Alsace of the Francs Tireurs.

Bismarck's Plans.

A Madrid correspondent of the 22d says,—that at the Prussian Embassy it is openly avowed that the plan of Bismarck, when Paris is taken, is to declare Napoleon the only legitimate power to treat with, and to sign with him peace. He will then allow him to abdicate in favor of the Prince Imperial, and constitute the Empress as Regent, and that he will appoint a Council of Regency composed of Eugenie, Rouher and some generals well affected to the dynasty. If the departments refuse to concur, he will send there Prussian troops to re-establish the old prefects, inaugurate a reign of military terror and transport recreant Republicans to Cayenne.

The Roman Question.

The Tribune's special correspondent telegraphs from Florence on the 27th, that the Roman Junta declines to accept the restriction on the liberty of the plebiscite, which assures the spiritual power of the Pope, and threatens to resign unless the basis of the plebiscite is changed.

☞ So unpopular are all evidences of Imperialism in Paris, that gentlemen who wear waxed moustaches a la Napoleon le Petit, become at once objects of suspicion, and all wearers of such hirsute appendages are in danger of mob violence. Imperials on the chin are also under the ban.

☞ The surrender of Strasbourg is essentially the most important success which the Prussians have achieved since Sedan. The possession of the city gives them the whole line of railway from Strasbourg to Paris, thereby shortening their line of communication greatly, and rendering it more secure. In addition, it releases the large army under Von Werder, which has been operating against the city, and which is now free to operate with the armies at Metz or Paris, if needed.—Herald.

☞ France will soon present the spectacle of a country beleagured in all directions by foreign armies, and Lyons will probably be added very soon to Paris, Metz, and the other cities besieged by the Prussians.

The great inequality in the condition of France and Germany consists in this: that while reverses could not considerably affect the integrity of the latter country, even a series of victories could hardly restore the prestige of France. The German soil has not been invaded, and, the adult population being all trained soldiers, there cannot be any difficulty in reinforcing the army.

The Times' correspondent, writing from Mayence, Sept. 22, estimates the total number of the French taken prisoners since the war at 140,000. Prisoners are subjected to the severe Prussian rule of discipline. One French officer attempted to escape, and was tried by court martial and shot.

At Hanover the prisoners are put at work on the canals.

Among the prisoners at Brest are Robert Mitchell of the Constitutionel, Paul De Cassagnac of the Pays, and Claret and Fromeud, well known Paris journalists.

DOMESTIC.

San Francisco, Sept. 29. Parties from Lower California report the volcano near San Rafeal Valley, which has been in a dormant state for years, has commenced violent eruptions, emitting columns of smoke and scattering the ashes and cinders for miles around its base. San Diego telegrams say that it is plainly visible from there. To-night the whole southern horizon is dark with smoke.

Harper's Ferry, Va., Oct. 3. The greatest flood for thirty-five years is now raging in the Shenandoah river. The damage to property at Harper's Ferry is immense. Twenty buildings mostly large stone and brick edifices, have been swept away, and forty-six persons in this vicinity alone have been drowned and the lives of as many more placed in imminent danger. Shenandoah city, a mile above the Ferry, is entirely gone.

Lynchburg, Va., Sept. 29. The most destructive flood ever known here occurred to-night. The bridge across the James river was washed away, and several lives lost. The river is higher than for twenty-five years.

The Siamese Twins.—A question much discussed in scientific circles some years ago has received solution, viz: Whether the serious illness of one of the famous Siamese twins would necessarily affect the other. It seems that Chang has had a paralytic stroke, and that the health of Eng has remained quite unaffected by it. A prominent medical journal of London is of the opinion, also, that should either die, the ligature might safely be cut so as to preserve the life of the survivor.

Items.

☞ John Allen, once known as "the wickedest man in New York," died on Friday last at his old home in Perth, Fulton county, N. Y.

☞ There is a Methodist local preacher in Illinois who has passed his one hundred and third year, and is still engaged in his good work.

☞ A large quantity of clam shells was discovered last week while cutting through a hill in Highgate, Vt., resting upon a ledge of the limestone formation. The deposit, which was seven feet below the surface, seemed to have been much worn by the action of water.

☞ The vomito still rages in Spain, and the greatest consternation prevails, especially among the people of the province bordering on the Mediterranean coast.

☞ A great cataract, nearly eight hundred feet high, was discovered last April in the Essequibo river, British Guiana, South America, by a surveying party. It is described as "a column of snow white foam."

BE STILL, MY HEART.

Be still, my heart, what though the strife
Of lawless tongues may vex thy life;
Man's day is short, his judgment light,—
The greater Judge makes all things right.

Let not thy spirit be dismayed,
Though hosts against thee are arrayed;
Thy Master bore the scorn of men,
Nor when reviled reviled again.

Not like a taper's glimmering beam,
With flickering, faint and fitful gleam;—
But steady as a silent star,
He shone unmoved by strife and war.

Untroubled by earth's babbling host,
Anointed with the Holy Ghost,
His life and light have ever been
The life of God, the light of men.

Thus in this world of wordy strife,
I too would live a steadfast life;
And shining on through storm and night,
Walk as the children of the light.

Father, preserve me safe from harm,
By thy great Spirit's mighty charm;
And when earth's woes no more betide,
My soul in thy pavilion hide.

THE TAUCHNITZ NEW TESTAMENT.

(Concluded.)

4. What are the results? (1) A large number of minor variations of no account,—a multitude of them too trivial to appear in the Tauchnitz edition. Different modes of spelling the same word: David's name, spelled in three ways, makes in all some three times sixty variations. Tens of thousands of differences of this kind occur. Diverse grammatical forms in great numbers. Diversities of order: Christ Jesus for Jesus Christ, Esaias the prophet for the prophet Esaias, woman, believe me, or, believe me, woman. Of these and the like, a vast number. The interchange of pronouns for nouns: "he" for Jesus, or Peter, or Cornelius, "his disciples" the disciples, etc., in numerous instances. Equivalent words: kingdom of the Lord, for kingdom of God; two Greek words for "saying" exchanged; "and" in place of then or now, etc. Shortenings of phrases: "preaching of the kingdom," or "preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God," (Acts 13: 12.) Philip cometh, or, and again Philip cometh. "Which" for "as many as." "Rejoice because I go," or, "because I said I go," (John 14: 28). Numerous omissions, from a single word, as, "a woman," instead of "a certain woman," up to a clause or a whole sentence. Thus the Sinaitic omits "for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans," (and Tischendorf concurs against the Alexandrine and the Vatican.) Inadvertent omissions are numerous. Insertions from parallel passages are also very abundant. Thus the copyists often introduced into one of the gospels passages from another, and in various ways intermingled the different narratives of the same event, or similar utterances in different parts of the New Testament. The diversities of this character, really of no account, and some of them recognizable at a glance, constitute, when we compare all the manuscripts, many thousands, and in the best manuscripts a large number. They are but repetitions.

(2.) Another less numerous class of variations, appreciably, though not importantly, modifies the thought. They strengthen the logical connection, insert or omit an explanatory phrase or circumstance, employ a more or a less precise expression, or even add a new shade of meaning. Still the improvements thus resulting are fewer than those which would come from a correction of present erroneous translations. Frequently they relieve the interpretation. Occasionally a gloss seems to have been introduced for this very purpose. Thus in Matt. 5: 22, "Without a cause," though perhaps a true interpretation, is probably a gloss. In Matt. 6: 1, "alms" should read, "righteousness," which restores the subordination of the thoughts following. In Matt. 1: 25, "first-born" has been introduced from Luke 2: 7, where it is genuine, "By them of old time," falls out from 5: 27, though belonging in verse 21. In 5: 47 for "publicans" we should read "Gentiles," and in 7: 22 for "we forgive," read "we have forgiven," with a slight increase of force in both cases. Verse 44 of chapter 6 is to be reduced about one half, with no loss of thought or force. These are but specimens. The true text usually proves briefest, simplest, and most vigorous, as well as clear of repetitions; and the changes that have been made in it consist very largely of dilutions.

(3.) A third class of corrections, though having no doctrinal bearings, clash more with our long associations. The closing doxology of the Lord's prayer, however excellent, is now reckoned by all the critical editors as no part of the original. The song of the angels apparently reads "peace on earth to the men of good pleasure," i. e., of God's good pleasure. The account of the woman taken in adultery (John 8: 1-11) the critical editors do not include in the text of John's gospel, though clearly very ancient and believed by Alford to be part of the original "oral gospel." They also displace verse 4th and the last seven words of verse 3d in John 5. The last twelve verses of Mark are displaced by Tischendorf and Alford, though the latter regards them as an "authentic record' by some other hand. Of the solemn threefold reiteration in Mark 9: 44, 46, 48, the first two are omitted by Tischendorf on the strength of the Sinaitic, Vatican and some other excellent MSS., but retained by Alford on the strength of the Alexandrine and other old MSS., together with several of the oldest of all versions. The case is not clear. These are the most notable cases of this kind.

(4.) While none of the various readings affect any question of doctrine on the whole, they do concern a very few of the proof-texts, leaving the great multitude of them unchanged. In one passage there is an addition made to the other utterances, where instead of "eternal condemnation," we now read "eternal sin," (Mark 3: 29). The omission of Acts 8: 37—the three oldest manuscripts concurring—removes a verse which our brethren are fond of quoting; while, on the other hand, they are rejoicing in Tischendorf's omission in his last edition (on much more questionable grounds) of the words "and tables" in Mark 7: 4. A slight readjustment of the proof-texts concerning Christ takes place, with no effect on the total result. The text concerning the three heavenly witnesses (1 John 5: 7) has long ceased to be quoted by any intelligent Trinitarian. It rests on no ancient and valid manuscript authority, and was not printed in the first edition of the Greek Testament. The disputed reading in 1 Tim. 3: 16, is now somewhat generally conceded by critical editors and scholars to be, "Who was manifest in the flesh," rather than "God manifest," etc. On the other hand, the almost equally famous passage, Acts 22: 28, in which Griesbach wished to read "The church of the Lord," reads, according to the Sinaitic and Vatican manuscripts, as in our version, "Church of God." Alford concurs, and Tischendorf has not reached it in his last edition. A singular variety is given by these two oldest manuscripts in John 1: 18—"The only begotten God." Tregelles accepts it, Tischendorf rejects. Alford hesitatingly concurs in the rejection. These diversities, whichever way they are settled, leave numerous other passages of the same kind unquestioned and unquestionable. They change no result.

The passages we have mentioned are the only ones of any special importance that occur to us, bearing on strictly doctrinal questions.

We ought to add that the readings of Tauchnitz's edition, convenient and valuable as they are, do not give the reader any adequate view of the exact result in each instance. The old versions, the early fathers, and other important manuscripts, together with various well settled principles of comparison, have to be taken into the account. Tischendorf, who makes the greatest account of the two oldest manuscripts, yet not unfrequently, as in John 1: 18, decides against them. The reader must, therefore, beware of hasty conclusions from the readings of these three manuscripts. The field is one of immense breadth. A writer in one of the papers, who spoke of having gone through the Tauchnitz edition, marking with his pencil all the principal changes indicated in the manuscripts there quoted, proceeded much upon the principle of the novice, who, having learned of three valuable medicines, proceeds to administer them straight on to all his patients in succession. It is Dr. Sangrado in Gil Blas with his inevitable "bleeding and warm water." It will not answer to be too wise on the subject of the New Testament text, upon the strength of the Tauchnitz edition only.—Advance.

"THEM ALSO WHICH SLEEP IN JESUS WILL GOD BRING WITH HIM."

Not unfrequently is this detached portion of Scripture quoted to prove that Christ will bring from heaven, at his return, a class of saints who have passed through the valley of death, and entered heaven as disembodied personalities. But the fallacy of this claim will appear from various considerations:

1. It is not said that Christ is to bring these saints, but God is to bring them.

2. He is not to bring them down from heaven, but will bring them up from the grave, just as he brought Jesus up.

3. He is not to bring disembodied souls, but them that "sleep in Jesus;" and if disembodied souls go to heaven to "sleep" there, they are no better off than if asleep in the ground. If souls are here spoken of, they are souls "asleep;" and if they are to be brought from heaven, then souls are "asleep" in heaven; and why is not unconsciousness as bad in one locality as in another? But let us look at the text: "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." 1 Thess. 4: 14. How are they to be brought? Paul says, "even so"—even as "Jesus died and rose again," being thus brought from the grave by God the Father, for "the God of peace brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus." Heb. 13: 20. "Them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him—with Christ—that is, as God brought Christ from the dead, so he will bring from the dead those who sleep in Christ; and as Christ was brought again from the dead to an endless life," so will it be with those who "sleep in Jesus"—for they are to be brought "even so," even as Christ was. If Christ was brought forth to an immortal life, "even so" it will be with his saints.

Thus it is evident that no reference is here made to bringing sleeping ones from heaven, but from the grave, even as Jesus was brought therefrom. W. S.

REPORT

Of the New York State Adv. Chris. Conf. Held in Darien, N. Y., Sept. 9th to 11th.

This was the first quarterly session for the fifth conference year, and proved a very interesting and we trust profitable season to all in attendance, of which there were about one hundred brethren and sisters from various parts of the State.

The first meeting, on Friday evening, on account of the rain was not large, but we enjoyed a spirited social meeting; after which listened to a few stirring words from Bro. D. Cogswell, relating to the "signs of the times," which seemed to deepen the feeling already resting upon the people that the coming of the Lord is very near, and that we should make it, individually, and as a people, the great practical question of the hour.

The first business session was called to order at eight o'clock on Saturday morning,—the Pres., Bro. B. P. Stevens, in the chair. Prayer by Bro. C. P. Greenman. Minutes of last conference read and received. The President appointed the following committees: On devotional exercises—B. C. Simonds, N. T. Withington, and A. C. West. To prepare business—D. Cogswell, J. H. Whitmore, C. F. Sweet. By vote, all present in sympathy and harmony with this body were invited to take part in its deliberations.

The following delegates presented their credentials and were received: Thos. Hosbury, Lockport; Aldrich Wiley, Springwater; A. C. Bishop, Honeoye; Edward Sanderson and S. Reed, East Shelby; David McClellan, Knowlesville; Moses Whittaker, Darien; E. F. Sergisson, Rochester.

Bro. Chas. P. Greenman presented certificates of ordination and membership in the Adv. Chris. church, and was received as a member of the conference.

Vice Pres. D. Cogswell reported briefly the visible results of our work in tent and other meetings. Dwelling mostly on the tent enterprise, he strongly recommended it, as a power in the hands of the conference, to the hearty support of the churches at large.

The ministers present were called upon, and gave us interesting reports of their labors. The President speaking first was followed by Brn. C. F. Sweet, W. J. Hobbs, A. C. Newell, C. P. Greenman, J. H. Whitmore, Sr. E. S. Jennings, D. Cogswell, and I. Allen. Brn. Low and Sergisson arrived later. The delegates also reported the various phases of rising and declining interest in their respective localities.

All in all, these reports were interesting and encouraging. But it is with us as with every other religious body of this day,—on the part of the masses, vital godliness declines, for which we mourn, and sigh in the words of Jesus, "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Nevertheless our views of gospel and present dispensational truths are being received by great numbers in this State; and, too, of those that receive them into the heart, to permeate all the being—grow with their growth, and strengthen with their years, to "adorn the doctrine of God," to honor Christ, and to glorify his Father, we may rejoice that there are not a few.

At 2 P. M., met for religious services, Bro. W. J. Hobbs occupying the desk. Business meeting called again at three o'clock, and the Treasurer's report listened to. In answer to the resolution passed at the last session, as set forth in the Secretary's letter to the various churches, the following donations had been received: Lockport, $15.00; Dansville, $10.50; Darien, $12.00; Knowlesville, $5; Seneca Falls, $7.00; Alton, $2.60; Honeoye, $3.00; So. Butler, $2.00; Rochester, $3.00; Joseph Tryon, Youngstown, $2.00; Total, $62.10.

The following preamble and resolution submitted by Bro. Whitmore, of the business committee, was adopted:

Whereas many places within the bounds of this conference desire advent-christian preaching, that singly are unable to sustain it weekly; and whereas experience has shown the practicability of circuit preaching; therefore, Resolved, That the various advent-christian churches in this State be requested to report at the next session of this conference their wishes in this respect, together with plans for carrying the same into effect.

Bro. Whitmore also gave notice of his intention, at the next annual conference, to offer a resolution, dividing the State into two or more quarterly conferences, which shall hold their annual meetings together.

A motion passed, to invite some member of the body to deliver an opening address at the next session; and another inviting Bro. W. A. Fenn to this duty, and Bro. C. F. Sweet to act as alternate. Adjourned.

At an early hour in the evening came together for prayer and social meeting. Truly it was good to be there; our hearts were both cheered and strengthened. All were looking for Jesus very soon, and rejoicing in the glorious prospect. At eight o'clock the order was changed, and Bro. J. H. Whitmore considered the subject—"Watchman, what of the night?" The house was well filled with attentive listeners, and the sermon was a well planned, timely, and telling discourse. Bro. W., in concluding with the prophet that "the morning cometh and also the night," brought before us in strong array a large company of facts, those "stubborn" and, of all others, the most uncompromising "things" in the world. The spirit of the meeting was practical, which remark applies equally to the several services of Sunday. At the close, one lady rose in confession of Jesus.

On Sunday morning, from eight to half-past ten, a rich love-feast was enjoyed; after which Bro. C. F. Sweet read the eighteenth chapter of Revelation, and spoke from these words: "Behold I will cast her into a bed, and they that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds."—Rev. 2: 22. The subject opened into a field of intense interest in view of the present critical position of the "woman" and the "kings of the earth"; of which it lost none in the hands of Bro. S. Logical, expositive, and practical, the effort was highly appreciated by those who love unvarnished "meat in due season."

A certificate was presented from the A. C. church in Rochester, recommending the ordination of Bro. E. F. Sergisson. No objection being offered or known, the ceremony of laying on of hands was observed. Prayer by C. W. Low; Charge by C. F. Sweet, and Right hand of fellowship by D. Cogswell. It was an impressive scene. The audience then went out to baptism, and the sister before mentioned was "buried with Christ"—"planted in the likeness of his death." At 2 P. M., Sr. E. S. Jennings discoursed to us upon the "unsearchable greatness of the Lord" (Ps. 145: 3); after which we came around the communion table, to celebrate the great sacrifice He made for us.

During the day the house had been full, but in the evening it was filled to overflowing. The prayer and social meeting which preceded preaching was another of deep feeling and much interest. Bro. C. W. Low addressed the large audience on the subject of the Resurrection, as the very bone and sinew of the future hope of the world—Spiritists and the traditions and doctrines of men to the contrary notwithstanding.

A short, informal business meeting was called at the close of the services. Bro. Newell moved, with regard to Bro. E. A. Bowe, of Batavia, N. Y.,—whom he knew to be a worthy christian, and who offered to spend a portion of his time as a colporteur, provided tracts were supplied him—that this conference furnish the same. Carried.

A vote of thanks was tendered the good people of Darien for the very generous manner in which they had anticipated all our temporal wants while among them. This was well deserved, since the practical workings of the meeting on their part were as nearly perfect as possible. In fact, harmony seemed everywhere present here; and in the singing, praying, testimonies, and preaching also, there seemed to breathe a free spirit of love and union. If, then, these seasons are "earnests" only, what shall be the full reward? Adjourned to the call of the President.

So. Butler, N. Y., Sept. 19th, 1870.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING?

"Go work to-day in my vineyard," is God's command, addressed to every son or daughter of his in the world. It is what he says to you, dear reader, this day. You may not think of this. You may look upon it as addressed to others, not to you. But it is addressed to you, and you must decide whether you will do it or not. What have you been doing these many years past in the Lord's vineyard? What are you now doing? What do you intend doing? Are you working or loitering? If working, is it in God's vineyard or your own? Are you cultivating the tender grapes of righteousness, or the sour grapes of sin? Are you chasing and capturing and destroying the little foxes that spoil the vines, building up the walls, or gathering out the stones?

"Son, go work to-day in my vineyard." It is not merely to go into my vineyard, to sit, or stand, or lie down, in the shadow of the vines, nor to eat the choice grapes. This is all many are willing to do. But it is workers that are needed; men and women who are not afraid of soiling their hands, spoiling their complexion, or straining their muscles. It is to-day they are wanted. There is pressing and immediate need. The vines are suffering, the grapes are going to loss. It is to-day you are wanted. There is nothing said about to-morrow. This night you may be called to your reward. This may be your last day at work. You may die, and there is no work in the grave. Then go now work in God's vineyard.—Christian Recorder.

THE R. I. CAMPMEETING.

The grove selected for this meeting was pleasant and healthful, easy of access, and far enough from the main road to be free from dust. The only inconvenience was its distance from the R. R., which probably kept many at home who would otherwise have attended.

The meeting was better than we expected for the first one. We were somewhat disappointed in not seeing a larger number of the brethren and sisters present, but we had a good meeting notwithstanding. The language of all was, "It is good to be here." I think that some who did not come because they felt as though they could not afford to leave their business cares, lost much by remaining away.

The good order that prevailed throughout, the almost perfect silence in which the crowd was held while the servants of God proclaimed the truths due this generation, the ecstasy of joy that filled the hearts of the saints, together with tear-bedewed cheeks and piteous pleadings of hard-hearted sinners, all went to show that God approved, yea, blessed their effort to advance the interests of his cause.

Some who were in bondage to sin when the meeting commenced, are now rejoicing in the glorious liberty of the gospel.

We were cheered and encouraged by the following preachers, most of whom discoursed to us from the stand: A. Ross, A. Durfee, E. Bellows, P. S. Butler, Geo. A. Brown, Wm. Kellaway, E. Cotton Eldredge, M. R. Phetteplace, J. S. Collins, D. V. Corey, and Sr. Stoddard.

The parting scene, like all similar scenes, was a sad one. Many expressed a desire to remain in that beautiful grove with the saints there assembled until Jesus comes. All were confident that we should not have to wait long. But duty bade us separate, and I trust all returned to their homes with their spiritual strength greatly renewed. C. H. SWEET.

— Real difficulties are the best cure of imaginary ones, because heaven helps us in the real ones, and makes us ashamed of the others.

— Men may judge us by the success of our efforts. God looks at the efforts themselves.

— It is as dangerous to give admonition to some proud spirits as to take a thorn from a lion's foot.

— It is every way better to do what God intends for us, than what we intend for ourselves.

— Our blessed Lord illustrated all virtues indeed, but most especially the passive ones.

— If prayer does not cause us to leave off sinning, sinning will soon make us leave off praying.

Who conquers and is free.

The bravest of the brave.

— Regret not a golden age that is behind you. There is one before, and it beckons you. Its rewards are not for the idle, but for the brave hearts disciplined to toil.

— A white garment appears worse with slight soiling than do colored garments much soiled; so a little fault in a good man attracts more attention than do great offences in bad men.

— Wisdom does not show itself so much in precept as in life—in firmness of mind and mastery of appetite. It teaches us to do as well as to talk; and to make our words and actions all of a color.

— A hidden light soon becomes dim, and if it be entirely covered up, will expire for want of air. So it is with hidden religion. It must go out. There can not be a christian whose light in some aspect does not shine.

— Men who see into their neighbors are very apt to be contemptuous; but men who see through them find something lying behind every human soul which it is not for them to sit in judgment on, or to attempt to sneer out of the order of God's manifold universe.

ILL. CHRISTIAN CAMPMEETING.

Brethren in Christ (of different denominations) met according to notice. Preaching brethren present: A. Raymond, Iowa, R. P. Hoag, A. Bailey, J. Billings, T. I. Glidding, S. A. Carpenter, and Sr. Fenn; all of whom spoke with freedom. The meeting was well attended from the beginning; a good interest was manifest, and we trust much good was done in the name of the Lord. The expenses were met promptly from the proceeds of the public table. No collection was taken during the meeting.

The brethren voted that we call and hold another meeting, after the same order, the coming year, if our blessed Savior does not come before. We parted, but not forever; there will be a more glorious gathering ere long, on the resurrection morn, where we shall meet to part

"No, never, on the evergreen shore."

DUTIES OF A MOTHER.

The following excellent suggestions were originally contributed to the Country Gentleman nearly six years ago. The article has ever since been floating among our exchanges, and we think its prolonged vitality affords some evidence that it is worth republication and reperusal:

She should be firm, gentle, kind; always ready to attend to her child.

She should never laugh at him, at what he does that is cunning—never allow him to think of his look except to be neat and clean in all his habits.

She should teach him to obey a look, to respect those older than himself. She should never make a command without seeing that it is performed in a right manner.

Never speak of a child's faults or foibles or remark before him; it is a sure way to to spoil a child.

Never reprove a child while excited, nor let your voice be raised while correcting him. Strive to inspire love, not dread—respect, not fear.

Teach your child to wait upon himself; to put away a thing when done with it. But do not forget that you were once a child. The griefs of the little ones are too often neglected—they are great for them. Bear patiently with them, and never in any way arouse their anger if it can be avoided.

Teach a child to be useful whenever opportunity may offer.

WAS IT A MIRACLE?

For thirty years Muller, of Bristol, has lived by faith. If he wants money, lands, food, clothes or health, he goes and asks for it, and gets it. A few men in this country have tried that system with various shades of success. Fulton street presents some remarkable instances of direct answer to prayer, if you can believe human testimony. A case occurred here a short time since, and I send you the facts just as they occurred. The parties are well known, and the facts can be confirmed to the satisfaction of any one. Ministers out of employment drift to New York, partly to get away from the scenes of their former triumph, partly to find employment outside of the profession without being meddled with.

As Stewart's store is said to be a hospital for decayed merchants, because so many bankrupt traders are employed in that house, Brooklyn may be regarded as the rendezvous of pastors without a parish. One of this number has been doing a little business, sometimes up and sometimes down. One Saturday he found himself almost wholly cleaned out. His purse was without a penny, his larder empty, his credit exhausted. On his way home he went into a store and asked for a bill of goods on credit until the next week. The storekeeper blandly but firmly refused. The poor fellow went to his home sadly enough. There was nothing to eat in the house. He called his wife and children together, told them he was penniless and without food, and said: "My dear children there is no help from man, let us go to God." The little household knelt in prayer, and went supperless to bed.

Between ten and eleven o'clock the family were aroused by a loud knocking at the door. The husband went down, and found a gentleman waiting to see him. He was a well-known merchant of the city, and knew nothing of the distress of the family, or that the household was in want. Addressing himself to the occupant of the house, he said: "You may be surprised to see me here at this time of night. I undertook to go to bed, but I could not sleep. I felt impressed that it was my duty to come here. I tried to shake it off, but I could not, and I am here to see if your family want anything." The man told his story from the fulness of his heart. His friend left with him a sum of money, and promised to see the family early on Monday morning. Late as it was, the relieved gentleman went out for his Sabbath supply, and spent the night in thanksgiving. He believes in direct answers to prayer.—N. Y. Cor. Journal.

TREATMENT OF MINISTERS' SORE THROAT.

Though the writer—as narrated in a former article—escaped consumption by strengthening of his lungs by a judicious series of lung exercises, and never had the genuine ministers' sore throat, he still had some decided experience and many opportunities for observations. He very early noticed a fact which, for a time, greatly troubled him. This fact was that the so-called long prayer, from ten to fifteen minutes, was far more trying than all the other services. His throat was very tired, and felt as though it was bruised. He could not understand why praying was so much more fatiguing than preaching, or than reading the Scriptures and hymns, or than talking.

Noticing that praying in his closet and in his family on his knees, he had no trouble with his throat, and that the organs of speech worked freely and without pain, he was forced to the conclusion that the difficulty was not to be set down to the account of prayer. This led him to observe the altered position of the head in these different attitudes of prayer. When on his knees his head was in its natural position, and all the organs of speech worked freely. When standing in the pulpit his head was thrown back so that his face turned considerably up. This position threw all the organs of speech out of their natural position, and caused every word spoken to be uttered under constraint. Let any one try the experiment and speak for five minutes with his head thrown back, and he will find how exhausting it is.

Having made this discovery, he was careful to change the position of his head, and instantly found that the prayer was no more fatiguing than the preaching. This hint he gave to many of his brethren, who also found relief. He rode one day, at a funeral, with one of the most distinguished medical men of the city, who said, "Why is it that ministers have this terrible sore throat? It greatly perplexes the faculty, as the medicines which cure the sore throats of lawyers, of doctors, merchants, and others have no efficacy with ministers. The cause cannot be in the amount of speaking, or in the badly ventilated rooms in which they speak, as lawyers have to speak for hours in the vitiated air of the court rooms. There is a mystery about the ministers' sore throat." He told the M. D. that the true cause was in the position of the head during the prayer, and narrated to him his own experience. The M. D. threw his head back and commenced speaking, but soon desisted, saying: "You have solved the mystery. I can now cure my clerical patients." The same statement was made to other medical men, and always with the expressed belief that the unnatural position of the head, throwing the organs of speech into a constrained position, had very much to do with the causing of ministers' sore throat. The same trouble is also produced by those who read their sermons. With the head bent forward and down so as to follow their manuscript, the organs of speech are confined and act under constraint, and the same weariness and soreness is produced. The position of the head in delivering a sermon should be natural. Here the lawyers have the advantage, as they never read their addresses either to the court or the jury.

The influence of diet should not be omitted. He found that when he indulged in fat gravies, melted butter, and greasy substances, he always had an acid stomach, which caused violent heartburn and soreness of the throat. With such a state of the stomach, irritating and inflaming the mucous membrane of the throat, and the organs of speech thrown into an unnatural and constrained position, it can be easily understood why the minister's throat, if not iron clad, should complain. And when the complaining is not heeded, but the same practice continued, it is not to be wondered at that the organs of speech refuse any longer, under such treatment, to act, and demand rest and silence.

Care in the position of the head in speaking and praying so that all the vocal powers may act freely, and care in diet so as to prevent an acrid poison inflaming the mucous membrane, will save ministers from the distinctive sore throat, and in most cases where it has commenced its undermining work will prove an effectual cure.—Dr. Patten.

COLD AIR.—Cold air is not injurious to breathe, even by the most delicate. If it causes irritation and coughing for a time, it is only because it seeks to find its way into diseased or overburdened lungs, to strengthen and heal so far as permitted. The injury received from going into cold air proceeds from having some part of the body insufficiently clothed to protect from cold and dampness, and not from inhaling the fresh cold air into the lungs.

COAL GAS.—Much sickness is produced in the winter by the bad effects of coal-gas. Economy in the use of fuel prompts to the closing of dampers, and thus the atmosphere of the room is filled with gas to a degree unnoticed, and unsuspected by the inmates. Health is more precious than coal, therefore ventilate freely.

☞ The most easily digested articles of food as yet known are sweet apples baked, cold raw cabbage sliced in vinegar, and boiled rice; the most indigestible are suet, boiled cabbage, and pork; the former require an hour, the latter five.

MAN must have occupation, or be miserable. Toil is the price of sleep and appetite—of health and enjoyment. The very necessity which overcomes our natural sloth is a blessing.

☞ Ventilate your bed rooms, air your beds and body clothes, and refrain from drinking liquors.

SOMETHING FOR GIRLS AND BOYS TO READ.

Late one Summer afternoon I stood at the door of a friend, talking with her, when her son, a lad of twelve years old, came to her and said, "Can I go and play with George?" "No, my son, you cannot, was the gentle, but firm reply of the mother. Her son turned angrily from her, and striding across the room, passed into an inner room, slamming the door violently. His mother said nothing, but looked very much grieved as tears started to her eyes.

This mother knew that it was a bad habit for boys and girls to be allowed to go out in the evening, to play or stand about the corners of the street. This son has since become a christian and a firm friend to all that is good. Had he been allowed to go the way he was then inclined he might now have been far away from the path of truth and right. His mother believed the word of God, that if she trained up her children in the way they should go they would not depart from it.

There are many reasons, dear young friends, why this habit, so common at the present day, should be avoided. Could you hear the history of young men and young women who have gone astray into evil paths, you would find that the first bad thing they did, the first profane word that came from their lips, the first impure thought they cherished, was suggested by these evening associates, and uttered while in their company. Emma was a girl that, when young, was allowed to go out in the evening where she chose. She soon found gay companions, who took her to places of amusement,—the theatre, the dancing-hall, the ball-room. She became wild, careless of her family connections, unwilling to be restrained, and soon was on the high road to ruin, where she will end, all who see her know.

This is the history of thousands of young men and women who fill our prisons and houses of correction.

The shadows of evening offer many temptations that daylight forbids. Many persons will do things "in the twilight, in the evening, in the black and dark night" that they would be ashamed or afraid to do in the daylight

You must not think that it is only very poor and low girls and boys that are drawn away into sin and ruined. It is not so. There are many poor and wretched ones who are tempted and commit crime; but a very large number of those who commence a life of sin are those who have pleasant homes, where they could have been happy with their family and friends. But they begun to like the company of some idle boy or girl, and then the invitation came, "Go with me to this place or that to-night," and before they were aware of it themselves they have been led astray and ruined.

I shall never forget a scene of grief that I witnessed many years ago in a family, when the sad news came to them that a son had committed a crime for which he had been condemned to prison for years. I could not portray in any adequate manner the grief of the father, mother, and sisters; the tears and heartfelt sobs that filled their house; for many days they could scarcely speak, or eat, or move, so heavy was their sorrow. Was this boy worse than other boys around him that he should do so evil a thing? No, but he had fallen into the company of one or two boys who were inclined to evil ways; and having disobeyed his parents by going out at night, he soon fell into crime. These boys persuaded him to go with them to a store and steal. There was little doubt that the two other boys were the thieves, but it was in the evening when the theft was committed, and he being found in such bad company had to suffer with them. Alas, what years of misery was passed by the family! He came from prison at last and returned to his family a better and a wiser son; but his wisdom had been bought at a great price. All through his life he felt the stings of conscience, and although he became a good man, life to him had lost all its joy.

Would you avoid these sorrows, obey your parents at all times. Avoid the company of those who are idle or careless of their words and actions, or would lead you to think lightly of the authority of your parents or the word of God. Only by doing right and being pure in our thoughts, as well as our words, can we be happy.—Home Guardian.

ADVICE IN RHYME.

If the rain is falling without,
Make the home-skies bright within;
If you happen to cut your finger,
Don't raise the house with your din;

But bind it with lint or cobweb,
'Twill staunch the blood in its flow;
Ah! many a wound and a buffet
You'll meet in life's battles, you know.

If you have a difficult lesson,
Don't shut up the book in disgust;
But say with a firm resolution,
I'll try, for learn I must.

Perseverance and patience work wonders,
And where there's a will there's a way;
One brick at a time, says the builder,
And Rome was not built in a day.

If your playmates e'er get in a passion,
Do not answer them roughly again;
For moments ungoverned of anger
Cause much after-sorrow and pain.

For harsh words cause the soft answer,
'Tis potent to turn wrath away;
Be kind to each other and helpful,
And sunshine will gleam o'er your path.

THE BETTER RULE.—An irreligious father being offended that his son embraced religion, remarked to him: "You should first have taken care to establish yourself in business before you made up your mind about religion." The young man pointedly replied: "Father, my Savior has advised me differently, for he said, 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God.'"

CHILDREN, when you rise every morning, learn a short passage of Scripture, and often refer to it during the day.

LISTENING!

"Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth."

When the world is busy round me,
And each wave of sound is stirred;
When the thronging crowd press by me,
Onward by strong impulse spurred,—
I am listening—
Listening for the Master's word,
Listening till his voice be heard.

When the heavy cloud of sorrow
Falls upon the darkened home,
'Mid the bitter cry of anguish,
Or the heart's unuttered moan,—
I am listening—
Listening for one voice well known;
For my Father's voice alone.

When conflicting thoughts assail me,
And strange doctrines reach my ear;
When the sheep are all bewildered,
And no trusty guide seems near—
I am listening,
Till the Shepherd's voice I hear—
Listening, till he appear.

When the voices of affection
Never more on earth will wake;
And the heart's deep, earnest yearning,
Silent keeps for their dear sake—
I am listening,
Listening till the Bridegroom speak,
Till his love the silence break.

When God's truth is placed before me,
With its holy words of cheer;
But in vain my finite reason
Strives to make its meaning clear—
I am listening,
Listening with patient ear,
Till the Spirit's voice I hear.

Listening ever, Jesus, keep us;
May we at thy feet abide;
Ne'er beguiled by earthly voices,
Always waiting at thy side—
Waiting—listening
For thy word, our faithful Guide;
Speak! and we are satisfied.

SLEEP: THE AWAKING.

BY O. R. FASSETT.

"As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness." Ps. 17: 15.

That which led the Psalmist to the utterance of the text, in his prayer to his God, was the contrasting of the present prosperity and hope of the men of this world with the future of the righteous. When wicked and worldly men seriously do the same, they are led to pray with Baalam the prophet, who "loved the wages of unrighteousness": "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."—Num. 23: 10. And yet this present world is so fascinating and alluring, and so enchanted are they with its riches, honors, and pleasures, that they are unwilling to make the sacrifice to attain "eternal life" and "the world to come," and like him finally die in the ranks of the ungodly and as the fool dieth.

David, with confident faith and triumphant hope, looks forward to "the resurrection of the just," and the rewards in store for the faithful at the appearing of the Redeemer and at the end of this world, and exclaims, "As for me, I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness." Let us consider—

I. From what condition he hoped and desired to be awakened.

II. In what the likeness of his Redeemer consists.

III. The satisfaction to be experienced.

I. From what condition he hoped, desired, or contemplated being awakened.

Negatively, I would remark,

1. It was not from a condition of natural sleep. Every one must see at a glance that it was not from the state of taking rest in natural sleep, that he expresses hope of an awakening. He was neither in this condition, nor was it in his contemplation. It is wholly unreasonable to suppose that he had any reference to such a sleep or an awakening therefrom.

2. It was not from a condition of spiritual sleep, or state of carnal security in sin to one of holiness, that he wished or hoped to be awaked. Such a state is represented in the Scriptures as a sleep. "Awake to righteousness and sin not."—1 Cor. 15: 34. "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee life."—Eph. 5: 14.

David was not, however, in this condition of sleep, or in a state of "death in trespasses and sins" (Eph. 2: 1), but in a very high state of spiritual enjoyment and life, having been "quickened," as may be seen from his prayer in the entire Psalm. Therefore he must refer to some other condition.

3. It was not from a condition of moral sleep or stupor in respect to a coming day of judgment, or righteous retributions and rewards. This, too, is called a state of sleep, and the church is exhorted to be awake to its approach. "And that knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep. . . The night is far spent, the day is at hand."—Rom. 13: 11, 12. "Let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober."—1 Thess. 5: 6, 7. But David at this time was fully and sensibly awake to the coming of such a day, as he says, "Arise, O Lord, disappoint him, cast him down; deliver my soul from the wicked, which is thy sword; from men which are thy hand, O Lord; from men of the world, which have their portion in this life. . . . As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness." It must, therefore, be another sleep altogether from which he desires and hopes to be awakened; hence, I remark,

Affirmatively,—It was from the condition of death, the sleep of death, the slumbers of the grave, that he has hopes of an awakening.

David anticipated the time, at no distant day, when he should be wrapped in slumbers profound in his sepulchre, and sleep the long, undisturbed sleep of death,

"Beneath death's silent cypress shades."

But he had hope, and he looked forward to the morning of the resurrection, when from his long, unbroken slumbers he should be awakened by the voice of his Redeemer, and have part in the "first resurrection," in which the wicked rich, the unbeliever, and the men of this world, have no part. "Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; and their beauty shall consume in the grave from their dwelling. But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave; for he shall receive me. Selah."—Ps. 49: 14, 15; Rev. 20. In proof of this I would state,

1. Death is likened to a condition of sleep in the Scriptures. "And the Lord said unto Moses, Behold, thou shalt sleep with thy fathers."—Deut. 31: 16. "For now shall I sleep in the dust."—Job 7: 21. "So David slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David."—1 Kings 2: 10. "David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption."—Acts 13: 36. "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; I go, that I may awake him out of sleep. . . . . . Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead."—John 11: 11, 14. "We shall not all sleep."—1 Cor. 15: 51. "I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep."—1 Thess. 4: 13.

However much, therefore, persons may disapprove the idea or ridicule the language, the term "sleep" is the scriptural term for the condition of the dead in view of an awakening at the judgment. Let the scoffer, be he professedly religious or otherwise, beware of the ridicule he makes of scriptural phraseology, or of scriptural doctrines therein implied or affirmed. God will not hold him guiltless who irreverently speaks of his word.

2. There is a likeness or resemblance to sleep in the condition in death.

Sleep is called "the emblem of death." And how often is the expression used by the living, when looking upon the corpse of the dead, "He looks," or "she looks as if asleep." "How peacefully they sleep." Our evening hymn, so familiar to all, brings to our mind the resemblance:

"The day is past and gone,
The evening shades appear;
O, may we all remember well,
The night of death draws near.
We lay our garments by,
Upon our beds to rest;
So death may soon disrobe us all
Of what we here possessed."

There is not only a resemblance in the appearance, but in the quiet, the rest, and unconsciousness of the condition. When persons are in a state of sound sleep, they have no knowledge of anything. They have no knowledge that they have ever lived, nor that they are asleep, much less that they are awake. They do not know when they are asleep how long they have been asleep. They have no knowledge of what is going on in the world, or among their kindred or friends. Not even in the house or room in which they are asleep. All to them, for the time being, is unknown. Dr. Durham says:

"Considered psychologically, I think sleep may be best defined to be a state in which volition, sensation and consciousness are suspended, but can be readily restored upon the application of some stimulus."

Again he says:—"Considered psychologically, sleep may be most correctly regarded as that particular state of cerebral inactivity which is essentially associated with rest, nutrition, and repair of the brain substance. Every part of the body, the office of which is vital, not simply mechanical, passes through alternate periods of rest and action. The heart pauses after each pulsation, and every breath we draw is followed by a period during which the nerves and muscles of inspiration repose before being again aroused. The heart acts and rests seventy or eighty or more times in a minute. During rest the tissue is nourished and waste is repaired. So also must the brain, the organ of sense, as a vital organ have rest. During sleep, the brain is in comparatively a bloodless condition; and the blood in the encephalic vessels is not only diminished in quantity, but moves with diminished rapidity. A woman who had lost part of her skull, the brain and part of its membranes lying bare,—when she was in deep and sound sleep, the brain lay in the skull almost motionless; when she was dreaming it became elevated; and when in her dreams of excitement it protruded through the aperture of the skull."

So in death, "the dead know not anything." Eccl. 9: 5. They have no knowledge that they have ever lived, nor that they are dead, much less that they are alive when dead! They do not know where they lie in death, nor how long they have been dead. They have no knowledge of what is going on in the world, or among their own kindred or friends. Job. 14: 20, 21. Nor have they knowledge of anything "under the sun." Eccl. 9: 6. And certainly not above it, for "one event" is "unto all." "They live, and after that they go to the dead."

Their "volition, sensation and consciousness are suspended." "Their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished. . . . There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, in the grave."—Eccl. 9: 6, 10. They are in a "state of cerebral inactivity," and at "rest." The "life" of "the soul" is gone, which is "the blood"; and the brain is in a "bloodless condition," and is unable to act or think. The "application of stimulus" may however restore the dead to a state of "consciousness," and that is "the Spirit of God." Rom. 8: 11. "The last Adam was made a quickening spirit."—1 Cor. 15: 45. "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—Col. 3: 4. Thus the semblance is complete between sleep considered psychologically, and the condition in death.

After discoursing upon the subject of "the kingdom of God," and having no reference to the state of the dead in any of my remarks, a Cong. clergyman arose and desired to ask a question. The privilege being granted, he inquired before the audience:

"What is your opinion respecting the condition of the dead?"

I replied, The Scriptures speak of them as being "asleep." And I quoted several texts as proof. He remarked:

"It is true that sleep is considered the emblem of death; but what is your opinion? Are they conscious or unconscious?"

I inquired of him, Are you conscious, or unconscious, when you are asleep? He, without thought as to the result of his answer, immediately replied:

"Unconscious, I suppose."

To which I remarked, So I consider the condition of the dead.

At this he became excited at the advantage he had given me, and endeavored to warn the people against hearing me, as a dangerous teacher. The audience called him to order, and made request that it would be more to their advantage if he would ask the speaker questions and let him answer them, allowing them to act as judges as to what was truth.

Shakespeare speaks of death, and compares the condition to one of sleep; yet has fears that the sleep of death is not "sound sleep," and that one in death may be disturbed with bad dreams.

"To be, or not to be? That's the question.
To die; to sleep;
No more; and by a sleep to say we end
The heart ache, and the thousand natural shocks
That flesh is heir to; 'tis a consummation
Devoutly to be wished. To die; to sleep;
To sleep! perchance to dream. Ay, there's the rub!
For in that sleep of death what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil."

Now had Shakespeare had a knowledge of the revelation that the Scriptures afford upon this condition of the intermediate state, he need have had no fears as to horrifying dreams during the night of death. The sleep is so profound that they dream not at all; and that state which he says "'Tis a consummation devoutly to be wished," is actually that appointed by our heavenly Father as a condition of the sleeping dead until the day of judgment. And "the goodness of the Lord" in this respect, as in a thousand other instances relating to man's future destiny, should "lead men to repentance." The righteous receive no loss, and can be rewarded "together" at one and the same moment; while the sad case of the wicked is not aggravated with the appalling thought of suffering years, and generations, and ages, before the final judgment, if so unfortunate as to fall victims to death so long before that great day shall decide their destiny and consign them to "the second death." The wisdom, too, as well as the goodness of the Lord, is seen in this.

This is just as it should be; and the human understanding and judgment, unperverted by a corrupt theology and heathen tradition, can apprehend and embrace the fact with satisfaction. Hence sings Dr. Young:

"Tired nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep!
Yet that were vain if dreams infest the grave."

And the christian may sing with rapture and delight amid the comforts of hope:

"I would not live alway; no, welcome the tomb!
Since Jesus hath lain there, I dread not its gloom;
There sweet be my rest till he bid me arise,
To hail him in triumph descending the skies."

(To be continued.)

For the World's Crisis.

HEART PURITY.

Too much cannot be said or written upon this all-important point of christian attainment. That it is a possible attainment has long ceased to be a question with those who believing the word of God, that the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth from all sin, and that there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we can be saved, have given themselves up to him, body and spirit, person and property, powers and faculties, to live henceforth the life that now is by faith on the Son of God, that Christ may be all and in all. Now they walk even as he walked. They do the will of God from the heart. They are not of the world. They defile not their garments, and of such Jesus has said, "They shall walk with me in white, for they are worthy."

But how sad the sight so often presented to observing eyes, of those who for ten, or twenty, or even forty years, have professed before the world to be the disciples of Christ; the meek, the gentle, the kind, patient, forgiving Christ; yet who live day after day, and year after year, in open enmity with some one, brother, or kindred, or man of the world, and who allow hatred and variance, or even harshness and unkindness, in the family or out of it, to so obscure all manifestation of the christian love which they profess, as to make them but stumbling blocks to both saints and sinners. To such it may well be said, "Ye have taken away the key of knowledge: ye entered not in yourselves, and them that were entering in ye hindered."

Others there are who love the world and the things of the world; who follow the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, and are seeking to obtain more of the vain things that perish than they were a few years ago. They have put their hand to the plough, and are looking back; they sigh for the flesh-pots of Egypt. They have wandered from their first love. They have become weary in well-doing.

Alas! alas! none of these are pure in heart, and the Lord is coming; the judgment is near. What shall we say to arouse them from the sleep which must soon prove fatal? The words of Jesus, "Be zealous, therefore, and repent." If we would see God, we must be pure in heart.

CARRIE W. BIXBY.

I WOULD.

I would that I might take
My share of pain
Without a murmur, as this rose that bowed
Beneath the passing of a storm-fringed cloud,
That did but shake
Her dewy fragrance o'er the leaf-strewn plain.

I would that I might know
What souls could bear;
That I might school my heart to love or loss,
The quiet bearing of a crown or cross,
That I might go
Through life with less of life's consuming care.

I would that I could learn
My lesson true;
That every day some knowledge I might gain,
To help me toward the goal I would attain—
What good to take, from what delights to turn,
I would I knew.

So help me, Savior, Friend!
That in thy strength
I may henceforth my happiness secure;
Increase my faith, and teach me to endure,
That thus, at length,
Peace may go with me to my journey's end.

For the World's Crisis.

THE SECOND ADVENT NIGH.

The rough-shod riding of Protestant royalty over the champion and mightiest bulwarks of the papacy, has thrilled the heart and roused the faith of millions to see that God is about to judge the nations. My faith cries, "Gird thy sword, O most mighty, and ride prosperously," till all thy foes become thy footstool. Amen.

Human thought and theory is earthly; while God's thought and way is all the way to heaven—higher. Isa. 55: 9. My head and heart and hand yield right up to be led up this divinely exalted "highway," to the consummation of his loving will to man and earth. "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven."

The prophetic picture seems filled quite up to the "sign in heaven,"—the seventh trump, the opening of the heavenly tabernacle, the day dawn,—the coming of Christ the second time unto salvation, and the "great and notable day of the Lord." Amen. All else is secondary and subordinate to the second coming. "Come, Lord Jesus . . . . quickly"!—Amen.

J. B. COOK.

[From our Corresponding Editor.]

ARGUMENTS FOR OBSERVING THE SEVENTH-DAY SABBATH.

An examination of some of the main arguments in favor of seventh-day Sabbath keeping, may not be out of place, nor void of interest to a portion of our readers.

I. It is claimed that God instituted the seventh-day Sabbath at creation, and that consequently its observance commenced then.

We do not regard this claim reliable, for the statement made by Moses, as recorded in Gen. 2: 2, 3, and context, does not even hint such a thing, as will be evident to all who will refresh their memory with the fact that this record was not written at the creation, but more than two thousand years subsequently, and after the Sabbath had been given to Israel in the wilderness. The record simply informs us what God accomplished on six successive days, and then affirms, "He rested on the seventh day"; and then Moses makes reference to the Sabbath institution, which had just been given to the Israelites, in the wilderness of Sin, and tells us why God gave Israel the seventh day as a Sabbath: "And God blessed the seventh day [in the wilderness of Sin—not in Eden] and sanctified it; because that in it he had rested," over two thousand years before Moses wrote this record. This record does not tell when God "blessed" and "sanctified" the "seventh day," but it does inform us that it was prior to the time that Moses wrote, and also after God "had" rested—that is, some time after God "had" rested, and before Moses wrote this record, God set apart the "seventh day" as a rest-day for Israel. This was done in the wilderness of Sin (Ex. 16), not in Eden. After six days' work in gathering "manna," the "seventh" was designated as a rest-day for Israel, and styled the "Sabbath"—this term being there used for the first time in the Bible.

II. It is claimed that "the Sabbath was made for man" in a general sense.

That it was made for more than one man is evident, but that it was made for every man is an unproved and unprovable assumption. When we read that "man did eat angels' food" (Ps. 78: 25), are we to conclude, because it cannot be restricted to one man, that therefore it must include all men? It was "made for man," but when? And for what class of men? Let the Bible answer. "Moreover thou leddest them in the day by a cloudy pillar; and in the night by a pillar of fire, . . . and madest known unto them thy holy Sabbath . . . . by the hand of Moses."—Neh. 9: 12-14. Hence it is a fixed fact that the Sabbath was unknown to Israel prior to the time of Moses; and this agrees with the fact that Sabbath-keeping is not even once mentioned in the Bible till we reach Ex. 16, where, for the first time, God communicates to Israel a knowledge of the Sabbath institution, through Moses. To make known a certain thing is not to repeat something already known, but to impart new information. Moses likewise tells us how long the Sabbath was to be kept. "The children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant."—Ex. 31: 16. The same is said of burning incense (Ex. 30: 8); of the Jewish priesthood (Ex. 40: 15); of the blowing of trumpets (Num. 10: 8); of feasts and offerings (Lev. 23), etc. If this clear statement does not limit the observance of the seventh-day Sabbath to the Jewish dispensation, then the feasts, the offerings, the burning of incense, the blowing of trumpets, and the Jewish priesthood, are not thus limited; as the same phraseology is used in the one case as in the other.

III. It is claimed that when the observance of "the commandments" is enjoined in the New Testament, allusion is made to the ten, thus enforcing the observance of the seventh-day Sabbath.

Neither Christ nor his apostles ever used that phrase in this sense, but simply as including all the requirements enjoined upon christians in the gospel age, including some features of both departments of the law, and some requirements never included in the law arrangement; hence, Paul could say, "The things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord" (1 Cor. 14: 37); and also, "Ye know what commandments we gave unto you by the Lord Jesus."—1 Thess. 4: 2. When Christ said to an inquirer, "Keep the commandments," the question was asked—"Which?" that is, which commandments? Jesus proceeded to quote such as he had doubtless been remiss in observing; but in quoting from what he recognizes as "the commandments," instead of confining himself to the tables of stone, he quotes also from that part of the law never written on stone (Matt. 19: 18); thus showing that the phrase "the commandments" is not synonymous with the phrase "ten commandments"; hence, every time this phrase is used in that sense, for the sake of enjoining the seventh day upon christians, it is used in a perverted sense.

The commandments under the law differ much from the commandments under the gospel, though the commandments under the gospel include many items that once belonged to the law; but in obeying the requirement, "Keep the commandments," let us remember Paul's statement, "The things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord."

IV. It is claimed that Paul recognizes two laws, calling one "carnal," and the other "spiritual"; the carnal law ending at the cross, and the spiritual law, or decalogue, being still in force, enjoining the observance of the seventh day.

Paul never mentions "two laws," but treats of the law—not one of the laws; nor does he ever style the law "carnal" in the sense of sensual, but merely in the sense of being temporal; as in several other instances where he uses the same term, as for example: "Their duty also to minister unto them in carnal things" (Rom. 15: 27),—that is, temporal things. Again: "If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?" (1 Cor. 9: 11); that is, temporal things. So the law, though spiritual, was temporal, and was simply "our schoolmaster," which has served his time out, and "we are no longer under the "schoolmaster," though some of the old lessons are incorporated in the new arrangement, minus the seventh-day Sabbath and several other items, such as new-moon days, sacrifices, etc. The gospel enjoins and omits some items both from the book of the law and the tables of stone.

V. It is claimed that the decalogue, which embodies the seventh-day Sabbath, is an endless code, seeing God wrote it on stone. This is not true, for it contains internal proof of the facts (1) that it was a Jewish document, or made for them; (2) that it was not designed as a perpetual law, seeing it contains so much that would not be congenial to the perfect age; and (3) it contains so much that is not in harmony with the gospel age.

Moses has given two records of the contents of the tables of stone. The fuller record contains nothing more than the truth; the other contains the truth so far as it goes, just as in the case of the different records of the inscription upon the Savior's cross. One record says, "The King of the Jews"; another, "This is Jesus, the King of the Jews"; another, "This is the King of the Jews"; still another, "Jesus of Nazareth the King of the Jews." Allowing that none of the records contained more than the truth, and all were true so far as they went, the entire inscription would be, "This is Jesus of Nazareth the King of the Jews."

Let us notice several items in this document which show that it was arranged for the Jews, and for the Jewish age, and that it is not adapted to the Christian dispensation, nor to the future perfect and sinless age, into which age it must be carried provided it is an unending document. Let us now look at the

FIRST COMMANDMENT.

"I am the Lord thy God that brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. Thou shalt have no other gods before me."

This is what God spake; and just what he spake he also wrote in the tables of stone; for Moses says, "These words the Lord spake, ... and he wrote them in two tables of stone." Deut. 5: 22. But it is not true of Gentile christians, in any sense, that God brought them out of the land of Egypt; while it is true of the Jews as a race in consideration of their being the posterity of those who came out of Egypt; hence, hundreds of years after the exode, God said to Israel, through David, "I am the Lord thy God which brought thee out of the land of Egypt."—Ps. 81: 10. But Gentiles were not thus delivered from Egypt; hence, the tables of stone were written expressly for the Jewish race—not for Gentiles. This fact cannot be set aside, and it stamps the Decalogue as a Jewish document, for the Jewish age.

SECOND COMMANDMENT.

Connected with this commandment we find a feature that will not accord with the new covenant, nor with the future sinless age, viz: "I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and the fourth generation of them that hate me." This principle prevailed under the old covenant, and was recognized in the following question: "Who did sin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind?" (John 9: 2); and, also, in the saying of the Jews, "His blood be on us, and on our children." This principle was in force under the old covenant. But Ezekiel prophesied of a time to come when they should "not have occasion any more to use this proverb," saying, "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge," because then "the son shall not bear the iniquity of the father."—Ezek. 18: 2, 20. And Jeremiah makes the same prediction, and also tells when it should come into force: "In those days they shall say no more, The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge; but every one shall die for his own iniquity [not for his father's]; every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge. [Why? and, When?] Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a covenant"—one that will leave out this principle of "visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children," which Jeremiah insists should continue to prevail till "those days" when the "new covenant" should be introduced. Jer. 31: 29-31.

This principle ran parallel with the old covenant, being written on the tables of stone, but cannot come into the new covenant scheme; hence the tables of stone cannot continue in force, unchanged, in this age. All can see this point; hence the claim that the decalogue is an endless document, and therefore must bring the observance of the seventh-day Sabbath into this age, falls to the dust.

To escape the force of this argument, we are sometimes told, the visiting of the iniquities of the fathers upon the children may signify hereditary diseases entailed upon posterity: but this is a sickly evasion, for (1) those diseases are not limited to "the third and fourth generation", but often go much further; (2) they are just as really visited upon those who love God as those who hate him: "to the third and fourth generation of them that hate me"; these befall the righteous as really as the wicked; and (3) in many cases hereditary diseases are not even the result of iniquities, and when they are, they as really visit saints as sinners.

FOURTH COMMANDMENT.

Here (in the second record) we find a renewal of the statement that the people to whom this document was addressed were the people who had been "brought out of the land of Egypt," stamping the decalogue a second time as a Jewish code, not arranged for Gentiles. To say that this part is simply a statement of Moses, and not a part of what God spake and wrote, is to contradict Moses, who affirms, "These words the Lord spake, ... and he wrote them." In this section of the document, too, we find regulations concerning the "man-servant and maid-servant," which must run into the eternal age, provided the decalogue is an endless code; and if not endless, it might have terminated at the cross, with the balance of the law; and the gospel could then enjoin such principles as were in harmony with the new plan, leaving the balance in the shade. Are there to be servants in the world to come—either hired-servants or bond-servants?

FIFTH COMMANDMENT.

This commandment designates the very land for which this code was arranged, viz: "the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee," the land of Canaan, in which God had promised to make them a great nation, at the close of their four hundred years' bondage.

SIXTH COMMANDMENT.

If the decalogue is an endless code—in the immortal state, where none can be killed, the command will stand out in its original form: "Thou shalt not kill"—that is, thou shalt not do what you cannot do if you try. Would God do so silly a thing in the kingdom as to forbid an impossibility? Should an earthly monarch pass this law, "Thou shalt not emigrate to the moon,"—a thing impossible—he would make himself a laughing stock, and men would think him either joking, or insane. And will men place Jehovah in just such a dilemma, by carrying the decalogue into the kingdom of God, where all are immortal, and there enjoin the commandment, "Thou shalt not kill?" The moment it is admitted that the decalogue is not an endless code, it follows that it might have ended at the cross, and left the seventh-day Sabbath, and other nedless appendages, not in harmony with the gospel plan, on the other side of the cross. Where a law goes there it carries its penalty; and if eternal death is the penalty for breaking the decalogue, then to carry the decalogue into the kingdom of God, would be to carry the death penalty there too—threatening death to a deathless race!

SEVENTH COMMANDMENT.

"Thou shalt not commit adultery."

If the decalogue is an endless code, this commandment will extend into the kingdom, where all are "equal unto the angels," and eternally free from all sensual propensities. How would it sound to extend this prohibtion to the angels, who now occupy the same ground that we shall then?

EIGHTH COMMANDMENT.

"Thou shalt not steal."

In the world to come, where there will be no separate interests, such a requirement would be superfluous. Yet the claim that the decalogue is an endless code, which is made for the sake of getting the seventh day down this side of the cross, carries this commandment into the coming kingdom.

NINTH COMMANDMENT.

"Thou shalt not bear false witness."

In a realm where even a disposition to falsify has no existence, such a requirement would be needless; but it goes there if the decalogue is an endless code; if it is not an endless code, it might have ended at the cross, with the rest of the law.

TENTH COMMANDMENT.

"Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife"—"man-servant"—"maid-servant"—"his ox, nor his ass."

In a world where "they neither marry nor are given in marriage," where one class will not have to be servants to another class, either as bond-servants, or hired-servants, this would sound strange enough; yet if the decalogue is an endless arrangement, all this matter is crowded into the kingdom. The terms "man-servant" and "maid-servant" we have found engraven on the tables of stone three times each; and these terms in the original indicate bond-servants; thus while the decalogue is perpetuated, this system is countenanced, which was allowed under the Mosaic economy, but is averse to the gospel scheme, and also antagonistic to the economy of the coming kingdom.

Thus, in looking over the decalogue, we have found no less than ten reasons for concluding that it must, at some time, have an end, to give place to a more glorious arrangement; and this agrees with Paul, that though "the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious," the "ministration of the spirit," or the "ministration of righteousness," "exceeds in glory," even "by reason of the glory that excelleth." 2 Cor. 3: 7-10.

VI. Did not Christ affirm that he had not come to destroy the law?

Answer.—True, he did not come to destroy the law in the sense of breaking it; for he strictly respected even the ceremonial department of the law; so much so that after he had cleansed the leprous man, he said to him, "Go show thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing, according as Moses commanded" (Luke 5: 14); and again he said, "The scribes and Pharisees sit in Moses' seat: all therefore whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do." Matt. 23: 2, 3. So Christ did not trample on any part of the law, but respected it all; not a jot or tittle of it could pass "till all be fulfilled," and he came to fulfill it—he came to release us from the "schoolmaster," for "the law was our schoolmaster" till we reached Christ on the cross: now "we are married to another." "Till heaven and earth pass," or, as Luke records it, "It is easier for heaven and earth to pass," than for one jot or tittle to pass from the law" till it had served its end; and till then every item was to be observed, even to the offering of sacrifices.

VII. Would it not look rather ridiculous to abolish nine good commandments to get rid of one bad one, and then re-enforce the nine?

Answer. Would it not be equally as ridiculous to abolish the "law" containing these "great commandments" which were "written in the law" (Luke 10: 26,) viz: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God," and, "Love thy neighbor as thyself;" and then re-enforce these once abolished precepts? for all admit that they are now in force, and they were once "written in the law"—not on the tables of stone—and it is admitted that the law ended at the cross, except the law of ten commandments.

Tell me on what principle these "great commandments" are now enjoined, and you will tell in the same breath on what principle the nine are enjoined; and the process of ending one code at the cross, and subsequently enjoining a part of it, is no more ridiculous in the first case than in the other.

Other points of less interest we will pass for the present.

For the World's Crisis.

THE LORD IS COMING!

Events are following each other in rapid succession, closing up the history of this our world; and it is time all were awake to their responsibility.

It is evident that Russia is preparing for her descent upon Turkey, to drive the "false prophet" out of Europe into the Holy Land, when he is to "come to his end," "and none shall help him." Then "Michael shall stand up [one like God] the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that some time; and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever."

We believe we are within three years of the fulfillment of this prophecy and the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, when this world will "reel to and fro, like a drunkard, and be removed like a cottage." Let us have our lamps well trimmed and burning. Let us be about our Master's work, with all fidelity and faithfulness, the few closing moments that remain. Amen.

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

WOMEN should be educated to be self-supporting, and educate their daughters to be. The young man or woman taught from a child self-reliance, brings out a character worthy a name in society; such are the back bone of our country to-day. The votaries of fashion brought up in luxury and wealth, lack strength of character that is needed in every walk of life. Would you have your sons and daughters develop characters of virtue, morality and religion, then educate them in industry, economy, and religion of the Bible.—Woman and her Work.

— If any speak ill of thee, flee home to thy own conscience, and examine thy heart; if thou be guilty, it is a just correction; if not guilty, it is a fair instruction; make use of both, so shalt thou distil honey out of gall, and out of an open enemy create a secret friend.

LIBERAL OFFERS.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

We are anxious to have our paper reach several thousand new readers the coming year, and become a blessing to them. It is the best means we have of sowing the seed of the gospel of the kingdom in some hearts, and we should all awake, and do whatever we can to have its warnings of the coming judgment reach as many new readers as possible.

Some of our preachers have done nobly, and others would gladly help on the good cause, if they could receive aid for their families while they spend their time for the paper. For the benefit of such, the A. C. P. Society, at a recent meeting, by vote authorized the Agent to pay ten per cent to preachers on all collections for the Crisis and Young Pilgrim; and it is hoped they will take hold of the work in earnest, and have great success. Those who understand the expense of publishing a paper, know that it would cost no more to set up the type for twelve or fifteen thousand copies, than it does for a less number; hence, after our regular issue of about nine thousand copies is run off, we could print several thousand more at the cost only of press work and paper. It has, therefore, been concluded by the Editorial Committee and Business Agent, to whom the Society referred this subject, to make the following liberal offers to new subscribers, to induce them to form clubs, and thus make success easy to all who put forth efforts to obtain new subscribers.

TRIAL OFFER.

We will send the World's Crisis three months on trial, to new subscribers, for fifty cents. We ask our friends to obtain yearly subscriptions, if possible; but where subscribers can be obtained for only three months, please visit them again, and, if possible, get them to renew before their paper is stopped at the end of three months.

To aid in obtaining new subscribers for 1871, we make the following offer of nearly

Three Months Free.

We will send the Crisis—for the balance of this year—free to all new subscribers for 1871, sent in before Jan. 1st.

Now is the time to subscribe, and put forth energetic efforts to obtain new subscribers.

CLUBBING WITH OTHER PAPERS.

As many persons take several papers, and could be induced to take the Crisis, if they could get two papers at club rates, we have accepted offers to club other papers with the Crisis, which will enable our friends to obtain subscribers where it would otherwise be impossible to introduce our paper.

If any of our regular subscribers wish any of the papers on the list at club rates, they can get new subscribers for the Crisis, as it is not necessary that both papers should be sent to the same address.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS THREE OR SIX MONTHS FREE.

We will send the World's Crisis six months, and the Phrenological Journal and Packard's Monthly (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or the World's Crisis three months, with the Rural New Yorker (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or, with the New York Weekly Tribune (price $2.00) one year for $2.00; or with the Bee-Keeper's Journal and National Agriculturist (price $1.00) one year for $1.00.

WHAT WILL THE POPE DO?

It is a question now of much interest in political circles, What will the Pope do, now his temporal power is gone? Of course no one can give a positive answer to the question, but must wait for the solution of the question by the logic of events. The Italians hardly know how to behave in their great joy over the fall of the temporal power of the Pope. They feel as did the slaves at the South when their shackles of bondage were broken. A correspondent of the Chicago Times, writing from Rome, Sept. 29th, says:

"One thing is certain, the country will sanction no terms of settlement that do not involve the death and burial of the pope's temporal power."

The Pope has now no throne at his command, neither is there a power on earth that can help him. His temporal power "is fallen." The world now feels that he is welcome to his infallibility and its results. Truly, the mene tekel is already written for him, and his perdition cannot be far in the future.

The earthquake of events during the past few months has been so overwhelming, that we can hardly realize what has taken place. One shock is scarcely over, before another rocks the political world, and revolution is revolutionized, while all stand aghast at the sight, wondering what is coming next; when soon the muttering thunder proclaims another terrible tempest rapidly approaching, that may eclipse all in the past. Thus we may expect events to continue till the grandest one of all—the coming of the Son of man—opens to the astonished vision of the whole world. Then the petty affairs that now engross the attention of the masses of the people will be seen in their true light. Then one approving smile of Jesus will outweigh them all. Let us be ready for the sublime event.

AFFAIRS IN EUROPE.

There is no improvement in the political aspect of Europe. The Prussians have taken Strusbourg, and are making great preparations for the siege of Paris, which bids fair to be continued some months, unless the city surrenders. Thus far, all efforts to make peace have failed. The Prussians demand more than the French are willing to give. We believe Paris will be obliged to surrender; and then we expect Napoleon will take the throne of France again.

The Italians are very joyful over the possession of Rome. After being in ecclesiastical bondage for many hundred years, it is once more free. Now the Pope has no throne on the earth. He is without a kingdom. He has spoken his "great words," like Nebuchadnezzar, when he said, "Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom, by the might of my power?" The modern Belshazzar has had his great feast, the hand-writing is upon the wall, and soon the rightful heir to David's throne will return to take possession, and reign as Prince of peace: "The end of all things is at hand."

"O hail, happy day."

Let every christian see that his lamp is now trimmed and burning. It is perilous to be in a moral sleep at the present time.

We would call attention to the very "Liberal Offers" in another column. Here is given an unusual opportunity for scattering the light, and a chance for all to be zealous for the Lord and his truth.

By mistake, the "Crisis" last week was dated November 5th. It should have been October 5th.

WEST POINT DISCUSSION.

Our discussion at West Point, Ill., was one of special interest, and happy results in favor of the truth of the Lord. West Point is about two hundred and forty miles west of Chicago, and some fourteen miles west from the Mississippi river. The discussion was in a large tent, and continued four days. It began Tuesday, A. M., and closed Friday afternoon. We had two sessions a day, of two hours each, divided into twenty minute speeches. There was a very large gathering to listen to the debate. The best of order prevailed. Although the traveling was bad, many came by private conveyance from five to twenty-five miles. It was estimated that about one hundred and fifty teams were present.

Mr. Sweeney, our opponent, is a noted debater, and a preacher to a Christian church in Chicago, holding the views of Alexander Campbell, who left the Baptist church on account of his peculiar views on baptism, which were, that sins are not remitted till the believer is baptized, when baptism is possible. He also held, as do his followers, that the Holy Spirit does not now act independently of the Scriptures in the conversion of sinners. They have no written creeds, but take the New Testament for their guide. Their government is Congregational, and they have the sacrament every Sabbath. This denomination is quite numerous in the West. Mr. Sweeney is one of their most prominent preachers. He is an earnest and ready speaker, and would be called a shrewd man in debate, using all possible means to defeat his opponent.

We discussed the following proposition the first two days:—"There is in man a conscious entity, sometimes called a spirit, that remains conscious after his death." The usual Scriptures were presented as proof of the proposition. We inquired if his assumed spirit entity was conscious before it entered man, and found he had no recollection of himself before he lived in this world. We then inquired if his spirit entity would know any more after it left the body than it did before it came into it? It is claimed that the spirit in man is an "immaterial substance," and yet exists as an intelligent personality. We presented the following proposition for the consideration of our opponent: "Nothing immaterial can exist independent of a material organism." To illustrate: pain, joy, love, hatred, thought, desire, sound, life, attraction, animal magnetism, music, caloric, etc., are immaterial, and never exist independent of a material organism. Hence, if man has an immaterial conscious entity, it can not exist any longer than his material organism, from which it emanates. Our opponent claimed that his spirit entity was the moral agent, and consequently the one to be rewarded and punished. He admitted there is but one moral agent in man. We then showed that the Scriptures most plainly teach that the man formed "of the dust of the ground," who had a material organism, was the moral, accountable, personal, conscious entity; who was the one commanded; the one who sinned, died, is now dead in the sea, death and hades; and is to be raised from the dead, be judged, rewarded, or punished, as is most clearly shown by the following Scriptures: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground." Gen. 2: 7. "And the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden; and there he put the man whom he had formed." Gen. 2: 8. "And the Lord God took the man and put him into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it. And the Lord God commanded the man." Gen. 2: 15, 16.

No language could be plainer, than that before us, to show that the man formed of the dust of the ground was the one he put into the garden, and the one whom he commanded. But the one he "commanded" was the moral agent; hence it follows, that unless our opponent's "conscious entity" was "formed" "of the dust of the ground," it was not the one commanded. It would be absurd to suppose "the Lord God commanded" an unconscious entity; for such an one could not be a moral agent. He did command the man whom he "formed" of the dust of the ground; therefore it follows that there is not "in man" another "conscious entity," that may exist distinct from the being who was formed of the dust of the ground, for in that case every man would be a double moral agent.

The Lord named the man Adam, whom he had formed of the dust of the ground; and in Gen. 3: 17-19, we read: "And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it; cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Here we find that the one he "commanded," was the one who did the eating, the sinning, and the one who returned "unto the ground," from whence he was "taken," or "formed."

Still further, we read: "And the Lord God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us to know good and evil; and now lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever; therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken. So he drove out the man." Gen. 3: 22-24. Why did he drive out the man whom he had "formed" and "commanded," and who had disobeyed and sinned, and was therefore the moral agent? "Lest he . . . take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever." Then is it not certain, that the man whom he formed, the accountable "conscious entity," the one he "commanded," was not a spirit IN man, that will live on when the man is dead? If there is such a spirit, it is neither a moral nor an intelligent agent; therefore will neither be rewarded or punished.

In Gen. 5: 5, we read: "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years, and he died." This is a simple historic account, so plain that we can see no chance for misunderstanding its meaning. The identical "conscious entity," formed of the dust of the ground, whom God called man (not a spirit), whom he commanded, and who sinned, was the one who died at the age of nine hundred and thirty years.

The Scriptures show in the clearest possible manner that the real man, the moral agent, the "conscious entity," is dead between death and the resurrection. In Rev. 20: 13, we find the following: "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged, every MAN according to their works." As our opponent admitted that man is not a double moral agent; or has not two moral natures; and we have one such dead in the sea, and the graves upon the land; then there cannot be another moral entity, or being, praising God, or blaspheming him in a "spirit land," before the one who is to be judged is raised from the dead. The dead one who shall come out of the sea, death and hades, is the man whom God formed "of the dust of the ground," the one whom he "commanded," and the one who is to be judged according to his works; hence the first proposition of our opponent does not harmonize with the Bible, and therefore cannot be true.

CHRIST'S "REIGN OVER THE HOUSE OF JACOB."

Gabriel affirmed that Christ should "reign over the house of Jacob forever," and that of his kingdom there should be "no end." On the strength of this affirmation, some have argued that mortal Israelites, or the house of Jacob in a mortal state, are to be subjects of Messiah's coming kingdom. That Christ is to "reign over the house of Jacob," we fully believe, for the angel made just that affirmation; but that he is to reign over them in their mortal state, we do not believe, for (1) the angel did not say so; (2,) this claim is only an assumption not susceptible of proof; (3,) this reign, if over mortal Jacob, would involve an eternal propagation of the species, and an endless state of death, as it will have "no end;" and having a reign over mortals having "no end" must be attended by death, for mortals cannot live always, and being thus diminished by death, it would soon terminate this reign by exterminating the last subject, unless the kingdom should be replenished by a continual propagation of the species.

It will avail nothing to say that at some future time the scene may change, and all become immortal, and from thence onward this reign continue, not over mortal but immortal subjects, for that very suggestion is an admission that immortal Israelites can be recognized as "the house of Jacob" at some future time; and if that is so, why not be so recognized at the beginning of this reign, as well as centuries later, and thus obviate the difficulty of having death an indispensable ingredient of the Messiah's kingdom?

If the expression "house of Jacob" can have no other meaning than mortal Israelites, at the beginning of this reign, then it can have no other meaning at a later period, and thus prove "no end" to a mortal kingdom, making death perpetual, contrary to the Revelator's description of a time to come when "there shall be no more death;" but if the expression "house of Jacob" can ever signify immortal Israelites, it can mean that at the commencement of this reign just as well as at a later date, thus leaving out death and its attendant evils entirely. IS HEAVEN A PRISON?

In our efforts to show the absurdity of giving the saints an entrance into heaven before being judged, we are sometimes informed that men are sent to prison before having their trial, whether they are finally acquitted or condemned. This is true; but the same prison is the receptacle for the guilty and the innocent. And if we carry out the comparison, after claiming that the saints enter heaven before being judged, on the principle of going to prison, then heaven must be alike the prison of saints and sinners till the judgment arrives. That would make heaven a foul realm. Besides, it would make the prison and the place of final enjoyment the same, if heaven is finally to be the home of the saints.

But the fact is, going to prison is one stage in legal proceedings, preceding final investigation. God's investigation goes on as fast as human life passes, and is closed up with the end of our pilgrimage, and is represented as being registered in the books of judgment on the character of the contents of which will he based the decision of the Divine Judge, when the books shall be opened; for our Judge will not need to call and examine witnesses then—all is registered in the book of sacred memory; decision and execution only come after the opening of the books.

Then, if imprisonment precedes the final investigation, and if Jehovah's investigation is closed up and registered in the books, at the close of temporal life, there can be no imprisonment, in the Divine economy, between death and the resurrection. There is, however, a dark prison for saint and sinner in "the land of the enemy," which owes its origin to the devil, and this prison is to "deliver up the dead" at the judgment—not living personalities, but "dead" ones. Certainly heaven contains no "dead" ones that need to be delivered up in order to be judged.

Death is the only constable that hales men and women to prison at death, and it indiscriminately leads saints and sinners to the same prison; and though it is permitted to lock them up there for a season, Jesus has the keys of that prison in his own possession, and will bring the captives out to hear the decision of the Divine Judge, and to have it carried into effect. A NEW PROP TO AN OLD THEORY.

It is amusing to see how many strange arguments are resorted to for the purpose of proving the dual nature of men. The constant parade of new arguments betrays a consciousness of the weakness of the ordinary arguments. One of the new arguments claims that God made two men at creation—one a spirit-man, and the other an earth-man—the creation of one being recorded in Gen. 1, and the other in Gen. 2, overlooking the fact that the latter record is a recapitulation of the former.

But let us look at the result of the claim that a spirit-man is spoken of in the first chapter, and a dust-man mentioned in the second chapter, as a sheath for the spirit-man. The first records read: "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: . . . So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. . . . And God said unto them, Be faithful, and multiply" (Gen. 1: 26-28.) Did God command a spirit-man to "multiply"? Did God create "male and female" ghosts? If God really created a race of spirit personalities, of the "male and female" genders, and commanded them to "multiply," even before creating a dust-man, there is no escaping the conclusion that these spirit personalities can propogate their species independent of the body; and if so, why may they not do so after leaving the body?

Indeed, if God created "male and female" spirits before creating the dust-man, why did he imprison them in mortal bodies? And why did God make it a sin to let one out of its prison of mortality? Or, if they really are not better off when out of the body, but are in the best condition while in the body, why are they to be subtracted from the body again? Why not let them retain the best position, let that be what it may? If the best position be out of the body, why were they put into the body? Certainly not as a punishment, for the dust-man was created before the fall. If the best position is in the body, why are they ever to leave the body? Certainly not as a punishment on the saints, whose sins are all pardoned, for God does not punish men after they are pardoned.

The truth is, God made but one man, whom he "formed out of the dust of the ground." The first record tells us how God made man—"in his own image"—and the second record tells us of what material he made him—"out of the dust of the ground." He was not a double man. W. S.

WHERE DID THE JEWS GET IT?

We are often reminded that the Jews held the doctrine of the soul's immortality at the first advent, and are asked, "Where did they get it?" This claim is partly true, for a part of the Jews did hold that sentiment after their return from captivity; but in connection with it, they held the doctrine of transmigration of souls, and the doctrine of "rewards under the earth;" but none of these sentiments were held by them before their long captivity; hence, they received them all at the same time, and from the same source, revamping them, and making them ingredients of their theology, after a slight modification. When inquired of, "Where did the Jews get the doctrine of the soul's immortality?" we answer, not from the Bible, for it is not to be found there; but while in captivity among the heathen who practiced "necromancy" (a pretended consultation of the dead), they imbibed this doctrine from them, with the doctrine of transmigration, and "rewards under the earth." This class, at the first advent, were known as Pharisees. W. S.

BAPTISM.

Baptism has a place in the Divine plan, and we ought not to undervalue it, nor be remiss in urging it upon the attention of the people. Many think well of the ordinance, but, as with close preaching, they think it is meant for somebody else; whereas the voice of inspiration cries, "Be baptized every one of you;" and at the first advent, "they were baptized, both men and women." Others fully appreciate the fact that baptism is designed for every disciple of Christ, and are intending to attend to it some time before they die, but flatter themselves that they need not be in a hurry about it. To such the heavenly mandate comes more forcibly than to a new convert anciently, who had omitted baptism only three days: "Why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized." This shows us the Divine aversion to procrastinating baptism. This ordinance was given not to be slighted, but to be respected. Then "why tarriest thou"? Why not obey God now? "Bring forth fruit meet for repentance," then, without delay; "arise, and be baptized." W. S.

TENT MEETING AT ALLENTON, R. I.

A series of meetings have been held at the above place, in the tent piloted by Bro. Bellows. They commenced on Thursday, Sept. 22nd, and concluded on Tuesday evening, Oct. 4th. Throughout a deep and hallowed feeling has rested on the congregations, and it is hoped that much real good has been done. During the meeting three brethren signified their intention of pursuing their journey anew, by again presenting themselves to the Lord. One sinner rose for prayers, and two brethren eschewed old habits of smoking and chewing tobacco. May the good Lord keep them firm in their resolution.

A good number of preaching brethren aided with their testimony, including Brn. Cotton, Bellows, Wood, Brown, Boynton, Perry, and the writer. Bro. Cotton was all "fire" and love. It continually grew "better, and better, and better" with him, and the peacefulness which flowed in and from him as a river did all good who were present. Bro. Bellows gave witness to prophetic testimony, and showed "by many infallible proofs" our proximity to the crowning event of all events—the much-loved advent of Jesus. Bro. Woods was, as ever, at home on "the faith" and kindred themes, and strove to impress the minds of his hearers with the importance of his subject. Bro. Brown "reasoned out of the Scriptures" in his own logical way. Bro. Boynton sought by legitimate means to win the unwon to Jesus as their sacrifice and King. Bro. Perry raised his voice to tell of the lingering love of the unceasing Lover; and the writer sought in weakness to "save some" by preaching words whereby men might be saved.

There was a blessed oneness among the saints. Preachers and people coagulated in desire and petition at the throne of grace, and it is believed when the results of time are thrown into the foreground, the fruits of the tent-meeting at Allenton will appear, to the joy of the laborers. Yours truly in Jesus,

W. KELLAWAY.

LITTLE TALKS.

A GOOD MEETING.

A profitable meeting has recently been held near Lincolnville, Pa. Brn. Ongley and Buzzell preached in the earlier part of the meeting, and Bro. Sweet and the writer followed at a later date. Five or six were baptized. Besides the pleasure of meeting these brethren, together with the venerable and beloved senior Bro. Ongley, I met for the first time Bro. O. T. Hobbs of Randolph, from whose chart some prophetic expositions were given touching the developments that are imminent abroad. I saw also an article by this brother, in manscript, upon the "two witnesses," of ability and sound judgment, the perusal of which would edify the teachable reader. In referring to the aged and partially paralyzed Bro. Ongley, I would venture to suggest that whoever would do good to a worthy and needy disciple of Christ, would find here a suitable occasion for christian benefaction. Send your christian gifts in Jesus' name. Encourage and bless one of the Lord's flock. Lay not up in store on the earth. But lay up in store a better treasure, by feeding the poor. Direct to Lincolnville, Crawford Co., Penn.

THE SICK POOR.

The suffering and sick Sister Weaver was comforted by a few words from me in the Crisis, as she says. I hope that the friends of Christ and his oppressed and suffering sheep and lambs will remember them. Write to them cheerful and glad words of hope and consolation, and send them gifts that you can no doubt easily spare, and that may give great gladness and relief, and gain the express benediction of the Lord in the great day of reward. C. COLKSNOVE.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 24th, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE BOARD OF THE American Advent Mission Society.

Another year has passed, and we as servants of the Society are called upon to give an account of our stewardship. It is well known that the chief work of the Board from the beginning has been among the freedmen, in the South, and this was in accordance with the design of the founders of this Society.

Our labors among the people have been attended with a blessing in both the departments of labor, of the school, and the church.

A great change has taken place in the South in relation to the education of the freedmen which makes further effort on our part in this direction unnecessary. The following report of our Agent, who was sent to close the schools and missions of St. Louis and Memphis, will set the matter in its true light:

Report.

To the Board of the American Advent Mission Society:—

Brethren, the Mission in St. Louis, Mo., East St. Louis, Compton Hill, and vicinity, with the five day-schools which at one time were in successful operation, with Sabbath Schools and meetings, are now all closed up by your direction. The city having provided for the education of the freedmen, our schools were no longer needed. And as we could no longer receive from Government the rent for our rooms, when the schools closed meetings and Sabbath Schools closed also.

Dr. Leslie, whom you appointed to resume the school at Compton Hill, failed to get the co-operation of the freedmen, and so gave up that enterprise, and he was recalled. The school still goes on under the direction of Eld. C. Decatur and the freedmen. Dr. Leslie, however, has remained on his own account in St. Louis and vicinity, and labored among all classes where he could find an open door, but chiefly among the white people, and has done much good. Sr. M. K. Prescott has co-operated with him in the city and vicinity, with prospects of fruit among the white people. Much might be said of the fruits and results of this mission. But we close with a brief summary.

During about four years of labor our teachers and missionaries have had under their tuition about fifteen hundred freedmen, with their children, who enjoyed either shorter or longer terms in school, the most of whom were educated in the primary branches. This has been a real and permanent good, as they were enabled to read the word of God, which was one of the objects of the mission. Besides the schools, there were raised up four churches of the freedmen, of which three remain under the care of Eld. C. Decatur, who is the pastor at Compton Hill. There are three or four other preachers associated with Bro. Decatur, who have meetings in different places. They have a State Conference of ministers and churches, and will keep up this organization.

It was found, after our schools closed, that the freedmen desired to conduct their own affairs without the supervision of white men appointed by the Board. And so the Board have left them to manage their own affairs in time to come; while the white people will work by themselves, as they may have help. Dr. Leslie is at present with them, doing good.

Memphis Mission.

The mission in Memphis, Tenn., has been continued between four and five years without interruption. Its main strength and power for good among the freedmen has been through the school. It was through this that we were able to reach the freedmen at all for good, or to organize a church. The school and Sabbath School, under the direction of Dr. Leslie, was one of the largest and best in the city among the freedmen. And the church was educated and brought up to a higher discipline than any of the freedmen churches, who are still following too much after the loose habits of the old slave system.

For a time, in the early history of the mission, we were cramped for room, which led to the building of the new chapel; on the opening of which our numbers and strength were increased nearly four-fold. In the last three years we have had much prosperity, and especially in the school and church.

When you were informed that the school Board in Memphis and our teachers were not co-operating, and that a change in your plans must be made relative to the school and mission, the President of the Society was sent to see what could be done; and he found that all the schools which had been gotten up and supported by the North were being given up to the city, and their school-houses offered for sale. He also found that when the school was given up by our white teachers, it was as in St. Louis, not the choice of the colored people to have white pastors to carry on the missionary work among them. This cut off one of the early cherished objects of the Board, which was to sustain some white missionaries in connection with colored ones, and so spread the gospel of the kingdom all through the South.

This led the Board to decide to dispose of the chapel as a central point, and close the mission work in Memphis, as had been done in St. Louis. In accordance with your instructions, I have therefore prospectively disposed of the chapel and closed the mission. At the present time property is very low in Memphis, and the city was not prepared to give a fair price for our house. But the African Methodist Society wanting just such a house, and in this location, took it on rent for this year, with a view to purchase within the year at four thousand dollars, so that the Society will lose nothing as to finance.

This new Society will take the school, Sabbath School, and people that sympathize with them. Our own church, with its two colored pastors, will take care of itself. I gave them good counsel, and they will manage their own affairs. They now number about sixty souls. The church in Osceola, Ark., also belonging to this mission, has about seventy members, with another company at Morgan's Point, with others. There are six ministers among them all, who will keep their conference and hold forth the gospel of the kingdom and the Lord soon to come. During the course of the school in Memphis, Osceola, and Lagrange, in the last four or five years, there have been nearly three thousand names recorded of the freedmen and their children; and some three hundred names to the churches, many of whom are now scattered or dead. Many of these were baptized by Brn. Leslie and Cole. The truth of the Lord's near coming has been scattered far and wide, and will take root in many hearts, and the results of these missions will only be known in the day of the Lord, when he will make up his jewels.

Respectfully yours, J. V. HIMES.

Freedmen's Testimonial.

We, the freedmen and our children of the Advent Society in Memphis, Tenn., and vicinity, being assembled at the close of our school year in the beautiful chapel built for our benefit, feeling that the time has arrived when our relations heretofore existing must close, cannot suffer this opportunity to pass without an expression of our feelings to the American Advent Mission Society and the Board, for their great kindness to us in our low estate. When they sent us the President of their Society to look after our interest, five years ago, we were unable to read or write, and many of us were in sin. But a great change has come over us, both in our religious and literary condition. We can now read the word of God, and write our own letters. Our children also have been educated in the higher branches of education, and through the help of the missionaries sent among us to improve our moral and religious condition, we have been educated and improved. And as we owe these things under God to the Board of the A. A. Mission Society at Boston, Mass., we take this method to testify to them and the members of the Society our unfeigned gratitude. They can hardly conceive the immense good they have done us. When we consider the change that has come over us for good, we can hardly realize it ourselves; we are like those that dream.

We cannot close this testimonial of gratitude without honorable mention of the faithful laborers who have been among us. Elds. Himes, Leslie, Reed, Eastman, Wilkins, and Cole, and the voluntary labors of Brn. Hasty, Simmonds, and Wadsworth. And among the women, Srs. Butler, Northrup, Steer, Cole, and Valle. These dear servants of God have faithfully served by day and night, sparing no pains or labor to elevate and make us useful and happy. They have promoted our temporal and spiritual welfare by their faithful labors, and merit as they really have our warmest gratitude and love. And now that the mission is closed, and the house transferred to others, we feel to hope in the change that we shall still be cared for; but none can ever help us, or serve us more faithfully, than you and your people have done.

So farewell, dear kind friends and brethren of the north. God bless you and reward you for all your sacrifice for the poor outcasts on whom the light is now shining. We hope to meet you in the kingdom of God, when Jesus comes, and we look for him to come soon.

Signed, EPHRAIM SLEDGE,
GEO. MAHONAY,
Elders of the Advent Church, in Memphis, Tenn.,

The American Advent Mission Tent Meeting in Providence, R. I.

By the request of some brethren, the A. A. Mission Tent was pitched in South Providence, R. I., June 18th. A meeting was commenced and continued with unceasing interest until July 11th, making a twenty-two days' meeting, including four Sabbaths. A good work has been accomplished for Christ and truth, some having been brought to see the glorious light of the gospel, and to rejoice in that liberty which Christ alone can give.

After the tent had been taken down, it was put up again at the earnest request of the brethren, and the meeting continued ten days longer with promising results. The doctrine of the personal coming of the Lord, and kindred truths, were faithfully discussed. This missionary effort has resulted in a permanent meeting now held in Lester Hall, where the cause is prospering and the saints rejoicing. To God be all the glory.

The Board contemplated sending out missionaries among the white people in the South, and called for help to carry out the plan. But they have not been furnished with the means to do it. There are calls for labor in almost every direction, but we have not had the men, or the funds to sustain them, to supply these destitute regions.

We fear that the present financial derangement in the affairs of the country have had too much influence upon the church in her efforts in the missionary work. Men are perishing the same now as in other times when we enjoyed national prosperity, and gave freely of our substance. And instead of withholding from the missionary cause in times of financial trial, we should make sacrifices in other directions, and give freely to the cause of missions, as our highest duty. We have no missionaries in the field at present, but desire to send out several into important fields, and ask of the churches for the means to carry forward our missionary work.

At a meeting of the Executive Board held in Boston, Aug. 4th, 1870, the following letter of resignation was presented:

Dear Brethren:—Having finished the last work assigned me by the Board, in closing up our missions among the freedmen and making my report of the same, my work is done. I now have served the Society and Board since August, 1865, to the best of my ability, in carrying out their plans for the spread of light and truth. The increasing cares and duties of my official relations to the growing cause of Adventism in the West, render it necessary to close my relations with the American Advent Mission Society. I therefore send you this my resignation of all official relations, both in the Society and the Board, to take effect from this date.

In parting with you, I am touched with the uniform confidence and kindness in all our relations, for which you will ever have my gratitude and love. Wishing the Society all prosperity in its mission work, I subscribe myself your brother in Christ,

JOSHUA V. HIMES,
Pres. A. A. Mission Society.

Resolved, That the Board regret the resignation of the President of the Society, Eld. Joshua V. Himes, who has for the last five years served us efficiently in the cause of missions among the freedmen of the South and elsewhere.

Through his agency the Board and Society have accomplished much good in Memphis, Tenn., St. Louis, Mo., and in many other places; and there has been a harmony in the Board with Bro. Himes in teaching and seeking to elevate the colored race, and get the gospel of the soon coming kingdom among them. And now it is with reluctance that we accept his resignation; but as duties demand his entire attention in the great West, we yield to the providential hand and give him our hearty co-operation in the divine work in which he is so deeply engaged, and where he seems to be called more especially to labor in spreading the gospel of the kingdom.

In concluding this our annual report, we thank God, the giver of every good and perfect gift, for his abounding mercy the past year, and for all the prosperity attending the operations of the Mission Society; and still pray that God may grant unto his servants divine aid, that greater good may be accomplished in spreading the gospel of the kingdom, under the auspices of the Executive Board of the American Advent Mission Society, and that requisite means may be put into their hands to carry on the mission work until the great Missionary from glory shall come to reward every man according to his work.

All of which is respectfully submitted by the EXECUTIVE BOARD.

For the World's Crisis.

PITTSFIELD CAMPMEETING.

This meeting convened half a mile from the village, in a pleasant grove owned by Mr. Hawthorn of Pittsfield, and kindly offered to us free of charge as a place in which to hold our annual campmeeting for the eastern part of Maine. There were ten tents pitched, including the Mission tent.

The meeting began well, though we were short for preachers the first part of the meeting, as some from the west part of the State did not come as they agreed to; but Bro. Hastings and others arrived Wednesday night, and we had plenty of help, and the brethren and sisters had a mind to work. It seemed some like an old-fashioned campmeeting. The prayer-meetings in several of the tents were interesting, and were blessed of the Lord. Some new ones made a start for eternal life, while wanderers came back to the fold of Christ, and were made to rejoice again in the pardoning love of God. Some who were on the ground at the beginning of the meeting, and remained until the close, thought it the best campmeeting ever held at Pittsfield.

The people of Pittsfield were determined we should not be disturbed in our worship, so we had good order throughout the meeting.

Sunday evening a general invitation was given to all that love the Lord to meet in the Pittsfield tent to partake of the Lord's Supper. It was a blessed season.

At the close of the meeting a campmeeting committee of five were chosen for next year, if time should continue. JER. CARR.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

MADRID, Sept. 4. The whole peninsula is in the wildest state of alarm on account of the ravages and spread of the yellow fever. The epidemic has already spread with terrible effect over the entire east, south, and west coasts. At Valencia de Alcantara a dreadful panic has seized upon the terror-stricken inhabitants and the military, in their efforts to fly from the plague.

Along the west coast the ravages have been most disastrous. The inhabitants are flying to the interior to escape the disease, but are refused shelter or attention by the country people.

Military cordons are being rapidly established to guard against the flight of the inhabitants to disinfected points, and most energetic measures will be pursued by the government to prevent a farther spread of the fatal disease.

LONDON, Sept. 28. The new Roman Government announces the appropriation of $50,000,000 to defray the expenses of the inauguration of Rome as the capital of Italy.

LONDON, Oct. 5. Advices just received from Berlin state that the citizens in large numbers have petitioned the King not to expose himself to personal danger at the siege of Paris. His Majesty has replied that he has taken his decision, which is that he will not return to Berlin until the war is terminated.

Couriers from the English and Russian governments, bringing despatches, are daily passing between their respective capitals and the Prussian headquarters. From what has been ascertained as to the policy proposed, it is believed that both the governments are paving the way to an armistice. Reports are current that it is suggested that there should be an incorporation of both Mecklenburgs into Prussia, and that the Grand Dukes thereof be compensated by the cession to them of Alsace and Lorraine.

London Oct. 6.—[Special to N. Y. Times.]

The following is received this morning per balloon from Paris, dated 29th ult, and addressed on an open card, "E. H. Kidder, New York, by his son George.":

"Tell my family I am in no danger. There are plenty of provisions. The terrible stories manufactured by Bismarck regarding internal dissensions here are utterly false. The troops are in excellent condition."

By the same balloon, bearing the same date, was received another card from Wm. Dreyer to E. Dreyer, Baltimore: "Our days are occupied with perfecting our ambulances, of which we Americans are justly proud. There is no danger of famine for three months to come. The city is well provisioned, and the troops are improving wonderfully. The city is quiet and very orderly, and there is no noise or disturbance."

Private letters of the 3d inst., received by another balloon this afternoon, confirm the above statement.

Oct. 7. The Prussian guard is north of Paris between Canal de l' Ourg and Northern railway. On its right is stationed the fourth corps and on the left the twelfth corps.

The Prussian guns are nearly all in position before Paris, and the bombardment will be commenced from all the batteries simultaneously the moment the arrangements are perfected.

TOURS, Oct. 6. News has been received here that the Prussians have now completed all their arrangements for shelling and attacking Paris. The guns and mortars are in position. The spirit of the population, however, is undaunted, and the garrison are prepared at any moment to second such an attack as the forces outside of the Prussian lines may make. The French are aware that some time must elapse ere an offensive movement can be made, and they use the delay in drilling and disciplining the Mobiles.

AN INTERESTING LETTER FROM PARIS.

LONDON, Oct. 7. A Paris letter received by yesterday's balloon mail thus describes the state of the Commissariat in that city:

Every butcher receives each morning a certain amount of meat calculated upon his average sales. Against this meat he issues bills in the evening to his customers, who upon the presentation of a ticket next morning will receive the amount for which they have inscribed themselves at the tariff. When tickets have been issued by the butcher equivalent to the meat which he is to receive, he issues no more. Yesterday a decree was promulgated, ordering all persons having flour for sale to give it up to the government at the current price, to be distributed to the bakers like the meat to the butchers. The meat supply does not equal the demand, and many persons are unable to obtain tickets. The restaurants cannot get enough for their customers. The Garde Mobile and National Guards who apply in forma pauperis receive 20 cents per diem.

At the present prices, it is impossible for even a single man to purchase sufficient nutriment for this sum. It was supposed that the peasants invited to take refuge in Paris would have brought more food with them for themselves and their families, but they preferred to bring old beds and furniture.

Besides stores of flour and numerous sheep, we have 22,000,000 pounds of horseflesh. Still the misery among those who have no money to buy food, unless the Government boldly forces the question, will be very great.

BERLIN, Oct. 6. Despatches from Versailles report that Minister Washburne is firmly resolved to leave Paris.

On his journey hither, Gen. Burnside had a narrow escape from the bullets of the sentries on both sides, near the Paris walls. He states that there is no perceptible change in the everyday life of the Parisians, notwithstanding the siege and their isolation. Upon Sunday the Champs Elysees present their usual aspect. Women and children are about at all hours during the day, shops are open day and night, and all thoughts of the Prussians being at the city gates are banished. Provisions are cheap and plenty, both fresh meat and vegetables. There are accumulations of food sufficient for six months' consumption, and an abundance of flour and wine within the magazines. All is orderly and vigilant.

TOURS, Oct. 8. All classes in Paris are animated by the military spirit. The most wealthy citizens willingly share in the burdens of war and take the positions assigned them on the walls. Members of the Rothschild family mounted guard on the ramparts.

The town of Dreux, in the department of Eure et Soir, twenty miles north of Chartres, has been occupied by a Prussian column, five thousand strong, moving from Versailles.

MARSEILLES, Oct. 9. Garibaldi is going to Tours to have a conference with the committee of defence. During his stay here he is the recipient of numerous Republican demonstrations and testimonials.

AMIENS, Oct. 9. The Prussians are advancing upon St. Quentin, to which place they are expected to lay siege. The splendid fortifications are in thorough condition for defence.

STUTTGART, Oct. 9. The town of New Briesach was bombarded on Friday and Saturday, by the columns of Prussians which recently crossed the Rhine near Muhlhaussen. The troops are suffering from the cannonade.

BERLIN, Oct. 10.—A desprtch from Rheims announces that the Prussian commander at Laon has issued a proclamation to the inhabitants of the district of the Aisne, declaring that four Frenchmen, innocent or guilty, will be shot for every Prussian whom the inhabitants may kill.

A despatch from Nancy announces that the important town of St. Dizier, in the department of Haute Marne, was given over to sack by the Prussian commander, in revenge for the loss of a number of men who were said to have been shot at from houses. The town was abandoned to pillage, and was sacked during a whole day.

Fighting before Metz was renewed fiercely yesterday. An incessant cannonade and fusilade of small arms was maintained throughout the day.

LONDON, Oct. 10. Balloons are constantly leaving Paris. They are closely watched for miles by the Prussian hussars. Two balloons, containing a great quantity of official correspondence, have recently been captured by the Prussians.

TOURS, Oct. 10. A decree from the ministry announces that Garabaldi has been assigned to the command of the volunteers.

THE GUESTS OF THE EMPEROR.

"Wilhelmshohe is the rendezvous of the distinguished guests of the emperor. The hotels in the vicinity are crowded.

THE EMPEROR.

"The emperor seems in perfect health, and makes daily excursions on foot and in carriage, accompanied by several adjutants on horseback. I recently addressed a polite note to his majesty, requesting the favor of an interview. Considering the peculiar and delicate situation of the imperial prisoner, I was not surprised at receiving the following negative reply:

"MONSIEUR—The emperor received your letter of the 19th, and was much affected at the sentiments of sympathy therein expressed. His majesty has charged me to convey his thanks, and tell you how much he regrets that circumstances will not permit him to receive you. Please accept, &c.

DE LAURISTOQ.
Officer d'ordnance.

War Items.

☞ The Empress Eugenie expresses herself as very grateful for the tender treatment which she received in England. The royal family, both the Queen and the Prince of Wales, have manifested great sympathy for the unfortunate Empress and her son.

☞ General Grant thinks Paris must surrender if the Prussians continue the siege any length of time.

☞ The Russian Czar, on receiving the news of the battle of Sedan, at Moscow, on Septemebr 3d, gave a dinner, when, having drunk to the health of his royal uncle of Prussia, he broke the glass according to German custom, which prescribes that none shall drink again from a glass which has been used for very solemn toasts.

☞ To the pioneers of the Prussian guard has been assigned the task of directing the waters of Canal de l' Ourg into the La Morce river. The stream falls into the Seine some miles below Paris. Should the Prussians succeed in their design, one source of the water supply of the besieged will be cut off.

☞ The French fortresses of Belfort, Schelestadt and New Briesach will be attacked at once.

☞ The captors of Toul have been charged with the duty of taking Soissons.

☞ The French army, now in Algeria, numbering 37,000 men, demands to be recalled, to resist the Prussians.

☞ The city of Strasbourg, which was formerly the capital of Alsace, has been selected as the seat of administration for that province.

☞ The mission of M. Theirs to the Russian government has failed. He will proceed immediately to Vienna.

☞ At Gravelotte the dead Frenchmen were piled in the trenches above each other to the height of two yards.

☞ Bouabet, the colored freshman of Yale College, passed the best examination, on entering, of any of the one hundred and ninety candidates.

☞ The ambulances of the army of the Rhine comprise beds for twenty-six thousand patients.

ROME.—The people of the "Eternal City" and of the Papal States, by acclamation, have ratified the annexation of the city and its surrounding dependencies to the kingdom of Italy. Rome is emancipated from the temporal government of the Pope, and the Pope—for which, if he is not, he ought to be devoutly thankful—is emancipated from the temporal government of Rome. The temporal kingdom of the Pope is absorbed in the Italian kingdom, of which Rome now becomes the capital.

DOMESTIC.

ARCHBISHOP JOHN.—A distinguished prelate of the Orthodox Eastern Churches has arrived in New York from St. Petersburg. He is still a young man, not over thirty-five years of age, and was formerly Bishop of Karan. Henceforth he will be known as John, Archbishop of North America. The faithful of his charge are in Alaska, San Francisco, New Orleans and New York. He will remain in New York for some time to make preparations for building a cathedral in Lexington avenue, near Fifty-third street, the site for which was purchased some time since.

The funds with which this purchase was made were mainly contributed by the Emperor of Russia. For the present the Archbishop will celebrate the rites of Christian worship in a provisional chapel, improvised for the purpose, in the house of the Rev. Mr. Bjerring in this city. This is the gentleman whose conversion from the Roman Catholic to the Orthodox Eastern Church in Baltimore, about a year since, caused so great a sensation in ecclesiastical circles. Since that event the clergy of Russia have conceived the hope of seeing their communion firmly established in the United States and gaining as vast a number of adherents as the Roman Catholic Church itself.

The arrival of Archbishop John is probably but the precursor of an extensive system of Missionary effort in this country. Bishop John has already been in Alaska, and is well acquainted with American institutions. He was the bearer of important dispatches from Prince Gortschakoff to the Russian Minister in the United States.

THE WAR.—It is certain that the Prussians are steadily perfecting their investment of Paris, and a short time will show whether they are to rely upon an active or a passive plan of operations. Gen. Trochu is reported to be confident that he can hold out at least two months, by which time he thinks the weather, sickness and French interference with the Prussian communications will cause the seige to be raised. As there have been various estimates of the force under his command, we give another from a source friendly to the French, as follows: 100,000 regular troops, including about 30,000 cavalry; 100,000 Gardes Mobile; nearly 200,000 local militia; about 10,000 sailors to man the guns. The same authority puts the number of cannons and mortars on the walls and forts of Paris at not far from two thousand, some of them of the largest calibre. The troops are said to have made excellent progress in drill, and to be animated by a determined, confident spirit.—Journal.

☞ The spots on the sun, as viewed through a telescope, at present, are a wondrous and an entertaining spectacle. The great pentagon group (in which are five very large spots and many others) stretches in length and breadth quite a fifth across the sun, or nearly 200,000 miles. And there are two or more spots, the umbra or dark part of which is estimated to be at least four times the size of the earth.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to give notice, through the Crisis, that there is a little band started here in Lakeville, Ct., who are looking for and expecting soon to "behold the King in his beauty." We have been isolated from the great body of believers, and those of like precious faith, but we have lately decided to take a fresh start for the kingdom, to trim our lamps, to get them brightly burning, and our vessels filled with oil. Therefore we invite the brethren and sisters, who are near and who can, to meet with us in the name of our Master, on the evening of Oct. 29th, to see what can be done for this seemingly forsaken place, to awaken sinners to a sense of the nearness of the great and coming day. We expect to have the help of Bro. H. K. Flagg, or Bro. S. C. Hancock, according to the answer they receive from their correspondence with the Lord. Brethren will send their appointments through the Crisis.

JOSHUA BURTON.

Notice.

I wish to give notice, through the Crisis, that the little church in Roxbury have of late been revived and encouraged through the labors of Bro. H. K. Walling, and feel it important that they should meet together and obey the apostle in exhorting one another, and so much the more as they see the day approaching. They will meet every Sabbath at the house of Levi R. Teeple, for prayer and conference meetings; and any of the brethren and sisters from the adjoining towns are invited as often as convenient to meet with them; also the preaching Brn. who will correspond with the Lord (and him only), are invited to come when he directs. In behalf of the church of God,

S. E. TEEPLE.

Notice.

If those who have my "Hymn books" on sale have any money for me, I would thank them to send the same to me at Chelsea, Mass., by the 1st of Nov., as I shall need it soon to publish another edition. If sent later than that, please direct to Machiasport, Me., where I expect to remain permanently. Those desiring my "Hymn books," or "Admonitions on Church Fairs," will address me as above. I keep a supply of both on hand.

I. K. LOMBARD.

For the World's Crisis.

HYMN.

The substance of the following "hymn by some unknown hand, a little altered," was published in the last century. It must have been written, one would think, for to-day. S. HALL.
Hartford, Ct.

To you it is spoken, ye virgins, be watchful,
And strengthen the things that are ready to die;
Your loins still be girded, and be ye found faithful,
For see all around you proclaim He is nigh.

Now tumult and uproar; commotions are making,
Kingdoms against kingdoms, dire slaughter prepare;
The powers ordained of heaven are shaking,
And men's anxious bosoms are troubled with fear.

Great Babel of Rome, fixed firm on her throne,
Long said in her heart, "as a queen I shall reign";
But her craftsmen far off, her sad fate now bemoan,
With deep lamentations, cry, alas! for her slain.

The nations and kings she once ruled now forsake her,
Having spoiled her dominion, and shorn her of power,
With the treasures of wealth she had heaped together,
And make her quite desolate, and burn her with fire.

The blood of the martyrs and saints is found in her,
The cup that she filled, she drinks now in her turn;
Ye heavens, apostles, and prophets, shout o'er her,
Mystery, Babylon! 'tis yours now to mourn.

Her plagues and sorrows shall never be healed;
Her "war with the saints" the Lord will repay;
In fire to destroy her, he'll soon be revealed,
The smoke of her torment shall rise up alway.

Thus at last all her lovers will with trembling be taken,
But the children of Zion have nothing to fear;
They seek for a kingdom that cannot be shaken,
Their treasure, their hope, their protector is there.

Then watch ye, his servants, see the signs all around,
He bids you observe them, He will soon come again;
Be steadfast, unmoved, with good works abound,
Assured that your labors shall not be in vain.

THE RESURRECTION OF LIFE.
The Christian's Entrance into Glory.

"If a man die, shall he live again?" is a question which every thoughtful mind must desire to have answered. No satisfactory reply can be given to it except by divine revelation. Apart from such testimony we might speculate, or hope, but no more. So far as observation speaks, indeed, it seems rather to say, "No!" The language of Job 14: 7-12, expresses exactly the destiny of man, so far as we can discern from observation and experience.

"There is hope of a tree if it be cut down that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease. Though the root thereof wax old in the earth, and the stock thereof die in the ground; yet through the scent of water it will bud, and bring forth boughs like a plant. But man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down and riseth not."

From this sad, hopeless uncertainty, we are happily freed by the revelation of God's gracious purposes towards our race. In the Holy Scriptures God has not only disclosed the truth that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, he has also shown the order in which that resurrection shall take place, and its bearing on the future and ultimate destiny of the evil and the good. And here we notice:

I. The Scriptures inform us that both the righteous and the wicked dead shall be raised.

Standing on his defence before Felix, the apostle Paul declared his "hope toward God that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust."

II. The Scriptures inform us, that but for the resurrection there would be no future life for the dead. How else can we understand the force of the following language: "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not? Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." 1 Cor. 15: 32.

The language just quoted was used in an argument by the the apostle Paul against the false doctrine, "that there is no resurrection of the dead." There were some persons among the Christians at Corinth who were teaching this error; and Paul uses various considerations, facts, and remonstrances against the reception of such a belief. The consequence of the non-resurrection of the dead, were it true, would be appalling in the extreme to him and to all who, like him, were suffering the loss of all things for Christ. All his efforts and self-denial; all his labors, and sufferings, and persecutions would be vain. "What advantageth it me, if the dead rise not?" The Epicureans, who denied all future existence after death, used to stimulate each other to the enjoyment of the pleasure of life by the adage, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die;" and the apostle acknowledges that if the dead were not to rise, then the Epicurean motto would be worthy of adoption as the best course to follow. Most vividly does the language of the apostle show us that, in his estimation, if there were no resurrection there would be no future existence, consequently no reward.

"For only so could he bring out such a conclusion as that contained in verse 32, where he evidently teaches that, in that case, death would be the utter end of man; for on the supposition of the natural immortality of the soul, there could be no room for this conclusion, though the body had never experienced a resurrection. For let it be supposed that an individual in the present day should deny that there was any resurrection whatever of the dead body, and that another, who believed the soul to be immortal, in argument with him should say—'If there be no resurrection, then it is of no consequence how we live, good or bad, it will be all one at death,' would not every bystander, and even the denier of the resurrection himself, with one voice proclaim it a most amazing instance of the non sequitur?"

"And if any of our modern christians who believe the soul to be immortal . . . had been standing by the apostle when he dictated this, would they not have been strongly tempted to interpose with an earnest remonstrance, couched in some such strain as this: 'But Paul, even granting that there were no resurrection, it would by no means follow that it would be all one at death, whether a man had led a virtuous or a vicious life. You surely forget that the soul is capable of joy or sorrow, quite independently of the body, and can be either happy in heaven or racked with anguish in hell, and will be through all the ages that have to elapse before the resurrection that we anticipate occurs. You are surely staking too much, and laying far too great a stress on the resurrection of the dead.'"*

The only way in which the language of the apostle can be understood, in fairness to the judgment of the apostle himself, is to regard it as expressing the idea, no resurrection, no future life; and that he used the term die in the sense of utterly and for ever ceasing to be.

In the same sense must we understand the term perished, in verse 18. "If Christ be not raised, your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins. Then they also who have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Mr. Dobney justly remarks, "To substitute the notion of misery after death, instead of the idea of literal perishing would just do away with all the force of the apostle's argument throughout; for he proceeds all along upon the supposition that it is the fact of a resurrection that alone makes it worth our while to scorn present pleasure and to labor agreeably to the will of Christ. Everything depends on a resurrection." (p. 141.)

The resurrection, viewed in this light, shows us the significance of the Lord's words in John 6: 39, 40. "This is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day. And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day."

But though a resurrection of the dead is indispensable to the possession of eternal life, a resurrection does not of itself secure eternal life to all who are raised, for there is a "second death." "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust," but only those who attain to "the resurrection of the just" shall live forever. "The hour is coming in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." John 5: 28, 29. Life is here used as the antithesis to condemnation; because "the wages of sin is death," and "the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord"—a gift of which those who now accept it shall be put in possession "at the resurrection of the just."

The same truth is stated by our Lord in his discourse with the Sadducees (Luke 20: 27-38:) "They which shall be accounted worthy to attain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more." We have already seen that there shall be a "resurrection unto life," and a "resurrection unto damnation." How, then, are we to understand the language, "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain . . . the resurrection from the dead"? The secret of its import lies in the fact that it speaks not of the resurrection of, but "the resurrection from the dead." "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust;" but it is only the former of those classes who shall be accounted "worthy to obtain the resurrection from [i. e., out from amongst] the dead;" not from the dead state merely, but out from amongst the dead persons.

What we wish to fix attention upon is the truth, That inability to die any more belongs to those who are "counted worthy to obtain that resurrection from amongst the dead." Language parallel to that in Rev. 20: "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power; but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."

This worthiness to obtain that resurrection from amongst the dead, and so be unable to die any more, can only be possessed by being "in Christ." It is they who are Christ's that rise at his coming. 1 Cor. 15: 23. Thus, again, we have the truth confirmed, that ternal life is the gift of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

It is only by so viewing the resurrection from the dead ones as the entrance into life, that we can perceive the force of Paul's language in Philippians: "If by any means I may attain unto the resurrection of the dead." He believed that there would be "a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust," and therefore he was certain to attain to a resurrection of the dead. Whence, then, his anxiety? Properly translated, his words are these: "If by any means I may attain unto the resurrection from amongst the dead ones;" and from the observations already made on the privileges and honor of that resurrection, the all-engrossing desire of the apostle appears most reasonable and significant.

So also his language in Rom. 8: 22, 23: "We know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now; and not only they but ourselves also, who have the first-fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption—to wit, the redemption of our body." And in 2 Cor. 5: 1-8; "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed [i. e., bodiless,] but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life." The apostle, and those like-minded, groaned and longed earnestly for that time when "mortality would be swallowed up of life;" and that glorious event would transpire when they were clothed with their "house which is from heaven"—in other words, when "raised in incorruption."

It is, indeed, common to quote this passage in proof of the idea that the immortal soul of the believer, when it leaves its mortal tabernacle, simply enters an incorruptible and spiritual body at the resurrection; that then the deathless soul is clothed upon with the house which is from heaven. But granting, for the moment, that the phraseology, "earthly house," "tabernacle," "clothed upon," and "building of God," implies a personality independent of the body, it does not therefore follow that this personality is immortal. And the language of the apostle here, and elsewhere, plainly asserts that the personality—whether distinct from the body or not—is mortal; for it is mortality that is to be "swallowed up of life" at the resurrection. "The corruptible is to put on incorruption;" "the mortal to put on immortality." 1 Cor. 15: 53, 54. Popular theology is the most palpable inversion of this divine order; for according to it the immortal (soul) puts on immortality. Paul's desire for resurrection from amongst the dead is well accounted for, seeing that it was then that he expected the mortal to put on immortality. So that, granting that Paul believed in a soul, or personality distinct from his body, he had no idea of its being an mortal or incorruptible soul.

For our own part we do not believe that the apostle had any intention of conveying the idea of a distinct, separate, personal, individual existence between death and resurrection. The "our" is not the language of a being dwelling in an earthly house, but the language of a mortal man speaking of himself. The following seems to be a fair representation of the apostle's ideas: "For we know that if we mortal believers were to die, we shall be raised immortal; for as we groan, earnestly desiring to be immortalized and freed from our pains; since being so immortalized we should not be found naked, or in a state of death. For we now groan, being burdened, not that we desire death, but for that glorious change at the coming of the Lord when "mortality shall be swallowed up of life."

Resurrection from the dead was the grand hope and desire of the saints mentioned in the Old Testament. Not more fervently did Paul look forward to that event than did the patriarch Job. These are his words: "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me." Chap. 19: 25-27. Or David's, when contrasting his destiny with that of "the men of the world, who have their portion in this life," who, satisfied with treasure, leave their substance to their numerous progeny, exclaims, "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness."

It was the hope of the resurrection which also cheered the heart of Israel's Messiah, our own Redeemer, when bearing the burden of our sins in his own body on the tree. "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell [or the grave;] thou wilt not suffer thine Holy One to see corruption; thou wilt show me the path of life; in thy presence is fullness of joy; at thy right hand are pleasures for evermore." Psa. 16: 10, 11.

The prominence given to the resurrection in the New Testament is very remarkable, contrasted with the small place it occupies in modern religious literature; and whence this difference, if not from the circumstance that in the former writings it is regarded in the light we have represented in the foregoing pages—no resurrection, no future or eternal life—while in the latter it is regarded as of comparatively little moment, because the immortality of man's existence, as a conscious being, is altogether independent of his having an organism or bodily constitution. So much so, indeed, that death is regarded, by many, as an emancipation of the soul, or man proper. While our pulpit discourses, and religious publications, from the ponderous, learned volume, to the ephemeral and sentimental novel and rhapsodial hymn, revel in assertions and allusions regarding the eternity of man's future being, the resurrection from the dead is rarely ever mentioned or alluded to.

And herein we see the connection between the common religious belief, regarding human immortality, and the doctrines and beliefs of the Platonic school of heathen philosophy. These heathens wrote and talked much of "the immortality of the soul;" but the resurrection of the dead had no place in their philosophy. It is a strange and a startling fact that, just in proportion as our popular theology approaches the doctrine of Plato, in this respect, it recedes from the teaching of Christ and his apostles. The philosophy of Plato has no need of the resurrection of the dead; but remove that item from the doctrine of the Christ and his apostles, and it crumbles to pieces. "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen; and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and ye are yet in your sins. Then they also who are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. What advantageth it me, if the dead rise not, that I have fought with beasts at Ephesus? [If that be the case] let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die!"

III. The resurrection of life takes place at the coming of the Lord.

The order of resurrection ordained by God is thus stated. "Christ the first-fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming, then cometh [or afterwards, when the thousand years are finished—Rev. 20: 5] the end." —1 Cor. 15: 23.

"The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord."—1 Thess. 4: 16 17.. It was the same solace with which the Lord comforted the sorrowing sisters of Lazarus: "Thy brother shall rise again;" "I am the Resurrection and the Life; he that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth [i. e., is alive at my coming] and believeth in me shall never die."—John 11: 25, 26. How different this from the consolation tendered in these days to the bereaved by many of the spiritual guides of the people!

Thus we see that till the return of the Lord there is neither glory nor reward for the Christian. "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just," said our Lord on one occasion, but this resurrection takes place at his return; and hence we find that the second appearing of Christ was the grand centre on which the hopes and expectations of the early christians were fixed, expressed in words like these: "Our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body."—Phil. 3: 20. "Ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God, and when he who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—Col. 3: 3, 4. "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but to all them also that love his appearing."—2 Tim. 4: 8. And many similar passages which our limits forbid quoting.

Our modern theology reverses all this, by teaching that "the souls of believers are at death made perfect in holiness, and do immediately pass into glory;" so that the return of the Lord, whatever good it may bring to the living peoples of the earth, is of comparatively little moment to the believer; since at death his emancipated spirit wings its way to everlasting bliss. Thus death—the wages of sin—is made to take the Redeemer's place in the hope of the ardent believer; as is but too manifest in the various collections of hymns used by the Protestant assemblies of our country, so much so, indeed, that even when resurrection is the theme, death is celebrated as the deliverer—"The messenger of peace!" The following quotations from our Scotch Paraphrases (a collection of hymns for the most part of a very Scriptural character,) will illustrate our statement:

"Why inconsolable as those
To whom no hope is given?
Death is the messenger of peace,
And calls the soul to heaven."

Again:—

"Cheered by this hope, with patient mind,
I'll wait heaven's high decree,
Till the appointed period come,
When death shall set me free!"

The inversion of the hope of the gospel contained in these lines will at once appear manifest to the reader by his substituting Christ for the word "death." Death—the wages of sin—the expression of Jehovah's utter abhorrence of transgression, is made to take the place of the only begotten Son, who laid down his life for the life of the world! How truly verified are the apostle's words, that the time would come when men would turn away their ears from the truth and be turned towards fables! 2 Tim. 4: 4.

Surely it is time those who know the truth should make it known; that the vain philosophy of heathen sages should be boldly and clearly exposed in the light of God's word; and that the return of the Christ, and the resurrection from the dead, should be held forth as the only hope of the world's deliverance, and the Christian's entrance into glory. —The Rainbow.

A QUIET REST.

My heart hath found a quiet rest
In Him, the holy and the blest;
Who, tortured on the gory tree,
Suffered, and groaned, and died for me.

Why should I doubt his tender love,
Who left for me the joys above?
Enduring poverty and pain,
That I eternal wealth might gain?

Why should I doubt, and shrink, and fear,
When tempted, tried, and troubled here?
No, I will trust that constant Friend,
Who loves his people to the end.

What reck I then, though pierced and stung
By traitorous dart and slanderous tongue—
If on my heart like balm shall fall
His love, a solace 'mid it all?

ROME.

Mr. Robbins, in his History, says that Romulus began the building of Rome; his brother Remus was indeed concerned in the projected undertaking, but a dispute arising between the brothers respecting the place where the city should stand, they had recourse to arms; in consequence of which Remus lost his life. Romulus, only eighteen years of age, was thus left to pursue the enterprise alone. The Palatine hill he fixed as the spot. Robbins, p. 57.

Romulus, desiring to increase the population of his new city, caused a war with those of the adjacent hills, which resulted (says Weber in his History) in a treaty between the two parties; consequently the Sabines, who dwelt on the Capitoline hill, agreed to unite themselves in a single community with those upon the Palatine, and the Etruscans who inhabited the Cælian hill. It was decided further that the Sabine king, Titus Tatius, should share the government, and that a Latin and a Sabine should be elected alternately from the senate to the office of a king.—Weber's History, pp. 69-70. Two kings, who were afterwards chosen by successful wars, enlarged the territory. Four other hills were added to the three before mentioned, and gradually supplied with inhabitants. For this reason Rome is called the "seven-hilled city." See Weber, p. 70.

Although the origin of Rome was upon a single hill, along the Tiber, yet, in the lapse of time, its empire became that of the world; as the reader will discover by reading Luke 2: 1. Augustus Cæsar, emperor of Rome, issued a decree that all the world should be taxed. Read also Millman's Gibbon's History of Rome. But the empire of the Romans filled the world, and when that empire fell into the hands of a single person, the world became a safe and dreary prison for his enemies. The slave of imperial despotism, whether he was condemned to drag his gilded chain in Rome or the senate, or to wear out a life of exile on the barren rock of Seriphus, or the frozen banks of the Danube, expected his fate in silent despair. To resist was fatal, and it was impossible to fly. On every side he was compassed with a vast extent of sea and land, which he could not hope to traverse without being discovered, seized, and restored to his irritated master. Beyond the frontiers, his anxious view discovered nothing except the ocean, inhospitable deserts, hostile tribes of barbarians, of fierce manners and unknown language, or dependent kings, who would gladly purchase the emperor's protection by the sacrifice of an obnoxious fugitive. "Wherever you are," said Cicero to the exiled Marcellus, "remember that you are equally within the power of the conqueror."—Vol. 1, pp. 99, 100.

We think that the foregoing is sufficient proof that Rome became world-wide; but as we follow down the stream of time, we discover that her subjects became dissatisfied with her government, consequently revolt after revolt followed. The following are the different tribes that broke off from Rome, as given by Bishop Lloyd: Huns, about A. D. 356, in Hungary. Ostrogoths, A. D. 377. Visigoths, A. D. 378. Franks, A. D. 407, in France. Vandals, A. D. 407, in Africa. Sueves and Alans, A. D. 407. Burgundians, A. D. 407, in Burgundy. Heruli, A. D. 476, in Italy. Saxons, A. D. 476, in Britain.

Then Rome no longer retained the right of giving law to the world. We follow down to 1859-60, where we discover but a fragment of a once powerful empire. Read the following from Mr. Baxter: "In 1859-60, Victor Emanuel, the present king of United Italy, reduced the Pope's Italian provinces to one quarter of their former dimensions; where were previously two million inhabitants in the Papal dominions, there are now left but half a million, since the three provinces of the Marshesumbra and Viterbo were annexed to Victor Emanuel's kingdom. In a protest addressed from the Vatican, Sept. 18th, 1860, to the members of the diplomatic corps in Rome, the Pope complains that he has seen nearly all the States, which are the patrimony of the church, torn away from him, bit by bit. See Baxter's Armageddon.

The Philadelphia Catholic Standard, published Nov. 2nd, 1867, gives the following square miles and population of the Roman States from 1859-1867: In 1859—Square miles, 15,429; Population, 2,898,115. In 1867—Square miles, 4,520; Population, 700,000.

I will here conclude by saying that Rome to-day is in such a condition that we may reasonably look for her final end at any time. God hasten the time, when the angel shall cry mightily with a strong voice, saying, "Babylon [or Rome] the great city is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and the cage of every unclean and hateful bird."—Rev. 18: 1, 2. THOS. J. WHITECAR.

SCENE AT THE DECLARATION OF THE POPE'S INFALLIBILITY.

We insert the following, from the Scottish Amer. Journal, by particular request.—ED.

Describing the scene on the occasion of the adoption of the decree, on July 18th, of Papal infallibility by the Ecumenical Council, the Roman correspondent of the Times, writing on July 19th, says:—"The reading of the dogma was followed by the roll-call of the Fathers, and 'Placet' after 'Placet' followed though not in very quick succession. They were uttered in louder and bolder tones than on former occasions, either that the echo was greater from the comparative emptiness of the Church, or that the Fathers were pleased at being shorn, and amid their utterances there was a loud peal of thunder. The storm, which had been threatening all the morning, burst now with the utmost violence, and to many a superstitious mind might have conveyed the idea that it was the expression of Divine wrath, as 'no doubt it will be interpreted by numbers,' said one officer of the Palatine Guard. And so the 'Placets' of the Fathers struggled through the storm, while the thunder pealed above and the lightning flashed in at every window and down through the dome and every smaller cupola, dividing if not absorbing the attention of the crowd. 'Placet' shouted his eminence or his Grace, and a loud clap of thunder followed in response, and then the lightning darted about the Baldacchino and every part of the Church and Conciliar hall, as if announcing the response. So it continued for nearly one hour and a half, during which time the roll was being called, and a more effective scene I never witnessed. Had all the decorators and all the getters-up of ceremonies in Rome been employed, nothing approaching to the solemn splendor of that storm could have been prepared, and never will those who saw it and felt it forget the promulgation of the first dogma of the Church. The storm was at its height when the result of the voting was taken up to the Pope, and the darkness was so thick that a huge taper was necessarily brought and placed by his side as he read the words which invested him with divine powers, 'nosque sacro approbante Concilio, illa ita accernimus, statuimus atque saucimus in lecta sunt.' And again the lightning flickered around the hall, and the thunder pealed. I was standing at this moment in the south transept, trying to penetrate the darkness which surrounded the Pope, when the sound as of a mighty rushing something, I could not tell what, caused me to start violently, and look about me and above me. It might be a storm of hail. Such for an instant was my impression; and it grew and swelled, and then the whole mystery was revealed by a cloud of white handkerchiefs waving before me. The signal had been given by the Fathers themselves with clapping of hands. This was my imaginary hailstorm; and it was taken up by the crowd outside the hall, and so the storm grew in violence, until at length it came to where I stood; 'Viva il Papa Infallible.' 'Viva il trionfo dei Catholici,' shouted the zealots. But again the storm rose with greater violence than before, and I thought that, according to English custom we were to have three times three. The Te Deum and the Benedictions, however, put a stop to it; the entire crowd fell on their knees, as I have never seen a crowd do before in St. Peter's, and the Pope blessed them in those clear sweet tones distinguishable among a thousand. A third and fainter attempt was made to get up another cheer, but it died away, and then priests and priestlings, monks and holy women, rushed down the nave to get, perchance, another peep at the Pope as he passed through the chapels, but the doors were closed, and the infallible was hidden from mortal view. Thus closed the session of the Ecumenical Vatican Council for the present, not prorogued nor suspended, to meet again on the 11th of November."

The two bishops who voted non placet at the public sitting of the Ecumenical Council when the dogma of Infallibility was proposed, were Monsignor Louis Riccio, Bishop of Casazzo, in Southern Italy, and Monsignor E. Fitzgerald, Bishop of Petticola, or Little Rock, in the United States. Of the French prelates, ten archbishops and thirty-five bishops protested by their absence against the dogma; while eight archbishops and forty-three bishops voted in its favor. • • • • •

Before leaving, as most have done, the recusant Fathers signed a letter to the Pope, which was drawn up at Cardinal Rauscher's. Upwards of a hundred (the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung says 115) of the highest digaitaries of the Church, including at least three Cardinals, men eminent for their rank, talents, and learning, refused to attend the Council, and by their last act and deed withheld their sanction of the dogma. The signers of the protest say:—

"It is known to your Holiness that there were 83 Fathers who, being moved by their own consciences and the love of Holy Church, gave their votes in the words 'non placet' (No); 62 others who voted 'placet juxta modum' (Yes, but with necessary amendments;) and about 70 more who were absent from the congregation, and abstained from voting at all. To these may be added others who had returned to their dioceses in consequence of their infirmities or other weighty reasons. In this way our opinions were made manifest to your Holiness and to the whole world. It was shown how many Bishops approved of our views, and we discharged the duty and burden which were laid upon us. Since that date nothing has occurred to alter our views in any way, but many things of the most serious nature which have confirmed us therein. Accordingly, we hereby declare that we renew and confirm the votes which we have already publicly given. And further, as by this writing, we confirm the views which we formerly expressed, we have resolved to absent ourselves from the public session which is to be held on the 18th of this month. For that filial piety and reverence which brought us so lately to the feet of your Holiness forbid us from saying openly, and in the face of our father, 'non placet,' in a cause which so nearly concerns your Holiness's person. The votes which we do not give in the general congregation we shall have to repeat from other quarters of the world under the gravest responsibility. We return, therefore, without delay to our flocks, to whom, after so prolonged an absence, our presence is most necessary on account of their fears of war and their most pressing spiritual wants, mourning the certainty that we shall find the peace and tranquillity of the consciences of our faithful disturbed by the melancholy circumstances in which we stand. Meanwhile commending with our whole heart to the grace and protection of our Lord Jesus Christ, the church of God and your Holiness, to whom we profess our inviolable fidelity and obedience, we are your Holiness's most devoted and most obedient servants."

We repeat the text of the declaration of infallibility:

DECLARATION.

"Faithfully following out the tradition which goes back to the beginning of our Christian faith for the glory of God our Saviour, the exaltation of the Catholic religion, and the salvation of the nations of Christendom, we teach and define, with the approval of the sacred council, that the following dogma has been divinely revealed:—That the Roman Pontiff, when speaking ex cathedra—that is to say, when, in his office of pastor and teacher of all christians, and by virtue of his supreme apostolic authority, he declares that a doctrine on faith or morals ought to be held by the universal Church,—is in full possession, by the divine assistance which has been promised him as the successor of the blessed Peter, of that infallibility which the Divine Redeemer willed should dwell in his church whenever it declares its doctrine of faith or of morals; and, consequently, that such declarations by the Roman Pontiff are in themselves, and not in virtue of the consent of the church, incapable of any emendation. And if any one—which may God forbid!—should venture to contravene this our declaration, let him be anathema!"

— The rays of the sun shine upon the dust and the mud, but they are not soiled by them. So a holy soul, while it remains holy, may mingle with the vileness of the world, and yet be pure in itself.

KIND WORDS.—What is more effective in winning friends than kind words? That ruler fears not the usurpation of his throne, while he addresses his subordinates with words of kindness. Go to that farmer, who always gets the highest price for his produce, and ever meets with a ready sale; and nine times out of ten he is a man of kind words. So that if policy only were our principle, it were far better to "let our words be always with love." They are the garb of thought, without which thought would die unclothed and undeveloped.

Gems.

— Men's lives should be like the day, more beautiful in the evening; or like the summer, aglow with promise; and the autumn, rich with the golden sheaves, where good work and deeds have ripened on the field.

— Except in nature's wonderfully high virtue becomes languid, and faith's occasion is gone, when the soul does not intensely feel its need of emergence into a higher state.

— Teach nothing but the truth of God, because nothing but that will save souls.

— The deeper the sense of sin, the sweeter is forgiveness, the more glorious He who saves us.

— Sin has many tools, but a lie is the handle which fits them all.

— The brook Cherith dried up when most wanted. So with all earthly comforts—we lose them when we most need them; but there is a river which never runs dry, a well of water springing up into everlasting life.

— God will accept your first attempts to serve him, not as a perfect work, but as a beginning. The first little blades of wheat are as pleasant to the farmer's eyes as the whole field waving with grain.

— Make no more vain resolutions, but proceed at once to duty. Know your weakness, trust and pray. God will help you through and give you patience.

— Do the Lord's work in the Lord's time; pray while God hears, hear while God speaks, believe while God promises, obey while God commands.

— We may travel the world over to find the beautiful; but we must carry it with us, or we shall not find it.

— A good word is an easy obligation; but not to speak ill requires only our silence, which costs nothing.

ABSURDITY OF TIGHT LACING.

There would be no tight lacing if girls could be made to understand this simple fact—that men dread the thought of marrying a woman who is subject to fits of irritable temper, to bad headaches, and other ailments we need not mention, all of which, everybody knows, are the direct and inevitable product of the compression of the waist. Men like to see a small waist, certainly, but there is a very great difference between the waist which is well-formed and in proportion to the rest of the figure, and a waist which is obviously and artificially compressed, to the destruction of that easy and graceful carriage which is one of the chief charms of a woman's appearance. An unnaturally compressed waist is far more certain of detection than a mass of false hair or a faint dusting of violet powder. If the young lady who, to obtain the appearance of a dragon-fly, has been subjecting herself to considerable physical pain, and who has been laying up for herself a pretty store of ailments, which only want time to pronounce themselves, could only see the stare of scarcely-disguised contempt, and understand the scornful pity which greet the result of her labor, we should have a change of the fashion—and it is merely a fashion. There is nothing intrinsically beautiful in an unnaturally small waist, and if it were the fashion to go into the opposite extreme, women would see beauty in padded waists.

It is a great misfortune that popular taste never alters in this as it alters in other matters. Through all changes women remain true to only one fashion. Whether her clothing is as long and lank as that of a Grecian virgin, or whether she builds around the lower half of her figure a rotund and capacious structure of steel, she is forever faithful to the tradition of a small waist; and she will weaken her circulation, make her hands red, incur headache, crack her voice, and ruin her digestion, all to produce a malformation which wise men regard with pity and fools with derision.—London Atheneum.

WHY WE SHOULD WEAR BEARDS.

There are more solid inducements for wearing the beard than the mere improvement of a man's personal appearance and the cultivation of such an aid to the every-day diplomacy of life. Nature combining, as she never fails to do, the useful with the ornamental, provides us with a far better respirator than science could ever make, and one that is never so hideous to wear as that black seal upon the face that looks like a passport to the realms of suffering and death. The hair of the mustache not only absorbs the moisture and miasma of the fogs, but it strains the air from the dust and soot of our great cities. It acts also in the most scientific manner, by taking heat from the warm breath as it leaves the chest, and supplying it to the cold air taken in. It is not only a respirator, but with the beard entire we are provided with a comforter as well; and these are never left at home, like the umbrellas and all such appliances whenever they are wanted. Livingstone and Moffat, the African explorers, and many other travelers, say that in the night no wrapper can equal the beard. The remarkable thing is, too, that the beard, like the hair of the head, protects against the heat of the sun; but, more than this, it becomes moist with the perspiration, and then, by evaporation, cools the skin. A man who accepts this protection of Nature may face the rudest storm and the hardest winter. He may go from the hottest room into the coldest air without any dread; and we verily believe he might sleep in a morass with impunity—at least his chance of escaping the terrible fever would be better than his beardless companion's.—Health Reformer.

The editors of the "Herald of Health" propose to commence in the Nov. number of that magazine, a series of articles upon the temperance movement. The series will embrace ten or twelve papers, and continue during a considerable portion of the year 1871. The most important of the following subjects will be discussed:

Significance of the Temperance Movement.
The effects of the use of Intoxicating Drinks on the Body, the Brain, and the Blood.
Its effects on Offspring.
Its effects on Religion.
Its effects on Literature.
Its effects on National Integrity (including Politics.)
Moderate Drinking.
The Wine Question.
Mistakes of Temperance Reformers.
Total Abstinence.
Alcoholic Medication.
Relation of the use of Intoxicating Drinks to Poverty and Crime.
Restricting the sale of Alcoholic Beverages.
Ministers and the Temperance Reform.
Physicians and the Temperance Reform.
Moral Responsibility of Liquor Dealers.
How best to promote the Cause of Temperance.

FOOD.—Food for the stomach is watched by the sentinels: sight, taste, smell, and touch. Food for the lungs is unguarded. We take what we can get. The chest expands, and air, good or bad, flows in, and does its work upon the centre of vitality. Many people only know it is bad when they gasp.

Food for the lungs compels the process by which food for the stomach becomes blood. We all feel this need of æration after a hearty meal. The most luxurious feasts without this precious gift of air to complete digestion, are a mockery. The rights of oxydation being denied us, we are miserable though every other imaginable good thing be provided for our entertainment. Food for the stomach is often taken in excess; food for the lungs cannot be—those in most perfect health feel need of the most bountiful supply.

DAMP CELLARS.—The Builder quotes from the remarks of a Mr. Stetson, before the American Institute, the following on damp cellars: "It does not always happen, however, that a house with a moist foundation is an unhealthy house. I know a house in New England which is built over a spring of clear water, and the health of the inhabitants of that house has always been remarkably good. If I wished to render that house malarious, I will tell you how I would do it: I would dam up that spring so as to have stagnant water in the cellar; I would plant trees all around, so as to prevent the light of the sun from ever reaching the house, and I would build high and tight fences all round, so as to cut off all circulation of air. Then I think I should have succeeded in making the house unhealthy."

PLEDGE OF THE TRY COMPANY.

We, the Undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to abstain from Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, and all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage.

THE EUPHRATES.

Near the top of one of the mountains of Armenia, three little rivulets spring forth out of the ground, not far from each other. After running for a time over rocks and through glens, the three unite into one stream, which takes the name of the Euphrates. "It then enters what was anciently called the land of Mesopotamia; and, as it wanders through this luxuriant region, its banks are like one continued garden, brilliant with scarlet and white poppies, blue larkspurs, anemones, jonquils, and tulips of various hues; while beyond are vineyards and olive-yards, with orchards of apricot, mulberry, and almond trees."

Soon after the Euphrates leaves this pleasant land, it winds its way across a large plain, called, in the Bible, "the plain of Shinar" and "the land of Chaldea." Here groves of graceful palm-trees wave their leaves over its waters; while, in the rich soil near its banks, corn is cultivated almost without labor. After leaving the palm-trees and the corn-fields, the Euphrates joins another large river, called the Tigris; and the united waters flow on till they fall into that part of the ocean named the Persian Gulf.—Children's Guest.

SAYING AND DOING.

Mattie and May "keep house" together,
Mother dearest has gone far away;
Lonely the home, though 'tis Spring's brightest weather,
Pleasant for work and for play.

Tasks are set for the little one's getting,
Labors light for their small hands to do;
And now do you think there is use in fretting,
For feeling, as Mattie says, "homesick and blue"

All day long she watches the door,
For the postman appearing in coat of gray.
"May," she says, "I love mamma more Than you do, working and singing away."

Two tears sparkle 'neath little May's lashes,
But "Haste to the pudding for papa," she sings,
And, like an old cook, to the mixing she dashes,
"Don't you know to be busy will give the time wings?"

Idly for Mattie, go by the dull hours,
Enemies grim she thinks them to be,
While for dear May they are crowned with hope's flowers;
And what says the letter that comes o'er the sea?

"Who loves me best, I shall know, little daughters,
The one who most patiently waits for mamma;
And it gladdens me dearly across the wide waters,
To think how my darlings take care of papa.

"Yes, I shall see when I come from my straying,
Who loves me well, though I never am told;
For love is best shown by a quiet obeying;
Words may be silver, but deeds are as gold."

Bright Side.

A QUEER MISSIONARY-BOX.

In a New York Sabbath school, the scholars through the week collect money for the missionary-work, and on Sunday bring it to the teachers.

In a certain class, one of the boys was very poor, and could not buy a fine box with gilt letters such as the other boys had. But a box of some kind he would have; and then he would gather what money he could.

On Monday, he found an ox-horn. On this some friend put the following lines:—

"Once I was the horn of an ox;
But now I am a missionary-box."

With this he started out, and would say to every one he met, "Missionary-money, please, sir?" Next Sunday, he had more money than all the other boys together.

This shows what can be done if a scholar is in earnest. The will makes the way. Work earnestly for Christ. Gather and give.—The Child's Treasury.

A GOOD WOMAN, who had been to the house of God, was met on her way home by a friend, who asked her if the sermon was done. "No," she replied: it is all said; it has yet to be done."

LOVE is the golden thread that runs through the gospel,—God's love to us, ours to him, and one to another.

IN THE NIGHT.

My Father! 'tis a dreary night,
The storm clouds, thick and fast,
Are rising o'er my lonely way,
And threatening shadows cast.

Oh, Father! 'tis a weary night;
Long have I toiled, and sad
Have been my songs, inwove with tears,
When other hearts were glad.

Say, Father! will it always last?
Can Hope not soar away,
And rest her drooping pinions where
There shines a brighter day?

Have patience, child, I rule the storm,
And watch the lightning's track,
I know that tempests o'er thee roll,
And thunders answer back.

Be patient; soon with mighty power
I'll roll the curse away,
And lead thee to a realm of joy.
Where living fountains play.

There, fleeing o'er the outmost bound,
All sorrows thence are driven,
The captive exile hastens home,
And peace for storms is given.

Then shall thy songs of sadness swell
To hymns of rapturous praise,
All earth shall echo to the strains
My ransomed host shall raise.

SLEEP: THE AWAKING.

BY O. R. FASSETT.

"As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness." Ps. 17: 15.

The patriarch Job had no faith in the popular superstition of the heathen world in his day, that the dead were roaming about in restless activity; nor in "the transmigration of souls." In view of death he says: "I should have lain still, and been quiet; I should have slept; then had I been at rest. . . There the wicked cease from troubling; and there the weary be at rest."—Job 3: 13–19.

Fitch, the German philosopher, thinks otherwise—that he will not rest while in the sleep of death. "That which men call death cannot interrupt my work, for my work must be finished; consequently no limit is appointed to my being, and I am immortal. I have comprehended my destiny; it is continuous, it is eternal, and I am immortal."

It is one thing to affirm one's self immortal, and quite another to prove it, either by reason, philosophy, or Scripture. But we inquire, Does not sleep "interrupt" one's work? Or does a man carry on his work and business while asleep? Most men, I think, cease their work while asleep, if some others do not. And if sleep "interrupts" a man's work, will not the sleep of death interrupt it? Fitch thinks his "work must be finished," therefore "death cannot interrupt it." But the Preacher, with words of greater "wisdom" and "upright words of truth" (Eccl. 12: 10: 11), has said, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest."—Eccl. 9: 10. Jesus said, at the close of his earthly ministry, "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do."—John 17: 4. And expiring on the cross he cried out, "It is finished." John 19: 30. His immortal work, which is "continuous" and "uninterrupted," begins on his resurrection from the dead, and not while he is dead. St. Paul, at the close of his earthly history and active and useful life, declares: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." And he contemplates that after an interruption of his activities in the Lord's service, until the day of judgment, he would then begin the work of the immortal state; hence he adds, "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."—2 Tim. 4: 6–8. The work assigned for the immortal condition is that connected with his being a king, ruling with his Lord in his kingdom. Rev. 1: 5, 6; 3: 21; 5: 9, 10. He has not apprised us of the work or condition of the intermediate state, save that "if the dead rise not at all," the future is no object of hope or desire. 1 Cor. 15.

And such is the testimony of the ancient patriarch Job. He affirms that "man lieth down, and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." And in view of this fact (for he "comprehended" his "destiny" as well, I think, and better than did the German philosopher), he prays the Lord most earnestly, "O that thou wouldest hide me in the grave, that thou wouldest keep me secret, until thy wrath be past; that thou wouldest appoint me a set time and remember me." And his hope cannot be obscured by any modern attempt to mystify and pervert it. Job 14, and 19: 23–27.

The comatose state of a person in a fainting fit, or produced by an injury to the brain, is one of unconsciousness. What must be the condition of one in the death of the brain and its entire destruction? Will it be of greater mental activity and power? It is most unreasonable, and even absurd in the extreme, to suppose this.

"Mr. Frederick Seward, who was felled by a blow upon his head by the butt of the pistol of Payne, which fractured his skull—the pistol having first missed fire—put his hand to his head, and finding a hole there, he thought—'That cap did not miss fire.' Then he became insensible and remained so for two days. His first question was, 'Have you got the ball out?' then fell off into a comatose state again, of long continuance.

"On the afternoon of the day President Lincoln was assassinated, preparations had been made for the presentation of Sir Frederick Bruce the next day. Mr. Frederick Seward's first inquiry after coming fully to consciousness, which was a long time after the assassination, was, 'Has Sir Frederick Bruce been presented?' He thought only one night had passed! And his mind took up matters just where it had left them."

So writes a correspondent who interviewed Mr. Seward on his recovery.

"During the late war of the Rebellion, a soldier had a ball penetrate the skull in such a manner as to cause immediate insensibility by its pressure. He remained in this condition of insensibility for nearly a year. The ball was finally removed by an operating surgeon in the University of Pennsylvania, when immediately his sensibility returned. He then began to ask where he was; where his comrades were; who were killed; who escaped; and how the battle was going. And the fact was commented on by the Professor, that the soldier believed himself to be then upon the battle-field, that the battle was then progressing around him, and that he himself had been wounded only a few moments before. Thus proving that to him this period of insensibility had been one of entire unconsciousness."—Baptist.

Some have questioned Martin Luther's opinion respecting the state of the dead; but the following incident related by him should put to silence all unbelief as to what he thought. On the death of John, Elector of Saxony, who died of apoplexy, Luther said:

"God has caused that to happen to the Elector, as to new-born infants who first live and then die. When he shall be raised again, he will think that he has just come from the hunting ground."

Luther's apologist says—against the many aspersions cast upon him from every quarter—"He, with many fathers of the ancient church, believed the dead lay in profound rest and sleep."

Sir Thomas Moore objected to Luther because he held, as he said, "that all souls lye and sleep till domes-day." And he further vents his spite against him and his doctrine by the senseless remark, "What shall he care how long he lives in sin, that believeth Luther, that he shall after this life feel neither good nor evil in body nor soul until the day of dome?" Fuerdentius vents his spleen also in falsely defining Luther's position and faith, with many of his brethren, thus: "I call most Lutherans new Sadducees, who, when they read in Luther's Comments that the dead so sleep as to know and feel nothing, and say that the soul of man dies with the body."

This is with as much honesty, or ignorance, to say the least, as the charge made against the Adventists of this our day, by certain professedly orthodox and evangelical writers, that they are "modern Sadducees." Does not this class of writers know that there is a wide difference between believing in the resurrection of the dead, and "that there is no resurrection"? (Matt. 22: 23); between believing in a future life, and in no future existence whatever? Acts 23: 8.

The Sadducees discarded the doctrine of "the soul's immortality," it is true, as not being found in the word of God, but incorporated into the faith of the Pharisees by their tradition; and in this they had the truth; but because Luther believed with the Sadducees in one particular, and held with them a common faith as to that error by which the Pharisees "made void the word of God," and nullified the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead,—did that one point of agreement make him out a Sadducee? or Adventists, who hold with Luther, "modern Sadducees"? Let there be a little more honesty on the part of religious writers and speakers, or intelligence, if that be the deficiency in the case.

Enfield says: "The Sadducees arose about two hundred years before Christ. The Sadducees treated the traditionary law of the Pharisees with contempt, and adhered to the written law. The Sadducean tenets were these: 'All laws and traditions, not comprehended in the written law, are to be rejected as merely human inventions. Neither angels nor spirits have a distinct existence separate from the corporeal vestment. The soul of man, therefore, does not remain after this life, but expires with the body. There will be no resurrection of the dead, nor any rewards and punishments after this life.' They denied the resurrection of the dead, yea, all future existence."—Enfield, p. 170.

"The Sadducees did not believe in any future state."—Conybeare & Hauson.

Calvin, who once believed with Luther concerning the sleep of the dead, afterward renounced the faith and returned to the traditionary doctrine of the Pharisees, and became "hot, furious, and abusive." "The hypnologists," as he calls them, "are babblers, madmen, dreamers, drunkards," etc. And this reminds us of some who in our day pattern after the example and spirit of that reformer. "Calvin published a pamphlet in 1534, called 'Psychopannychia,' by which is signified that the soul wakes throughout the night of death with all the consciousness and sensibility necessary to the enjoyment of happiness." "Soul sleepers," "soul slayers," "psychotomists," are the charitable names he gives to his contemporary brethren of the faith he attempts to destroy.

Wesley regarded the soul an immaterial entity of itself, existing during the night of death in some ante-chamber, but not having gone to heavenly rewards; and speaks of its incapability to so enjoy or experience them until the resurrection. He says in his Sermon on the "Fall of Man": "The soul cannot dispense with the service of the body, imperfect as it is; for an embodied spirit cannot form one thought, but by the mediation of its bodily organs. For thinking is not, as many suppose, the act of a pure spirit, but the act of a spirit connected with a body, and playing upon a set of material keys. It cannot possibly, therefore, make any better music than the nature and state of its instruments will allow."

Thus Wesley gives to the "immaterial" soul a bodily entity in the intermediate state, as necessary to a condition of consciousness. The facts and arguments and illustrations should be observed, though the proof of such a bodily entity of an "immaterial spirit" is wanting.

In common with this is the declaration that "man has a spirit entity which survives in death," and that the resurrection and future life are dependent upon this. This position is taken to avoid the reproach and the objections speciously urged against the "materialistic" view. But where in the Scriptures is such a doctrine taught? The future existence of man is not dependent upon "a spirit entity preserved in death, but upon the existence of Christ, a quickening Spirit, and the resurrection from the dead. In fact, death is a terrible solemnity which has befallen man, completing his entire dissolution and destruction. If, therefore, he again lives eternally, it will be by virtue of the mercy and grace of God, and the salvation in the Savior and Redeemer of the world.

A remark of Paley is to the point, meeting the objection of the loss of "the continuity of life," or of the spirit's conscious existence in death. In his Natural Theology he says: "That grand point, the resurrection of the human dead, might appear hopeless, did we not see the power at work adequate to the effect; but I admit it is first necessary to be persuaded that there is a God to do so. This being settled, there seems to be nothing in this process which need to shock our belief. They who have taken up the opinion that the acts of the human mind depend on organization, are supposed to find greater difficulty than others do, in admitting a transition by death to a new state of sentient existence, because the old organization is apparently dissolved. But I do not see that any impracticability need be apprehended even by these."

Here Paley bases the future existence of mankind just where St. Paul did—in "God and the resurrection." Acts 26: 6–8; 1 Cor. 15, and 2 Cor. 1: 9, 10.

Bishop Whately meets the objection as to the imaginary tediousness and dreariness of the time allotted to those who sleep in death, which we heartily transcribe.

"One objection to the reception of this supposition—an objection which affects the imagination, though not the understanding—is, that it seems as if there were a tedious and dreary interval of non-existence to be passed by such as should be supposed to sleep, perhaps for some thousands of years, which might elapse between their death and the end of the world. The imagination represents a wearisome length of time which those that sleep in Christ would have to wait for his final coming to reward them. We fancy it hard that they should be lost to the world and to themselves, destitute of enjoyments to both of this life and to the next, and continuing for so many ages as if they never had been born; such, I say, are the pictures which the imagination draws. But when we view things by the light of the understanding, they present a very different aspect.

Reason tells us that a long and short space of time are exactly the same to the person who is insensible. When any one loses his consciousness (as in the case of a fainting fit, or the recovery from drowning, suffocation, apoplexy, or the like), he not only does not perceive the length of the interval between the loss of his consciousness and the return of it, but there is (to him) no such interval; the moment at which he totally lost his sensibility seems (and is to him) immediately succeeded by the moment in which he regains it (as illustrated in cases of a person having been sound asleep also); the moment of his waking shall appear to him immediately to succeed that of falling asleep. And the contrast of passing a night of restlessness,—how insufferably tedious a single night! how enormously long the interval between the times of clock-striking! how one seems to feel as if the morning would never arrive!

The long, dreary interval, then, between death and the day of judgment (suffering the intermediate state to be a profound sleep), does not exist at all, except in the imagination. To the party concerned there is no interval whatever; but to each person (according to this supposition) the moment of his closing his eyes in death will be instantly succeeded by the sound of the last trumpet, which shall summon the dead; even though ages shall have intervened."

Such a view, with all the objections urged against it, and all the arguments raised to oppose it, to me seems both reasonable and consistent, as well as scriptural; while the "immaterialistic" view destroys the hope of the resurrection, or makes it non-essential.

LIGHT.

When spiritual light is received in the human soul, how changed are the purposes and desires of life. We are not then as the barren fig-tree, putting forth leaves, yet bearing no fruit for the Master's use; cumberers of the ground; yea, worse than idlers in the vineyard.

We, who are God's children, have the glorious light; we received it through Jesus Christ. His light shineth around and through us. We have not this light of ourselves, but as the moon and other planets receive their light from the sun, so we receive ours from God. Light is always connected in our minds with truth; darkness and truth are incompatible. Let us then strive to bear in mind, though enjoying this light, that we must not become careless, lest we wander from it, become bewildered and lost. We must come unto the light by prayer; and by keeping close to our Guide, we shall be enabled to keep in the path of righteousness all the way along. We must expect to encounter dangers and difficulties; so we are consequently in absolute need of a light for our feet, which is furnished by our living Savior.

The sun supports a relation to our world, like that held by Jehovah to the christian. The Psalmist says, "The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear?" Again he says, "Light is sown for the righteous." Let us then be thankful that our eyes have been opened to see that marvelous light which we received through Christ; for Luke tells us He is the light of the world. "For ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light."—Eph. 5: 8.

God help us to so live that our light may shine for his honor and glory. May we never put it under a bushel, but may its radiance spread for the salvation of those who are on the road that leads to outer darkness.

Wilmington, Del. CYRUS MENDENHALL.

"BE WATCHFUL."

Is the message which sounds forth from the word of God like an alarm cry, bursting upon the stillness of the midnight air, or like the sonorous bugle-blast rousing a nation to arms in defence of its imperiled rights?

"Be watchful," oh! ye that sleep in Zion, and awake from the lethargy of sin, into which Satan had tempted you to fall.

Watch! WATCH! WATCH!

How the word rings and re-echoes throughout the teachings of our Lord and of his apostles, impressing every thoughtful mind with the supreme importance of his duty—a duty which (to be candid) we must confess ourselves to have sadly neglected, and one which we are in great danger of continuing to neglect, unless we cry mightily unto God for a new and powerful baptism of his Holy Spirit. Two special reasons may be mentioned in proof of the necessity of watchfulness:

1. The coming of the Son of Man. Since we know not when he will come, it follows that they who would make sure of being ready, go forth and meet him, must keep their lamps always burning. Our Lord has left the earth only for a season; measured by human standards of comparison, it may appear a long, long time; but when his plans have ripened, he will come again, as he told his disciples, and for that coming it behooves us to watch now more closely than ever, since the signs are rapidly multiplying, which, according to his predictions, would herald the near approach of that august event.

We may, it is true, and probably shall go hence by the natural way of dissolution, as all the members of Adam's race, with two exceptions, have gone before us; yet, who can tell?

That which has been is not always that which shall be. In either case the part of true wisdom is, to "watch unto prayer" for the moment when we shall be summoned to stand face to face with God.

But there is a second reason for watchfulness, viz.: That we are passing through an enemy's country; foes are around us on every side.

With what ceaseless vigilance was it necessary for the Prussians to watch against open or insidious attacks from the French soldiery or peasantry while they were prosecuting their march to Paris! On the outskirts of the vast encampment where the troops bivouac for the night, see the sentinels pacing up and down their beats with muskets in hand, ready to fire at the first signal of alarm; see how they peer into the darkness and how closely they listen to every sound, even the slightest noise; and if footsteps are heard, how quickly is the passer-by challenged and compelled, at peril of his life, to stand until he give the countersign. Such is the eternal vigilance which must be observed, if an army is to avoid surprise and capture when invading hostile territory.

To illustrate the point a little further: Who believes that Prussia could have gained such a signal and speedy victory over France if she had not long been preparing for the struggle, if she had not kept a good look-out night and day for the first movement toward war on the part of the French emperor? Ah, yes' it was that incessant "Watch on the Rhine," of which the Germans are now singing as their song of triumph; it was that which kept them ready at a moment's notice to march to the defence of home and fatherland.

Just so it is with the Christian army in their struggle against the hosts of sin; so, likewise, with the individual believer in his personal contests with the powers of darkness.

He is surrounded by those who are adversaries to his soul. Sometimes they attack him with bold, defiant front; at other times they lie in ambush, ready to pour upon him a withering fire from masked batteries; or, yet again, they disguise themselves to appear as friends and strive to win the heart by treachery.

"Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breast-plate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation and the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God; praying always with all prayer and supplication in the spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance."

In these stirring words of Paul, so full of martial fire, we find the climax reached in the final clause—watching thereunto with all perseverance; showing the supreme necessity of keeping on one's guard, even when one has the best of armor about him, and the most effective weapons in his hands. Without persevering vigilance all these will prove of little or no value. Therefore, "what I say unto you I say unto all, watch."—Chris. at Work.

OUR SAVIOR'S SECOND COMING.

In the plainest and most striking manner has Divine Revelation brought before our view the "second coming" of our Savior, describing it as connected with an exhibition of the greatest grandeur, power, majesty, terror, and glory.

It is an event of conspicuous prominence in the sacred volume, and demands our most careful and serious consideration. Where can we find a more sublime theme of contemplation, than that which exhibits the Son of man, the Lord of glory, descending from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, revealed in flaming fire, attended with all his mighty angels, seated on the throne of his glory, calling the dead from their tombs, changing the living, pouring a flood of vengeance upon those who know not God, and who obey not his gospel, and bestowing the unfading crown of righteousness on a multitude that no man can number, redeemed from every kindred, tongue, people, and nation.

It is an event which deeply concerns every living soul; a scene which will be witnessed with triumphant joy, or indescribable terror. With our minds solemnized as expectants of that glory which shall be revealed at the coming of Christ, let us, in the light of God's word, and with eager, joyous expectation, contemplate the coming of our Master, when "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise."

In his beautiful and touching valedictory discourse to his disciples, on the eve of his suffering, our Savior graciously assured them that he was going to provide a place for them in his Father's house, and that he would come again, and receive them to himself, that they might be with him and behold his glory.

The doctrine of a general resurrection of the righteous and the wicked, at the last day and of judgment, when all must render up their final account, with joy or grief, is most clearly taught in the Bible. "The hour is coming in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." "For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil." Then should we not often seriously think of the second coming of Christ, and the solemnities of the day of general judgment, while at the same time we study to live with a wise reference to that final account we must render to the great Judge? And as we know not the precise period of his coming—neither do the angels, none but the Father—we should "watch, therefore; for we know not the hour when our Lord doth come." He will certainly come with power, with absolute authority. The same almighty voice that spake the universe into existence, will sound through the mansions of all graves. What a solemn thought!

Not only with great power will he come, but with great glory. And of the glory of Jesus no human tongue can properly speak; it is a subject too vast for us to understand. On the mount of transfiguration, the disciples got a glimpse of the glory of our Savior, when "his face shone as the sun." When but a single angel appeared at his resurrection, we are told his countenance was as lightning, and for fear of him the keepers shook and became as dead men. . . . .

Oh, what a multitude of thoughts crowd into the mind as we contemplate with our feeble imagination the august presence of Christ, and think of the two destinies that await the teeming of our race. How unceasing and earnest should every christian work for the salvation of souls. How Christ-like should we strive to be. How closely should we tread in the footsteps of our blessed Redeemer, and make our lives written epistles of him, known and read of all men. "For the time is come, that judgment must begin at the house of God; and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel? And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" 1 Pet. 4: 17, 18.

Let us constantly pray, that "the trial of our faith, being much more precious than of gold, that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, may be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ, whom having not seen, we love, in whom though now we see him not, yet believing, we rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, receiving the end of our faith, even the salvation of our souls."—Earnest Christian.

MEDITATION 51.

From the depths of afflictions we see stupendous things.

Will any man think the philosopher mad for going into a profound pit, that there he may see to more advantage the furniture of the higher heavens, the glory of the sparkling stars? Seeing that meaner objects being hindered to strike his eye, nothing but what is high, luminous, and bright, beam into the bottom of the dark abode. Even so the saints, when shut up in the deeps of afflictions, "when set in dark places as the dead, when hedged about that they cannot get out," have their eyes on God alone, who can bring them out of the horrible pit, out of the miry clay. Then their thoughts ascend to heaven, and heaven shines down into their souls; while the world, in all its glittering vanities that strike the carnal eye, is cut off on every side. A communication is opened between God and the soul: "To this man will I look, even to him that is poor, and of a contrite spirit," a spirit broken with affliction; yea, with such he will dwell, to revive the hearts of the contrite ones.

Again, in the dark night of adversity, there are beauties seen that were never seen in the broad day of prosperity. Manasseh, all the time he reigned in Judah, though it was a land of light, never knew God till he was taken among the thorns, bound in fetters, and carried to Babylon, where he prayed, was heard, pardoned, and liberated; and "then Manasseh knew that the Lord, he was God." Thus, in the depths of affliction, he learned maxims more sublime, and of higher moment, than he could attain to when seated on a throne. O desirable distress! that discloses and magnifies heavenly excellences, and diminishes earthly vanities!

When much of the world gets into the mind, then little of God is there; for "if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him;" but when little of the world, then much of God. Affliction is also a time of solitude, for the man sitteth alone; but God setteth the solitary in a family, even in the family of heaven, and comforts him with his own children. In no place better than in the profound depth of affliction, does the heir of future glory see the love, the goodness, the mercy, and the wisdom of God; the excellency of religion, the beauty of divine things, the danger of prosperity, the deceitfulness of riches, the vanity of created things, and the happiness of the world to come.

But as to the illiterate man who knows nothing of astronomy, or the laws of the celestial bodies, this pit would be a deplorable situation, for it is only the philosopher that can improve here; so it is only the spiritual mind, the heavenly meditant, that reaps the advantage of such a situation, for the carnal man here would be altogether miserable.

Again, as no man would pity the philosopher for being deprived awhile of beauteous day, while pursuing his studies, and perfecting his knowledge; so why should the saints be accounted cast off, when plunged into affliction for a while, to pursue his studies of the wondrous way of Providence, and perfect their knowledge of the Most High?—Solitude Sweetened.

— Some there are who shut their eyes to one truth lest it should impair another they deem more sacred. But one truth can no more quench another truth, than one sunbeam can quench another sunbeam. Truth is one, as God is one.

"LET BROTHERLY LOVE CONTINUE."

How many professed christians cultivate brotherly love in their hearts? Love will hide a multitude of faults. If we love our neighbor as ourselves, we shall not injure them in deed or in word, but shall seek every opportunity to do them good. If we think a brother or sister has wandered from that straight and narrow way, how much better to talk with them kindly and confidentially, and learn the motive of the heart before we condemn or lay their faults before the world; for there is a righteous Judge, one who knows the inmost secrets of every heart.

Above all, let us cultivate charity. "Though I speak with the tongues of men and angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing. . . . . Charity suffereth long and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things; charity never faileth."

May we study to show ourselves approved of God, laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speaking, and "bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." "Let every man prove his own work, and then shall he have rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another." "Let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto those who are of the household of faith."

B. L HAGGETT.

THE COMING CHRISTIAN.

Our coming christian hero will not give three fourths of his spare time, and of his money, to moral self-insurance societies, and only one-fourth of these to the church of Christ. He will give all his time and all his money to the church, and perform all his acts of mercy in the name of Christ, and not in the name of mere human organizations. He will proceed on the principle that within the wide scope of the church there is room enough to prosecute every good work, and space enough in which to carry on every noble enterprise.

The coming christian will be greatly respected on account of his short and consistent prayers. He will not go through the whole cyclopedia of prayer in order to thank God for one blessing. He will thank God in a few words for the blessings he enjoys in the present, and not ask for those things he already possesses. He will avoid running in a rut, and instead of always passing in at the same point, he will vary his petitions according to the varying circumstances of life, and modify his language in harmony with feelings he expresses. His prayer will not be a mere humdrum; nor a lengthy drawling harangue, nor a lazy invocation, Nor will he reason with God in his prayers, and instruct the Lord in reference to what should be done. He will pray like a poor, humble, dependent man, and in very simple speech, and not rush in where angels fear to tread, as if about to storm the citadel of heaven.

As cleanliness is a cardinal virtue as well as a godliness, the coming christian will be a clean man, in respect to bodily purification. He will not nauseate his associates by filthy habits. He will offer up his body, not a living, but a sweet-smelling sacrifice. He will not only offer the sacrifice of a broken heart and a contrite spirit, but he will come before the Lord with a pure breath and a cleanly-washed body. . . .

The coming christian will not flatter his fellow-men with the idea that he is his special friend, and then, after having served a selfish purpose with this special friend, throw him aside, as he would a worn-out boot.—American Christian Review.

ALMOST THERE.

A few weeks ago, a party from this place took an excursion on our beautiful lake, Winnipiseogee, and after spending the day very pleasantly upon one of the three hundred and sixty-five islands which the lake contains, beholding the power and wisdom of God in the things he has made, we returned at nightfall, somewhat weary with our journey, and as we were nearing the wharf, this thought came into my mind,—We are almost there.

Since then, as I have almost daily thought of our "Home," and how near we are to the kingdom, these words have come to my mind with new force,—We are almost there. Yes, blessed be the name of the Lord, we are almost there.

We have been out on the ocean of life—sailing, "lo! these many years" some of us, and have become weary in toiling and rowing, but, glory to God, we are "homeward bound," yes, are "almost there."

As we have been sailing into the harbor, we have passed all the light-houses of God's prophecy, and all the rocks and shoals of error, and are quietly sailing within the harbor, only waiting the command of our Captain to land on the celestial shore of peace and rest.

The "blessed hope," which has been as an anchor to our souls, will soon be changed to glad realization, faith to sight, and prayer to praise.

"Into the harbor of heaven now we glide—
We're home at last;
Softly we drift on its bright silver tide—
We're home at last.
Glory to God, all our dangers are o'er;
We stand secure on the glorified shore;
Glory to God, we will shout evermore,
We're home at last."

LIBERAL OFFERS.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

We are anxious to have our paper reach several thousand new readers the coming year, and become a blessing to them. It is the best means we have of sowing the seed of the gospel of the kingdom in some hearts, and we should all awake, and do whatever we can to have its warnings of the coming judgment reach as many new readers as possible.

Some of our preachers have done nobly, and others would gladly help on the good cause, if they could receive aid for their families while they spend their time for the paper. For the benefit of such, the A. C. P. Society, at a recent meeting, by vote authorized the Agent to pay ten per cent to preachers on all collections for the Crisis and Young Pilgrim; and it is hoped they will take hold of the work in earnest, and have great success. Those who understand the expense of publishing a paper, know that it would cost no more to set up the type for twelve or fifteen thousand copies, than it does for a less number; hence, after our regular issue of about nine thousand copies is run off, we could print several thousand more at the cost only of press work and paper. It has, therefore, been concluded by the Editorial Committee and Business Agent, to whom the Society referred this subject, to make the following liberal offers to new subscribers, to induce them to form clubs, and thus make success easy to all who put forth efforts to obtain new subscribers.

TRIAL OFFER.

We will send the World's Crisis three months on trial, to new subscribers, for fifty cents. We ask our friends to obtain yearly subscriptions, if possible; but where subscribers can be obtained for only three months, please visit them again, and, if possible, get them to renew before their paper is stopped at the end of three months.

To aid in obtaining new subscribers for 1871, we make the following offer of nearly

Three Months Free.

We will send the Crisis—for the balance of this year, from the time the name is received—free to all new subscribers for 1871, sent in before Jan. 1st.—Rate $2.50.

Now is the time to subscribe, and put forth energetic efforts to obtain new subscribers.

CLUBBING WITH OTHER PAPERS.

As many persons take several papers, and could be induced to take the Crisis, if they could get two papers at club rates, we have accepted offers to club other papers with the Crisis, which will enable our friends to obtain subscribers where it would otherwise be impossible to introduce our paper.

If any of our regular subscribers wish any of the papers on the list at club rates, they can get new subscribers for the Crisis, as it is not necessary that both papers should be sent to the same address.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS THREE OR SIX MONTHS FREE.

We will send the World's Crisis six months, and the Phrenological Journal and Packard's Monthly (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or the World's Crisis three months, with the Rural New Yorker (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or, three months with the New York Weekly Tribune (price $2.00) one year for $2.00; or three months with the Bee-Keeper's Journal and National Agriculturist (price $1.00) one year for $1.00.

CHICAGO.

Our meetings in Chicago are seasons of special interest. Sinners are seeking and finding the Lord; backsliders are returning, and saints are rejoicing. The congregations are large and very attentive. We are holding meetings in one of the large and elegant Chicago stone meeting-houses, on the corner of West Washington and Green streets. The pastor of the church, Bro. Frankland, unites with us in the meetings, and is deeply interested in the evidences of Christ's speedy coming. We have rarely met a more unsectarian man. He is ready to work with any one who loves Jesus. He took occasion to express his earnest thanks for what he had heard from us on the evidences of Christ's speedy coming.

Many are becoming satisfied that "the end of all things is at hand," and are rejoicing in the clear light now shining. We have some very interesting testimonies from those who have just begun to meet with us. They are truly rejoicing in the light. Their Bible seems to them like a new book, since their minds have been enlightened to see the strong evidence in favor of the speedy coming of Christ, the sleep of the dead, and their literal resurrection, the destruction of the wicked, and the setting up of the everlasting kingdom of God. Like others, they wonder why they have stumbled over the truth so long, when it was so plain and easy to understand.

The interest in the meetings is increasing. We hope to see much good accomplished. Two were baptized in Lake Michigan this morning (Oct. 11), before breakfast, and, like the Eunuch, went on their way rejoicing.

THE POPE.

The Pope's condition is quite changed from what it was when he was declaring his dogma of infallibility during a terrible thunder storm last spring. His infallibility does not amount to much at present. He is quite like the worm in the midst of a ring of fire; when he attempts to escape, he meets the scorching flames in all directions. "The ten horns" are doing their work of hating and desolating "the woman" on the "seven hills."

Cardinal Cullen admits that the "revolutionists . . . have dethroned the Pope and taken possession of the Papal states."

A Florence dispatch to the World says the enemies of the Pope declare that he shall be stripped of everything, and he, with his priests, cardinals and nuns, be sent to Asia or Africa. What next? Where are we in the history of our planet? Most certainly we are near the time of the glorious appearing of our long-absent Savior. Soon we shall see all the host of the redeemed ones, and hear the song of triumph in paradise restored. Those who are not ready to meet the coming King have no time to lose. Every lamp should be trimmed and burning; every heart should be pure, all conversation holy on the part of those who wish to be at "the marriage supper of the Lamb." All hatred and variance must be removed, or else we cannot enter the kingdom of heaven. Only the pure in heart have the promise of salvation.

Let us all come at once to the standard set by Jesus. He has put it in the right place. Anything short of it is not right, and is only a by-path to lead us upon the ground of the enemy. All who would meet the Savior with joy and gladness must walk in the way of holiness. Serving "God and mammon" will not fit us for eternal life. There must be entire consecration, if we would have the clear evidence of our acceptance.

CANNOT FALL AWAY.

Occasionally we meet those who think if a man is once truly converted he cannot fall away so as to be lost. We have not yet been able to see that the Bible teaches such a doctrine. We must admit that Paul was "truly converted;" yet he says: "I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection, lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." 1 Cor. 9: 27. If such an event could not happen, why should he have any fear that it might take place? When speaking through the prophet Ezekiel, the Holy Spirit said:—

"When I shall say to the righteous, that he shall surely live; if he trust to his own righteousness, and commit iniquity, all his righteousnesses shall not be remembered; but for his iniquity that he hath committed, he shall die for it. Again, when I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; if he turn from his sin, and do that which is lawful and right: if the wicked restore the pledge, give again that he had robbed, walk in the statues of life, without committing iniquity, he shall surely live, he shall not die. None of his sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him; he hath done that which is lawful and right; he shall surely live. Yet the children of thy people say, The way of the Lord is not equal. When the righteous turneth from his righteousness, and committeth iniquity, he shall even die thereby. But if the wicked turn from his wickedness, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall live thereby." Ezek. 33: 13–19.

This Scripture is very plain, and proves that a righteous man may turn from his righteousness, become a sinner again, and die in his sins.

Says Paul: "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame." Heb. 6: 4–6. Why does he say "it impossible . . . to renew them again unto repentance," if it is impossible for them to "fall away"? Those specified in this Scripture are certainly the higher order of christians; those who "were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come." They had made very high attainments. Why did not Paul say that it was impossible for such to "fall away"? Because the Holy Spirit did not move him to say so; but it did lead him to say that when they had departed from the Lord and their great light, it was "impossible . . . to renew them again unto repentance."

Were not the angels as good and as holy as converted men? But some of them fell away and sinned, and are to be destroyed, instead of being renewed and restored. If man ceased to be a moral agent when he was converted, then there might be reason for saying that he could not fall away; but his whole history proves that he is ever free to do good or evil, as he may choose. Says the apostle: "Wherefore, let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." 1 Cor. 10: 12.

If none fell away, there could be no backsliders; but there are some who so fall away from a deep and thorough christian experience, that "it is impossible" to restore them. Let us beware of the danger, and endure to the end, and be saved.

BRO. O. BENDIXON.

It will be remembered that Bro. O. Bendixon, from Norway, after embracing the "blessed hope," returned to Europe as a missionary to the Norwegians. He met with much opposition, and some persecution, and found it necessary to come again to America. He arrived in this country with his family in quite destitute circumstances, hoping to receive encouragement and aid from his own countrymen and the friends of Jesus generally, sufficient to keep him and his family in a comfortable condition while preaching the gospel of the kingdom. He was disappointed in his expectations; became disheartened, discouraged, perplexed; and amid all his sore trials and lack of sympathy from sources where he expected to receive it, he cast away his confidence, and was thrown into a sad state of mind, in which he has remained for some months, and stopped preaching, trying to support himself by the labor of his hands. He has been poorly successful in his worldly occupation, and is now anxious to consecrate himself anew to the work of the ministry, and go forth among the Norwegians in the western states, and among all classes, as the doors may open, proclaiming the gospel of the kingdom.

Are there not a number of our readers who will feel it a pleasure to cheer this brother's heart by sending him what he very much needs,—some material aid. Direct to O. Bendixon, 153 Lasalle St., Chicago, Ill.

THE WAR IN EUROPE.

The war clouds in Europe are still crimsoned with fire and blood. Prussia is spreading desolation over the once beautiful fields of France. Towns and cities are falling into the hands of the victorious Germans, who are resolved on obtaining possession of the French capital. It is not probable that they can take the city in any other way than by starvation. The thought seems horrifying. The Paris mails are now sent in balloons and by carrier pigeons. The Prussians take occasion to shoot at the balloons, but have not yet been successful in taking them.

WEST POINT DISCUSSION.

(Concluded.)

The second proposition read as follows:—"The punishment of the wicked will consist in the eternal extinction of their conscious being." Against this proposition, we submitted the following: "Whenever the words 'destroy,' 'destruction,' and 'death,' are employed to express punishment, they are always used LITERALLY, and never in a moral sense."

To this Mr. S. replied, "If I admit it I am defeated." He then assumed that moral death was the penalty for sin, in Adam's case, and all his posterity. We inquired if Christ became morally dead when he suffered the penalty of the law? If so, then he became a sinner; but the Bible says he was "without sin." And again, if the penalty for sin is "moral death," then it follows that the crime and penalty are both one; so that punishment for stealing and lying would be a continuation of the crimes. Then the punishment for murder would be murder; for adultery, more licentiousness.

Our opponent admitted that the wicked were reserved "unto the day of judgment to be punished," as declared by Peter. 2 Peter 2: 9. We then inquired how "moral death" could be the penalty for sin, unless the day of judgment took place as soon as a man sinned? and if he was judged and punished as soon as he sinned, how he could be reserved "unto the day of judgment to be punished"? He then assumed that the "second death" is a moral death. We replied that if the second is moral, the first must be also; otherwise "the second death" would not be "the second," but the first of another kind. If the first and second death are moral, then there must be moral life, or Christianity, between the two deaths; hence, unconverted sinners could not experience the second death; therefore, very wicked, unconverted persons were not morally dead.

It was very evident to the audience that the positions of Mr. S. were unscriptural and unreasonable. We asked our opponent to explain, from his stand-point, Rom. 1: 32. After enumerating the crimes of an exceedingly wicked class, Paul says: "They which commit such things are worthy of death." We inquired if it would be proper to read it—"worthy of moral death"? It was evident that their moral death was complete before Paul said that such wicked men were "worthy of death." We also desired Mr. S. to consider Rev. 21: 8, which contains the last mention of punishment in the Bible:—"But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." He claimed that this death was moral. We thought that the wicked classes were already morally dead before they were "cast into the lake of fire" (Rev. 20: 15) and brimstone. Their punishment of death—destruction—came upon them because they were morally dead in trespasses and sins.

Mr. S. assumed that there could be no punishment without pain; and inasmuch as the punishment is to be eternal, there must be eternal pain in reserve for the finally impenitent. We inquired of him whether pain is a part of death. He said it is not. We replied that he had answered correctly; for when a person is in a state of death, he is without pain. And as death is the wages, or penalty, for sin, it follows that pain cannot be the punishment; for that will cease as soon as a man is dead; and hence cannot be eternal, as affirmed by the Scriptures.

Our brethren at West Point were delighted with the results of the discussion. Over thirty ministers from different denominations were present. One was reporting for the Watchman and Reflector, an able Baptist paper, published in Boston. We preached three evenings during the week of the discussion, and on the following Sabbath. Three rose for prayers the last evening. The prospect looked encouraging. We had a pleasant home with Bro. J. C. Knott. West Point is where Bro. Walter Pratt lived. The church there is one of the oldest in the west that has been looking for the speedy coming of Christ.

THE TRUTH IS SPREADING.

The great Bible truths, for the belief of which we have been called "infidels," "atheists," "Sadducees," and by various other reproachful epithets, are now finding a hearty welcome into the affections of many devoted christians in all denominations. What they had supposed to be infidel notions, they now find to be the pure doctrine of Christianity, as taught by Jesus and the apostles. Dear Bro., let us press the battle in christian kindness, always returning good for evil, and we shall soon see glorious results. This is the time to besiege the enemy's strong-hold of error in one grand union effort. Let us be brave for the King of kings, and Lord of lords.

EXPLANATION ONCE MORE.

As many do not yet understand the date on their papers, or wrappers, we would say, the date on the paper is the time to which you have paid. If it is 7 Sept. 70, it means that you have paid to last Sept. If Nov. or Dec. 70, it shows that you have paid so much in advance; but if it is 67, 68 or 69, it shows that you are in arrears from that date, and ought to pay up immediately.

☞ By mistake, we first published only a part of the Prospectus of The Bible Banner, and therefore call special attention to the liberal offers in the "Terms," which are now published in another column.

THE NEW MONTHLY.

This proposed monthly, to be entitled "The Bible Banner," and to be published by Bro. H. A. King, 240 Broadway, New York city, and to be edited by four ministers who are not strangers to our people, is not started as an experiment to flash in the pan after a few weeks, but as a permanent thing. Bro. King is a man of business ability and financial experience, and has counted the cost before commencing the enterprise. None need hesitate to invest their funds, fearing the enterprise may prove a failure before it is fairly inaugurated. Bro. King will spend every cent of the profits, if there should be any, in scattering the paper in new channels, and will also invest a handsome sum annually in addition, for the same purpose. He means to make the paper a tasty and telling sheet, one that our people will delight to scatter among unbelievers of the intellectual stamp; one that will hoist the flag of unpopular truth, and defend it with ability and boldness. We greatly need such a standard monthly in our midst. Let a large list be sent in without delay ($1 per year), that you may receive the first number long before date, as a sample copy to show others, and solicit subscriptions; but send your subscription now. "THE HOPE OF ETERNAL LIFE."

The christian's hope grasps several glorious themes, and eternal life is one of the most important. Without it, all the others would be of diminutive importance. If we contemplate soul-entrancing felicity, its endless duration depends upon eternal life, for without that, its duration would be brief. If we are elated with the cheering prospect of enjoying the society of long-lost friends, the length of that enjoyment depends upon whether we possess eternal life, for without eternal life none can live eternally.

If we feel animated with the assurance that we are to enter into the joy of our Lord, the perpetuity of that joy depends upon whether our future life is to be eternal; if we live eternally, the joy can last eternally; if we do not live eternally, the joy cannot be eternal. So the real worth of future felicity, future fraternal associations, future joy, and future reward of any kind, depends upon the possession of "eternal life;" thus eternal life is that which gives value to every other ingredient of future reward to the saint. Without life there could be no enjoyment whatever; so without eternal life, eternal enjoyment is utterly impossible. The duration of happiness cannot exceed the duration of life. All depends upon life; enjoyment depends upon life, and the length of the enjoyment depends upon the length of the life; hence, if we would have eternal enjoyment, we must have eternal life. It may be safely said that eternal life is the basis of the saint's reward, for without it it would be of trivial worth. If told that we might have a home in the city of God as long as we should live, we should want to know something about the perpetuity of our life. If told that we might dwell with angels through life, we should be apt to inquire, how long can we live? If told that we might wear a crown of glory all our life, we would wish to know about the chances for a long life.

But the saint of God is animated not only with the hope of coming redemption, future glory, and heavenly joy, but also with the "hope of eternal life," which makes redemption an immortal fixture in the divine plan, makes glory an endless attainment, and makes joy as lasting as the days of heaven. Then how can this great prize be secured? Paul answers: "Eternal life is the gift of God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Let us "lay hold on eternal life" by a present life, of faith and obedience. TRACTS TO SCATTER IN WIS.

Wishing to scatter my four new tracts more extensively in Wisconsin than I have been able to do with my own hand, with the help of a few friends, I offer to send by mail to any brother or sister living in Wisconsin, as many as 10 cents will prepay, if they will send me the postage, provided they send any time before the close of November, giving plain directions where to send them. I limit the offer to Wisconsin for the present, and restrict as to the quantity allowed each individual, fearing they may be too soon exhausted. Let no one send over 10 cts. in postage unless they design it as a donation to aid the enterprise. Direct to William Sheldon, Brodhead, Green Co., Wis., and send within the time specified. W. S.

"WHETHER IN THE BODY OR OUT OF THE BODY."

To prove that the soul can live without the body, we are often referred to Paul's statement in 2 Cor. 12: 3, "Whether in the body, or out of the body"; but this attempt is lame in several respects; (1) because no allusion is made to a case of death, but to an event in the history of a living man, who continued to live "above fourteen years" after the scene referred to; so if it really proves that the soul can live without the body, it as strongly proves that the body can live without a soul; for even if he was "out of the body," the body did not die; and if to be "out of the body" means that the soul must leave the body, then the body can live without a soul—then what need of having a soul? So this proves too much if it proves anything in that line. (2) The text says not a word about the soul being out of the body, or in the body. We have no right to put the term soul in where the apostle did not see fit to use it, and thus make the apostle say something different from what he wrote, to suit a theory that demands such alterations in Scripture to support it. (3) Paul pronounces the event here referred to one of the "visions and revelations" in his history (see v. 1), but it seemed so real to him that he could not decide whether he was physically or mentally transported; for sometimes in vision holy seers have been bodily caught away, and at other times they were only mentally taken away. Paul could not tell in which way he was taken "up to the third heaven," where the New Jerusalem is, which contains the paradise of God, which is to "come down from God," and be connected with the new earth by and by.

Some have supposed that Paul simply had a vision of the new earth. This cannot be correct, for although Paul could have been mentally conveyed into the future, he could not have been bodily taken eighteen hundred years down the stream of time into the new earth, and yet he could not tell whether he was taken "in the body, or out of the body," —whether personally or mentally—and he well knew he could not have been personally taken hundreds of years into the future; but he might have been taken either bodily or mentally to the New Jerusalem, which now contains the paradise that will hereafter be connected with the new earth. W. S.

PROTRACTED MEETINGS.

The season has come when people have leisure time to attend protracted meetings, and every Advent minister whose health will permit the undertaking, should at once begin a series of meetings, not with the mere design to theorize the people, and to combat all who have not been enlightened, but to enlist men in the cause of Christ, making the enlightening of the intellect one part of our work, but not the sum total.

Men are reached through two channels in religious matters, as well as in worldly matters—through the channels of reason and feeling; and while the channel of reason is the safest, it is nevertheless true that access to the channel of feeling often paves the way for reaching the channel of reason; and it is well known that protracted meetings of a devotional character, not overstocked with the combative and censorious element, are important facilities for reaching the hearts of men through both of these channels. Not that we would admonish our brethren to do less in the great work of letting the light of truth shine out, but we would entreat them to do it in a judicious way, and do more than ever in the special direction of leading sinful men to seek the Lord. We ought not to stand out before the world as exclusively a theological people, but as a people possessing an abundance of the devotional, practical, experimental, and working element of religion. Then we can the more easily reach the hearts of men, and lead them to Christ; and while this fact impresses the mind of men, they are the more willing to listen to our views of theology. To a great extent we reach the hearts of men through their ears; hence, if by an egotistic or pugilistic course, we deprive ourselves of the ears of the people, we fail to reach their hearts. Let us be "wise as serpents," which charm their game by degrees, with caution.

Protracted meetings should be held in new places, and in old fields too. Let us work for God with new zeal in every part of the field. Soon the harvest will be past, and our work be done. Will it be "well done"? W. S.

IMMORTAL SOULS.

A great outcry is made against Adventists because they do not believe in immortal souls. That is a mistake, for they believe in "mortal" souls, and immortal souls too.

1. They believe that "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, . . . and man became a living soul" (Gen. 2: 7), and that this man is called "mortal man" (Job 4: 17), or mortal soul; for it is "man" that is called a "soul," and also "man" that is called "mortal"; so here is proof of a mortal soul, or a "living soul" that is "mortal."

2. They also believe that "this mortal must put on immortality" at the resurrection (1 Cor. 15: 53); then the saints will all be immortal souls.

But we do not believe in being immortal souls before receiving immortality; nor do we believe in having an immortal soul imprisoned inside of a mortal soul. But we fully believe that every faithful soul will be made immortal when Jesus comes, and will be immortal souls then; not immortal shadows, but material souls immortalized, or glorified humanity, made "equal to the angels." Such immortal souls we believe will have an existence at the resurrection. W. S.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 24th, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

The Springfield Campmeeting was the best held there yet, in every respect. More harmony and prudence, temporally and spiritually, prevailed through the meeting. But few things were left on the ground compared with former years. No one article worth one dollar, except one coat, and that was claimed the next day; therefore we think it not worth while to advertise them.

The meeting had a good effect on the community and the church generally. The back debt was paid up by the noble-hearted brethren, which lifted the load that the committee had carried for the past year, and made us all thank God and the brethren. One year's burden was gone, and we set free again. Other things that have induced disaffection, and which have caused other meetings to be held, have been amicably settled. Probably another year, there will be but one general interest and meeting in the vicinity, if time continues for another campmeeting at Springfield.

After settling up, I started for Alton Bay. Stopped in Boston and Lawrence, and met with a few that could not attend the great campmeeting, and had a good time with the few.

At Alton Bay found the same good spirit attending the meetings. The preaching was dispensational, prophetic and timely, which gave strength to the waiting church, convinced skeptics, and convicted sinners. This meeting, like the Springfield one, has become a great institution, and needs wisdom, energy, and prudence, to manage it, which will be found in the committee chosen on Friday.

Left on Saturday for Portland, Me., and had almost a new set of hearers, as the church was mostly at campmeeting. The signs of Christ's coming were listened to attentively three times, and a good result is expected.

Monday noon the rush came from campmeeting in an extra train, the brethren with faith much strengthened in the soon coming of the Lord, as that was the drift of the preaching at both meetings; and getting ready necessarily follows such a faith; and such preachers as are posted and competent, should do the most of the preaching at such meetings, as people come to hear on this timely subject at these times. It is no time to extend courtesy by giving all a chance.

The question is, Who can meet the demand or give the meat due? Such should give it, if they preach three or four times. Our campmeetings are becoming inquiry meetings, of a class of honest, well-informed critics, more than ever before; and a preacher that can lift the load in a small chapel or school-house, would not be competent on such occasions, and ought to know it, and be satisfied with his appropriate work and position in the body, and not feel jealous and try to scatter.

We must work. We must all work. We must work in compact, or be flanked. In some places there are a few jealous ones split off, who study and practice flank movements on the main body, instead of attacking the common enemy. Their greatest ambition is, to disconcert the plans of those that are able to do more than they can. Now, brethren, let him do the work who can do it, and we take a united position, and the professed church will feel our influence as never before. This little, narrow, contracted, jealous, and selfish disposition, seeking to gain an exalted position, will cripple the influence of the body. Our individul position will be more lasting and valuable, if we wait until we proidentially slide into it, and not by proxy or strategy obtain another's position we never can fill. There must be more fighting soldiers ready for duty, and the Lord will make his own selections for leaders, those whom he sees are competent. There never was equality in these things in the work of God, and never can be, unless all men are alike instructed. Let us all do our different work in harmony, and God will reward all equally, or according to their capacity.

From Alton Bay to Portland, Bath, Brunswick, then to Mechanic Falls campmeetin. This was a small, quiet meeting, and productive of good in that region. The grove was a good one for a large meeting, if suitably arranged. Old times were brought back to our minds by seeing some of the first growth of white pine trees standing, which are as scarce in these days as the old-fashioned religion. Some of these trees run up one hundred feet before coming to a limb; three feet in diameter, some seventeen feet around, and capable of producing two or three thousand feet of lumber. Some of them are ten rods long when down. One formerly measured thirteen rods. This looks like timber. I spent some time in the woods looking at God's natural steeples, under which his praises were sung, and the large brook near by afforded a good string of pickerel for a change of food, which we enjoyed in the catching, while others did in the eating them. I think some men swallowed a bait that had a hook in it, which they cannot shake out, and will run with the line a long time, and then come in all tired out and yield up, as we had to when God's hook of truth fastened in our jaw.

Richmond. This is an old Advent church, which has been visited with two or three whirlwind within a few years, which only confused and broke a few of the branches, while the trunk of the tree and the roots are in good soil. The second attack of the seventh-day people, or Ellen G. White's messengers, have just closed a five weeks' bombardment, stumping and bragging of their argument, Goliah-like. I understand a young David, after being threatened and stumped to fight, silenced their battery in a short time, and turned the mesmeric current. If ever there was a time to take off this hypocritical wart or fungus flesh from the Advent body, it is now. I know God does not bless it. It proves a corroding curse wherever it goes.

The doctrine is pushed into communities Mahomet-like, and calmed down by a mesmeric anodyne, until the subjects are dead or dozy enough to submit to the rigid law of taxing, which, by the way, has awakened some from their stupor, and their eyes are fully open to the imposition and curse on a religious and christian community. I am aware that in saying this I call down the bulls of this pretended church upon me; but let them come. If these were my last words, I would warn my brethren and the world against this delusion. We as a people have supported it thus far, and are guilty by keeping silent, as a body, so long. So long as they claim the name of Adventist, they are a cancer to this body, and the worst forms of the cancer are out of sight. Whitewash and paint cover up the internal inflammation (so all say that have had the experience in it), just as the freemasons who have had their eyes opened to that trap of the devil, and have exposed it.

It is time to rid ourselves of these influences, and be free. What if some are honest? So much the more need of trying to liberate them from this snare, by lifting our voices against it. I want to say here to all, if you want to comprehend more fully what I mean by the above, send ten cents to R. E. Hamilton, Thompsonville, Ct., and get a tract; or fifty cents, and get six; $1.00, and get thirteen, of the best and truest expositions of this matter ever made public, and scatter them. You can do much good to others in this way. The real life information in one is worth the dollar. Do not fail to send.

About the crops. There is unexpectedly a good crop of corn, and potatoes and apples in abundance. The Lord is good. Water is scarce in the streams.

Richmond Corner. Here we had a good gathering in the F. W. Baptist house. Good attention. Some scolded the next day, others were much interested for the first time. At Litchfield Corner, in the Congregational house. This was the first Advent meeting ever held in that place; and the signs in Luke 21st took effect.

Bowdoinham. A good interest to hear about "our hope." And in Poland, as usual a good house, and attention. The awful double murder in Hallowell helped us preach the signs more effectually.

Casco. Both places. As usual good attention; and the good large string of fish of from nine to one hundred pounds, which we caught, fed three neighborhoods. The fish come handy where there is no fresh meat cart, but pork good and plenty gave us a good living.

Raymond Village. Good house of new hearers, and the best of interest to hear on our faith. Also at Cape Elizabeth two evenings. Still larger, and more interest. I think the seed will catch on some ground.

The new places are the best ground in these times. Portland is holding her ground as usual, but like many other places, some either get cloyed, or dainty, and others seem to eat enough, but do not hold their food long enough to give them strength to work. It seems to me as useless to preach to some people as it is to turn water into a basket. People who are good for nothing in conferences, draw off by themselves, not satisfied with themselves or any one else. I suppose this class always did exist. Perhaps it was the thorn in Paul's flesh, a messenger of Satan to chasten the body; but grace is sufficient to hold the healthy parts of the body together by attraction. Some are blind as to the work and interest of our times.

While meditating and wondering at such blindness, I chanced to ride behind a blind horse fifteen or twenty miles, and discovered some advantages in his being blind. 1. Any one could catch him easy. 2. He could not see the fence down, and get into mischief. 3. He did not get scared at the cars, or anything else, so as to run. He did not know where to run. 4. He went altogether by the bit, and would stop if the harness broke. 5. He had no choice in riders, and would work any where, and at any time. These advantages compensated, in part, for his loss of sight.

These reflections were amusing. Perhaps if some persons were not blind, they would have stove things up as badly or worse than others heretofore in the cause of God who pretended to have good eyes. So we drove on, thinking the old blind horse was best for some places, and we would use our eyes to the best advantage while we had them; and hoped that those who had not, would do what they could, and be quiet, and not fret about evils they cannot help.

At Biddeford found good, warm friends, and a church well in the work, not easily turned out of the way.

Kennebunk Depot. Had a hard time on account of being obliged to stay five hours at the depot waiting for a place to stay. I was directed to a man as one of our brethren to see to preachers. He sent me to another brother's, and they were not at home. I went back and told him the brother was not at home. He made no reply, and I expected for five hours he would tell me of some other place, as I was a stranger. I waited from ten to twelve o'clock patiently, thinking at twelve he would speak again; but not so. He went to his dinner, and there I stood and saw him go and come, and I stayed till three P. M., when an outsider mistrusted I was a stranger and a preacher, and took me into his store to warm, as it was damp and cold; and learning the facts, found good brethren who gave me a home. Such a man as this would let his own mother lie in the poor-house years, after bringing up her own family, and part of his, while he had plenty of room and everything comfortable. This man is very active in prayer-meetings. Should you want to hear him pray?

South Berwick. Found good friends the first time, and had a good time with them. They are struggling to try to pay $250, to finish their little chapel, which cost $750. How easy some could help them if they would. If any are disposed to help, direct to Gideon Doe, South Berwick, Me.

Portsmouth. Had one of the best times we ever had. Full house and good attention. The Spirit of the Lord convinced the people we had the truth for our times. This finished up a long trip, having preached every day for five weeks, and in four new places. There is an ear to hear on our faith as never before. The coming winter's work will tell, if we all work in harmony with the great truth upon which we all agree; which is the coming of the Lord very soon. H. MUNGER.

REPORT OF THE CT. A. C. CONF.

Waterbury, Ct., Oct. 6th, 1870.

President in the chair. Conference opened with prayer by Bro. Hitchcock. The minutes of the last session were read and approved. The President appointed the following committee. On Credentials: Brn. Teeple, Durand, and Rockwell. On Preaching: Brn. Ripley, Fuller, Fitzsimmons. On Ordination: Brn. Hitchcock, Hancock, and Teeple. On Business: Brn. White, Elliott, Durand. The reports of delegates were good. Reports of preachers were encouraging. The cause of Christ in Ct. was rising.

One o'clock. Met according to adjournment. Prayer by Bro. Rockwell. Committee on case of Bro. L. F. Moore reported. Committee retained to the next session for further investigation. Campmeeting committee reported. Expenses all met. Report accepted.

Voted, that a committee of two be appointed to nominate officers for the ensuing year. Brn. Teeple and Durand were appointed, who reported the following: For President, H. H. Dickinson; Vice President, Wm. J. Ripley; Secretary, B. Hitchcock; Treasurer, B. St. John; who were duly elected.

The tent committee elected Brn. B. Hitchcock, Durand, and White. A Campmeeting committee for the coming year was elected: Brn. B. Hitchcock, R. K. Stark, William J. Ripley, G. L. White, O. D. Woodruff. Adjourned to Friday, nine A. M.

Met according to adjournment. Prayer by Bro. Hancock. A resolution was offered as follows:

Whereas our churches in time past have suffered from the labors of injudicious persons who feel no special responsibility upon them, but preach erroneous views, to the distraction and division of the churches, therefore,

Resolved, That we warn and exhort the churches to be very careful how they receive, permit, or suffer, any one to come among them who is not duly recommended from the Conference in the State where he belongs, or otherwise properly accredited.

It was adopted unanimously. A vote of thanks was passed to the church in Waterbury for their kindness and hospitality while with them. Adjourned to meet at the call of the Secretary.

Our conference was good. The Spirit of Christ was with us. There was but one mind in regard to the present state of things: that time is short; and we felt like laboring more ardently in the vineyard of the Lord in saving our fellow men. The signs are portentous of the soon coming of Jesus; the ending of all worldly ambition; the ending of war, cruelty, bloodshed, and crime; the ending of sorrow, suffering, and death. "The end of all things is at hand."

B. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. KELLAWAY writes of the tent-meeting in R. I.:—"Great interest was manifested in the meeting on Wednesday evening, Oct. 5th. Many became deeply convinced of their danger, and three rose for prayers. And, as there was good being done, it was decided that the Rhode Island Conference should be invited to hold its meeting on Thursday evening at the Tent, which was done. At the meeting on Thursday one more sinner rose for remembrance at the mercy-seat. One also who had been a seeker on the previous evening testified to his experience of 'the peace of God which passeth all understanding.' Blessed be God who hath showed his servants such great things, and gladdened their hearts therewith."

SR. M. E. DOW writes:—"Through the goodness of the Lord, Sr. Mellen's health has somewhat improved, and we have been able to return to the city, and procure a more suitable place for our little work, and have changed our location from 169 Allen St., to 48 Watts St., where we shall endeavor by the Lord's help to do what we are able, for the benefit of the poor and needy."

BRO. C. W. LOW writes:—"I would say in regard to the work of the ministry, that since the 9th of June up to present date (Oct. 8th), I have traveled over sixteen hundred miles, preached thirty sermons, baptized two obedient souls into Christ, and had a good spiritual time generally. The Lord has blessed the word to the good of those who heard."

BRO. G. W. PLACE writes:—"I have cast my lot with a new people in a new country (in Beatrice, Nebraska). There is a good opening here for those who wish to get a home and grow up with the country. Every thing is new, and many hardships and privations to endure; but the face of the country is beautiful, and the soil rich and fertile. Remember me to Father in your prayers, that I may lead a holy life."

BRO. I. DAMMAN writes:—"The Lord is at work on New Durham Ridge. A number have started to serve the Lord in earnest. We are having a good meeting. The Spirit and power of God are among us, to prepare us to meet the Bridegroom."

SHORT SERMONS AND SHORT EDITORIALS.

Our experience has taught us that the man who can tell the most with the fewest words, in the pulpit or in the newspaper, is the most successful minister or writer. Long sermons, unless the preacher is unusually interesting, no matter how sound he may be, are dry to the majority of hearers, and not unfrequently actually keep people away from church. We may argue as much as we please that this ought not to be, and cite how men will go to a minstrel show or some other foolish entertainment and sit two hours without being weary, and complain at a forty-five minute sermon; but this makes no difference, the fact remains that the ministers who preach short sermons are the popular ones, and they accomplish as much or more good, so far as we can see, by their ministrations. So, and more so, with the newspaper writer; the man who can condense, and give the news or reasoning in the least possible space, is the one whose articles are read, while long essays, no matter how instructive, remain unread or are laid by for a convenient time, and are never called for.—Springfield Republican.

Obituaries.

HODGDON. Died, in Freedom, N. H., Sept. 13th, 1870, of consumption, George W., son of Nathan and Ruth Hodgdon, aged twenty-five years and five months.

He rests in hope. The hard struggle to overcome the direful malady and live a few more years in this mortal state, was in vain; disease and death have triumphed over him and he is dead. But not forever. Jesus says: "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live" again. George did not make an open profession of religion, but he expressed in his last hours, to his mother, that he felt his sins were forgiven him, and that he had part in Christ. He sleeps in Jesus. CHAS. H. HURD.

Died, of consumption, in Lafayette, R. I., on Thursday, Oct. 6th, 1870, the sister of Deacon A. Taylor's wife.

Deceased was a great sufferer, and her death was a desirable release for her. May the dear Lord, who could weep over the grave of Lazarus, console and sustain the bereaved with his comforting presence and blessing. W. KELLAWAY.

ROBINSON. Died, in New Bedford, Mass., Sept. 19th, 1870, of consumption, Mary Ann, daughter of William and P. C. Robinson, aged sixteen years, one month, and three days.

She experienced a hope in Christ a short time before she departed. She longed for the time to come when she should fall asleep in Jesus.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

TOURS, Oct. 13. A Paris letter in the Constitutional to-day, says the word "peace" is tabooed in Paris. Everybody is casting cannon, making mitrailleuses and constructing pontoons. Enough of the latter have been constructed to bridge the Atlantic ocean.

FLORENCE, Oct. 13. The engineers say that it will require at least two years to prepare Rome to serve as the Italian capital. The seat of the government will therefore remain at Florence indefinitely.

VERSAILLES, Oct. 12.—via Berlin and London, Oct. 13. Yesterday the French army at Loire were driven out of Orleans, after a nine hours' fight. Orleans was subsequently stormed. The Prussians took upwards of 10,000 prisoners. Their loss was small. The Bavarians participated in this engagement.

OSTEND, Oct. 13. The French fleet have returned to the North Sea. The supposition is that they intend to renew the blockade of German ports. The Germans have again removed the beacon lights along the coast.

The Prussian lines of communication from the army before Paris are still preserved intact, but food and forage are becoming scarce.

LONDON, Oct. 12. Prince Napoleon, who recently arrived in this city, is actively intriguing for the restoration of the Bonapartists. The Emperor himself declines to sanction the schemes of the Prince.

Advices from Paris to the 6th inst. represent the people steadfast, quiet, and orderly, and without any anxiety on the question of food. They claim to be fully prepared for any assault the Prussians may make.

BERLIN, Oct. 13. The Queen has received the following dispatch from King William:

"Versailles, Wednesday. Thousands of prisoners fell into our hands as the result of the Von Der-Tonns victory, near Orleans. The battle lasted from 9 o'clock in the morning to 7 in the evening, and was fought on difficult ground. The capture of Orleans was followed by a heavy loss to the French. Our loss was small."

LONDON, Oct. 13. The journals predict calamities to Germany if she perseveres in insisting on the cession of Alsace and Lorraine and continuing the war. They say that if Paris holds out several months, an immense army will be formed behind its walls, while others will be created in the departments. Thus the Prussians will be caught between two overwhelming forces.

The savage character that the war is assuming, in burning villages and shooting scores of peasantry for defending their homesteads, is causing a violent revulsion of feeling here.

The English apprehend a general European convulsion, and the Prussians are incurring general indignation for provoking danger.

England is quietly preparing for the storm. While refusing to augment her military expenses, the Government is putting her sea coast defences in impregnable condition. The journals give the results of the experiments just made on the improvements in the torpedo system, showing that no hostile fleet can ever touch English shores. England is spending large sums for strengthening her seacoast defences, the southeast coast especially occupying her attention.

The entrance of the Thames is being fortified in a manner not only calculated to repel invasion, but to render impossible the disembarkation of the enemy. Sheerness will be strengthened by fresh forts and additional batteries of the largest calibre. Important defensive works are in process of erection. New Haven and Liverpool, so many years neglected, will be put in a state of complete defence.

LONDON, Oct. 14. The terrible artillery fire of Fort Mont du Valerion has literally swept the country around about for a circuit of six kilometres. The Prussian works have been destroyed. All the batteries that the Prussians have sought to erect against Mont Valerian have been annihilated. Chateau Mendon has also been destroyed. The Prussian engineers have been driven from Clamart, Mendon and Montretout. Villejuif and Cacham have both been recovered by the French. On the north the Prussians have been driven back as far as Deuil and Bonneuil. The entire peninsula around Genvilliers has been freed from the Prussians by several strong cavalry reconnoissances and is now in French hands again.

On the east of Paris a lively cannonade has been maintained toward Bondy. The Prussians also have been driven from Champigny more than three miles east of Vincennes. The Prussian circle around Paris is, therefore, expanding daily, instead of contracting, and the Parisians are greatly encouraged.

FLORENCE, Oct. 15. Prince Amadeus, with the approval of King Victor Emanuel, has accepted the offer of the Spanish crown.

LYONS, via TOURS, Oct. 16. Garibaldi, accompanied by several Italian officers, has arrived at Besancon, in the department of Doubs. He will command the irregular battalions of riflemen and sharpshooters, operating in the Vosges districts, and a brigade of Garde Mobile.

BERLIN, Oct 16. A dispatch from Rheims says the French garrison, at Soissons, has capitulated to the Prussians, after an obstinate defense of four days duration.

The town was badly wrecked by the bombardment from the Prussian batteries upon the commanding heights.

LONDON, Oct. 16. The Prussian Embassy have addressed itself to-day to the English Government, with a view to gain the co-operation of Great Britain in its efforts for peace. The English Government is instructed that Prussia is prepared to modify seriously her demand for a money indemnity, or to abandon it altogether. That the neutralization of Strasbourg and Metz will be accepted in lieu of their surrender. The demand of Prussia for the surrender of the French men-of-war is abandoned entirely.

OSTEND, Oct. 16. Marshal Bazaine made a fourth and overwhelming attack in force, marching by Ladonchamp towards Mezieres, while another part of his army furiously assaulted the Germans beyond Noiseville. The Germans were beaten in both directions, their camps broken up, and the body forced into a disastrous retreat upon Font-a-Mousson, where they now are. Bazaine himself is at Thionville, and he holds the line to Mezieres and Narange. There is much alarm at Saarbruken, Treves and Forbach.

BERLIN, Oct. 17. The Duke of Mecklenburg Schevarin reports having entered Soissons yesterday, Sunday. By the capitulation of this city we captured four thousand prisoners and one hundred and thirty-two cannons.

LONDON, Oct. 17. The Prussians have crossed the Loire and marched toward Tours. On this becoming known, all departments of the government were in a state of consternation, and the excitement of officials was indescribable.

FLORENCE, Oct. 17. The King of Italy, having excluded Mazzini from the general amnesty for political offences, has been moved by the influence of prominent officials and Republicans to issue a special amnesty for his benefit, and, accordingly the great agitator has been liberated from his incarceration at Gaete.

THE RISING IN FRANCE.—Whatever may be the result of the unavoidable conflagration, the Prussian government could not choose a better way to arouse the national spirit of France. If I am not mistaken, the struggle will be extreme. Within a few days the Prussian armies will be encircled in a circumference of fire; thousands will become the prey of their powerful artillery, but thousands will survive; the Francs, the Gaulois are rising, the Vendeans and the Chaneurs will revive those heroic episodes of devotion to their hearth, to their God, to their country! The men are ready; they are innumerable. I could astonish you with their unexpected number. I have met thousands on thousands within the last week, as I informed you in my last letter. Chiefs are wanted, but they will spring from the masses. The race of Hoche, Moreau, and Larochejacquelin is not exterminated yet. A new era is beginning. The new Teutonic Colossus must be checked yet for the sake of civilization and liberalism.—London Standard Correspondent.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Oct. 12. The French cable, it is reported, will be cut outside of Brest, and a submarine one run from the cut end to Queenstown. This is rendered necessary by the cable of 1866 having given out, and the immense number of dispatches from private parties and the American Press Association.

War Items.

☞ Among the curious results of the war is that bringing the French Bourbons again to the surface. The Count de Chambord appears as a pretender to the throne of France, and, calling himself "Monseigneur," promises to present himself at the proper time and claim his own. He declares that the monarchy will hunt the invaders from the soil and gain an honorable peace.

☞ A Herald special, dated Tours, Oct. 15—evening—says:—"Bazaine escaped from Metz, and is marching with his full force to the relief of Verdun. Rumors from Orleans are startling. It is asserted that the Prussians there, who are known to be in large forces, have surrendered to the French with all their artillery."

☞ Commerce in the West Indies is paralysed, on account of the European war.

☞ Military movements in the Prussian camps and within the walls of Paris indicate a great event is imminent.

☞ A special dispatch from Hague says that great agitation prevails upon the discovery that the King was about to declare war with Prussia. There was a row in the King's Cabinet. The King was told that he must not take the initiative. The Crown Prince warned the Ministers if they did not take sides now Holland would regret her inactivity. The Cabinet appealed to the people, and petitions from all parts in favor of giving the States General and not the King the right to declare war calmed down the bellicose feeling of William. A majority of the population side with the Crown Prince.

☞ Heroic sorties are incessant at Metz. The Prussian commander has given orders for the increase of vigilance. The Prussian commissariat has been removed to avoid capture.

☞ Five hundred thousand men are massed within the walls of Paris, who would rise, and rather seek death than submit to the dismemberment of their beloved land.

Religious Items.

☞ The whole duty of Catholic men and women should be, in these days," says the Pilot "to give, and to give, and to give, and not to cease giving, till not only proselytizing schools have yielded up their prey, but till the whole United States shall have become Catholic."

☞ The Roman Catholics of Newark, N. J., propose to erect in that place a magnificent cathedral, to be the finest in the country. Father Doane, recently returned from Europe, has brought the plans for it, based on the largest and grandest churches on the continent. It is stated that it will require fifteen years to construct the edifice.

☞ The Western Catholic makes the following frank admission: "As it was easy to perceive before 1850 that the restoration of Pius IX. was not only possible but probable, so it is easy to see today that his restoration is not only improbable, but almost impossible."

☞ The San Francisco Jews have voted—88 to 24—to abolish the old custom forbidding men and women to sit together in the synagogue.

☞ A Roman Catholic newspaper is announced in France with the title of the Christian Era, the object of which is "to insist on the introduction of religious liberty into the Catholic Church, and its alliance with the genius of modern times."

☞ The recent General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Canada adopted the liturgy of the parent body of the United States, placed the appointment of presiding elders in the hands of the Bishop, and prohibited the reception of any person who used tobacco into an annual conference.

☞ The Hungarian Bishops who protested against infallibility were welcomed home with enthusiastic ovations, torchlight processions, banquets, deputations and congratulations.

☞ The employers of the New York Tract Society still continue a noon-day prayer meeting, which was established forty years ago by Harlan Page.

Items.

☞ Gen. Robert Lee, the most prominent military leader of the secessionists in our great civil war, and the ablest soldier on that side, died at Lexington, Va., Oct. 12th, in his sixty-fourth year.

☞ A French paper estimates the private fortune of Napoleon III., invested safely in foreign countries, at two hundred millions of dollars.

☞ It is the opinion of many persons, that the late unprecedented freshet in the James and Shenandoah rivers was not caused by a continued rain, but by something like the bursting of a water spout on or about their headwaters, and their sources are not a very great distance apart. The flood came down in the Shenandoah in great waves succeeding each other rapidly.

☞ A few Sabbaths since a stout, fatherly looking man was pressing his way through the crowd in Plymouth Church, in order to get nearer Beecher, when he was arrested in his progress by the great preacher's voice, singing out the words of the text: "Who art thou?" "Who art thou?" again cried out the dramatic preacher. The stout party, thinking himself in the wrong, perhaps, by pressing forward, and believing himself to be personally addressed, startled the brethren and nonplussed their reverend chieftain by sedately replying: "I'm a pig merchant from Chicago, sir. I hope you ain't mad. There ain't nary chair, or else I'd a sot down."

THE PRAYER AND THE LIFE.

Do I mean the prayers I offer—do I feel the words I say,
When before our Heavenly Father I kneel down from day to day,
When at morning and at evening I incline to seek his face,
And my voice goes up in pleading to his glorious throne of grace?

When my voice goes up in pleading, does my heart go with it too?
There are many things I ask him that his might and grace may do;
Petition on petition goes up to meet his ear,
O, are they such petitions as our Father loves to hear?

I tell him of my wants—my needs; but when I turn away,
Do I think of what I asked for? Do I watch as well as pray?
Do I strive against temptation? Do I seek like Christ to live?
Do I use aright the blessings that so freely he doth give?

My prayers are with much speaking—yet when I leave the spot,
How quickly are its memories fled—how soon those prayers forgot!
O, if the thought that gave them birth so lightly treasured be,
How can I think God's mercy will remember them for me?

Yet one petition further, Lord! Wilt thou not deign to hear?
O, let thy Spirit breathe anew through all my daily prayer.
Then help me, as I pray, to live, kept by thy grace divine—
And the glory of the prayer and life, alike, O Lord! be thine.

TIME MEASUREMENTS.

Much speculation has been indulged in with reference to the sacred measurements, and much prejudice has thus been aroused against meddling with them. This feeling ought not to exist against God's measurements. We find them in the Bible: what are we to do with them? Shall we ignore them, or treat them as blind enigmas, dangerous to be meddled with? Shall we give them a severe letting alone, simply because somebody, in by-gone days, made a wrong application of them? Shall we shun them, or discard them, simply because somebody has been mistaken in computing them? Away with such sickly reasoning. Time is in the Bible, even if it has been misapplied—time reaching from a given point to the birth and the "sufferings of Christ", and also to the "glory that should follow." We are interested both in his "sufferings", and in his "glory", and why should we not be interested in the time? Let us glance at some of Heaven's great measurements.

THE WEEKS OF DANIEL 9.

We will first notice the measurements that bring to view the birth and death of the Messiah. Can we find the precise year of the Messiah's birth? I think we can. This is a point of deep interest to the student of prophecy at present, because God's Word gives a measurement of sixty-nine prophetic weeks, or 483 years, beginning with a specific "commandment to restore and build Jerusalem," reaching "unto Messiah," "which, being interpreted, is the Christ," who was first recognized as the Messiah, or Christ, not at his baptism, but at his birth; for the angel at that epoch affirmed: "Unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ"—not one who shall be Christ thirty years hence, but who "is Christ." Now if we can definitely fix upon the precise year of Messiah's birth, we shall have a measurement of 483 years which we can trace back to the first year of Cyrus; for Jehovah "saith of Cyrus, He is my Shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure, even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built, and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid" (Is. 44: 28); and in the "first year of Cyrus," "the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus" to issue the commandment. Ezra 1: 1. Thus we have inspired chronology from the year of Messiah's birth, back to the "first of Cyrus," which is invulnerable. But to the question: In what year was Christ born? The following facts will give the answer:

1. Christ was certainly born previous to the death of Herod the Great, as during his life he ordered the slaughter of the children in Judea for the sake of destroying Christ; and Herod reigned in all thirty-four years after the death of Antigonus; and after seven years of that reign had expired, the noted battle of Actium was fought, occurring within twelve days of a September eclipse, by which this battle is astronomically and indisputably assigned to B. C. 31, leaving only twenty-seven years of Herod's reign after this epoch; thus ending it B. C. 4. Besides this, Herod's death was marked by another eclipse, which astronomically locates his death B. C. 4. Some time previously Christ was born, probably B. C. 5. But we want something stronger than a mere probability; so we will carefully look from another standpoint.

Christ's age was "about thirty years" at his baptism, which occurred "in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar" (Luke 3: 1, 23), who began to reign two years before the death of his predecessor, Augustus Cæsar; and as Augustus reigned forty-three years after the battle of Actium, which is astronomically assigned to B. C. 41, it follows that Augustus died A. D. 14. Also an eclipse marked the end of Augustus' reign, by which A. D. 14 is again proved to be the time of his death; hence, as Tiberius reigned jointly with him two years before his death, the reign of Tiberius must have commenced A. D. 12, thus making the fifteenth of Tiberius synchronize with A. D. 26, at the time of Christ's baptism, from which point we have only to reckon back thirty years, the age of Christ at his baptism, and we reach B. C. 5 as the time of his birth. This makes the matter doubly certain.

That "the fifteenth of Tiberius'" entire reign is meant, instead of the fifteenth of his independent reign, is evident; because we have proved Herod's death B. C. 4, and the birth of Christ still earlier, and have also proved the death of Augustus in A. D. 14; so if Christ was born prior to Herod's death, B. C. 4, and was not baptized till the fifteenth year after Augustus' death, A. D. it would make Christ thirty-two at his baptism, instead of thirty; but if the fifteenth of Tiberius' entire reign is meant, Christ would have been "about thirty" at his baptism, in harmony with the record.

That Cyrus gave the "commandment to restore and build Jerusalem," as well as the temple, even though Ezra gives but a part of the commandment, is evident; (1) because Jehovah affirms of Cyrus, "he shall build my city" (Is. 45: 13), and because (2) Josephus gives the historic fact that Cyrus decreed that the Jews might "rebuild their city"—thus history and prophecy agree.

THE SIXTY-TWO WEEKS.

They reach to the time Christ should be "cut off," or crucified: but where do they begin? It is said (v. 26), "The street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times," and then follows this statement: "After sixty-two weeks shall Messiah be cut off." Thus the time when Jerusalem's wall should be "built" is here designated as the epoch from which the sixty-two weeks are to be reckoned. This "wall" was completed and dedicated, according to Nehemiah's statement, in the thirty-second of Artaxerxes, which was B. C. 406; as we have already shown the first of Cyrus to have been 483 years before the birth of Christ, or 488 before the commencement of the Christian Era, by counting the independent reign of Cyrus (six years), Cambyses (three years), Darius (twenty years), Xerxes (twenty-one years), and Artaxerxes (thirty-two years), omitting the time that some of these kings reigned jointly with their predecessors, we have eighty-two years from B. C. 488 to the thirty-second of Artaxerxes; thus proving the thirty-second of Artaxerxes to have been B. C. 406; from which epoch sixty-two week, or 434 years, were to elapse, "after" which the crucifixion should occur, thus ending the sixty-two weeks A. D. 29. The first Thursday Paschal full moon after this fell on April 6, A. D. 30; and it is certain that Christ was crucified on a full moon, and also on Thursday, else he could not have risen on the "first day of the week," after sleeping "three days and nights" in the grave.

THE SEVENTY WEEKS.

The seventy weeks were allotted to "finish the transgression," or, as the margin reads, "to restrain the transgression." That is the only thought in the original. For 70 weeks from the time a certain political transgression bade fair to blot out the Jews, that transgression should be restrained; then the Jews would be overwhelmed in ruin.

All who admit that the seventy weeks are a part of the 2300 days, must frankly confess that if we can show where the seventy weeks terminate, we can also find the epoch for the end of the 2300 days,—for seventy weeks of years, being 490 years, when "cut off" from 2300 years, leave only 1810 years. This is too plain to be overlooked. But can we find out when the 70 weeks terminated? We think the language of the prophecy is explicit: "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city"—equivalent to saying, this measurement of time is assigned to your people and your city, Jerusalem, before they shall again be driven into the whirlpool of ruin. So much time was allotted them before a future visitation of wrath upon them. Then, when did the visitation of "wrath on this people" and city commence, which was to mark the end of the time assigned them? Stern historic facts answer. In A. D. 65. At the end of this allotted time (490 years), the Roman "Prince," —the rod of Jehovah's anger against that people—was to be "one week" of years in inflicting upon them the threatened "curses of the covenant," which they had incurred by transgression, but which could not be visited upon them till their allotted time had expired, without infringing upon and cutting short the time assigned them: "And the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined. And he [the Roman "Prince"] shall confirm the covenant with many for one week, and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease."—Dan. 9: 26, 27.

A certain "prince" was to "come" from some quarter with his "people" to "destroy the city" Jerusalem, in a certain "war" to continue "one week," or seven years, "in the midst" of which the "sacrifice" should "cease;" all of which was fulfilled by the Roman "Prince" from A. D. 65 to A. D. 72. As this stroke of wrath must be subsequent to the time assigned to the Jews (seventy weeks—490 years), it follows that the seventy weeks ended in A. D. 65, when this stroke of exterminating wrath began to fall upon that rebellious nation and their city, thus signally marking the close of the time of trial assigned them,—from which epoch the remaining 1810 of the 2300 years reach 1875, when the "sanctuary" is "cleansed." As this measurement reaches to the "end of the indignation," and as the resurrected saints are to be "caught up" to their "chambers" "till the indignation be overpast," it follows that the Lord's coming precedes the cleansing of the sanctuary; and other measurements prove that he will appear, in all probability, previous to 1875. But we will not at this time pause to give our views on the other periods.

For the World's Crisis.

"THINGS AS THEY ARE."

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to call attention to Bro. Boutell's article in a late number of the Crisis, under the above caption. I pray the Lord to stir him up to write more on the same subject.

While it is true the railroad company gets the money that rightfully belongs to the preacher, and his family are obliged, perhaps, to go without the very necessaries of life, to please the fancy of narrow-minded men and women, it is equally true that the churches are not benefitted as they otherwise would be, if the preachers were kept longer in a place. It is true the committee can regulate this matter if they will, and I think the general interests of the cause of God demand it of them.

The committee are not at fault alone in this matter. A great number of church-going people think we must have a change of preachers every Sabbath, or they cannot attend church. Perhaps it would be well for such ones to stay away until they get hungry for the word of God. To change when it is from bad to good is always right; and it is a part of wisdom to know when and how to change for the better.

The Lord help us to use our judgment in this direction, instead of our curiosity to see and hear from different men and women. What church has not had a sad experience in this direction? How many times in the past has some good brother come among us and preached the word faithfully, stayed up our tired hands, cheered the fainting, pointed sinners to the Lamb of God, awakened an interest in the hearts of others to hear more,—and then left. Next Sabbath a stranger comes, preaches a dry doctrinal sermon, that the older ones can hardly understand; or perhaps it will be some point of doctrine nobody ever heard before, or ever will want to hear again;—and where is the interest? It is gone, and it will take three months of hard labor of the church to get back again, and never perhaps get the same persons interested again. This is not the worst feature either, with this constant change. We are likely to get men who advocate error instead of God's precious truth.

A number of years ago a preacher came to this place with a new notion, namely, that the first resurrection was past. We see and feel the effects of that sermon to-day. Men who come to meeting to hear, and not to see and be seen, see these things, and persons of any depth of mind are disgusted with such a course, and desire a change. Shall we have it?

Whenever there have been any complaints made in regard to this constant change, we are met by the committee, and some preachers, with,—"Well, we have always prospered in the past." How have we prospered? By having real backbone in the church. The prosperity did not come by a change of preachers. Never. The church would have gone by the board long ago if it had not been for one or two faithful souls who have had a father's care, and patiently borne the folly of this continual change; and when such ones have felt it duty to go out and preach the word, we have seen and felt how much a Father's care was needed.

Men can paint fancy sketches, and tell pleasant stories; but they amount to nothing with God. All things are open and plain before him with whom we have to do. We want things as they are, and look the truth in the face. It may not be so pleasant. If it is truth, we had better have it than fiction.

The Lord help us to learn wisdom from what we have suffered, and apply the remedy at once.

WAITING FOR JESUS.

Hail! matchless King of glory fair,
Come now in majesty to reign;
Hasten the time when, in the air,
We may behold thee come again.
Why dost thou tarry still so long?
We trust thy face we soon shall see;
We then shall join that happy throng,
All clothed with immortality.

How long shall discord, tears, and strife,
Afflict our hearts and mar our peace?
Soon may we share eternal life,
And all our strife and sorrows cease.
Then joys eternal we shall share,
With the redeemed we then shall sing;
With notes of praise we'll then declare
The honor of our Savior King.

May soon that day, so long deferred,
Burst forth in all its mighty power;
When all the kingdoms of this world
Shall own thy sway in that dread hour.
Justice shall then to all be given,
And all obey thy just decree;
Then sin and death forever driven
From off the face of land and sea.

Oh! grant us patience still to wait,
And seek for truth, searching thy word,
And every sin and evil hate,
And make our help the arm of God.
Then we shall stand when Jesus comes;
Stand by his power, and that alone;
When the unjust receive their doom,
We'll stand acquitted at His throne.

STRANGE AND OMINOUS SPOTS ON THE SUN.

The following interesting letter from Prof. Langley, of the Allegheny University, appears in the Pittsburg Chronicle. It will be noticed that the concluding paragraph, respecting auroral phenomena, is in accord with what was said recently in our own editorial columns:

OBSERVATORY, ALLEGHENY,
Sept. 26th, 1870.

The appearance of spots on the sun large enough to be visible to the naked eye is a rare occurrence, but it may now be noticed by any one who takes the trouble to observe them. The aspect of the sun through a large telescope is one just now of singular interest, and it seems to claim attention from observers.

Here, where the remarkable changes of the solar surface have formed the subject of repeated observation daily, maps of the positions of the spots are made, and their singular variations have been the object of most interested scrutiny.

The side of the sun now turned toward us is to day covered with hundreds of them, of all sizes and in all stages of growth, while the opposite side, to be presented to us a few days later, is comparatively bare.

The area of one of the large spots, which is now near the centre of the disc, has been computed from careful measurements, and found to exceed 2,300,000,000 square miles. Such immense numbers convey no very definite impression, and perhaps a more vivid idea of the size may be gained by comparing it with that of the earth, whose entire area is less than a tenth part of that just given.

This is the area of the penumbra—an immense expanse of variegated forms, crossed by channels and convergent streams of luminous matter, all shifting under an action like that of some whirlwind, which is twisting them from one position to another, and changing their forms from hour to hour. The current sometimes appears to run downward, carrying with it great masses of the luminous matter to lower depths, and opening, as it does so, black cavities of a size commensurate with the scale on which this action is carried on.

The largest of these cavities is seen to be overhung with parts of the brilliant surface, which visibly break away in enormous portions, and sink in it out of sight. Indeed, it is quite within the truth to say that a globe the size of the world might be dropped in without touching either side. It is impossible to convey an adequate idea of the impression of infinite and exhaustless energy of which one is conscious while beholding this with adequate optical aid. Masses, the size of whole continents, are utterly changed in shape, or disappear from one day to another, sometimes while the observer watches them, and the whole "spot" is, to all appearance, being slowly rotated by the cyclones which are visibly working there.

This is one of many centres of similar action, not all on the same scale, but baffling the eye by their number and incessant change of form, which the draughtsman labors after in vain, and which even the photograph can but imperfectly render. At one of our largest observatories the photograph is employed to make a daily chart of these changes, and an inspection of its truthful and unbiased record will convey a more conclusive sense of the almost awful magnitude and energy of the solar forces than the most vivid description.

One who has been accustomed to watch them must feel the inadequacy of any attempt to describe these "spots," and still more so of the futility of trying to convey his own impression by any extravagance of description or comparison.

The wonder must lie in the consideration of authentic measurements, which are left to tell their own story.

The public may not share the interest of the professional observer in such matters, but our own planet is too intimately connected with these phenomena not to make them claim some interest from all of us. Why the magnetic needles move responsively to these great changes in the sun, or why auroras will light up our wintry sky at intervals more frequently repeated as this solar action is more violent, are questions which astronomy is now trying to answer. The fact that they do so is certain; the cause is still wholly unknown to science.—Boston News.

HOW TO READ THE BIBLE.

1. Read it every day.
2. Read, sometimes, one verse at a time.
3. Read, sometimes, a paragraph at a time.
4. Read, sometimes, a whole chapter; at others, a whole book.
5. Sometimes, read by subjects; e. g., the parables, by themselves, one after another; the miracles, one after another, etc.
6. Take one "character" and trace it thro' the Old and the New Testaments; thus: 1, direct history or biography; 2, illustrative comment on, either in the way of enforcing as an example or exhibiting as a warning; 3, by contrast with others of different type.
7. Hunt up a doctrine through both Testaments. For example, God's watch-care over his people—God's sovereignty—the law of the Sabbath.
8. Find out the contrasts between the Old and New Testaments; between one saint and another; between some zealous Christian and some zealot persecutor; between Jew and Samaritan.
9. Take a verse, sometimes, to pieces, word by word; and find when the potential words are used elsewhere, and in what verses.
10. Use all the helps you can get—if you haven't a commentary, put by the difficult passages to ask your minister the meaning of.
11. Above all, endeavor to make your readings of God's word improve you in the article of self-examination and growth in grace.—Religious Herald.

THE CHAOTIC CONDITION OF EUROPE—WHAT DOES IT PORTEND?

Europe at present is like a ship at sea in a terrific storm, when all on board are at their wits' end to know how to save themselves. She is rocking and surging on the waves of war and revolution. The old statesmen who have had the helm in hand have become unsteady and obstinate, not willing to throw overboard the dead weight of the past, and no bolder and more capable men have yet appeared to lighten and guide the ship. The monarchs and aristocracies are intent upon crushing, or, at least, checking the revolution. They have but one thought—to save their crowns and privileges. To do this they would rather have the war continued and all the Continent in a blaze than yield to the republican revolution. The sacrifice of hundreds of thousands of lives, or millions even, and the accumulation of stupendous debts, weigh as nothing in the scales against their prerogatives. On the other hand the sentiments of liberty, republicanism, progress and emancipation from despotic rule are deep-seated in the hearts of the people. These are upheaving society everywhere like a mighty earthquake. But the people lack organization and able leaders. While they are the real and great power, they have been so long under the heel of monarchical and aristocratic rule that they hardly know how to use their strength. Still, with all the disadvantages they labor under, and with all the organized power of the old rulers and the enormous military forces under their control, the people are making the greatest progress toward self-government. It is this conflict between the privileged few and the masses—between the ideas of the past and the present—that is now raging in Europe and that has brought about the chaotic state of things there.

* * * * * *

But what does this chaotic state of things portend? What is to come out of it? From present appearances all Europe, and may be a part of Asia and Africa, is going to be involved in war and revolution. Even those monarchs not engaged in war may resort to it to avert revolution at home and to give another direction to the public mind. This, however, may prove in the end a two-edged sword. The people are now too enlightened, probably, to be deceived by that, and the revolution the rulers would avert by such means may lead to it. Then there are national and territorial questions springing up, and questions of race and religion, as well as of the adjustment of the balance of power, which add to the complications and make the future very uncertain. Russia is moving for some object, and, probably, for accomplishing her long desired purpose in the East. England is trembling and the prey of uncertainty. Austria is anxiously watching events, and doubtful what course to take. Italy has made great strides and obtained a great and positive result in taking Rome and uniting all the Italians, but she is in the throes of revolution and fast tending to a republic. Chaos reigns supreme, and the only light gleaming upon us is that showing the advancement of the people toward self-government in one form or another. No one can say how long the struggle will last, or what dreadful scenes Europe has to pass through; but the end must be more freedom for the people and a nearer approach to the admirable and progressive system of government established in our own happy country.—N. Y. Herald.

JESUS IS COMING.

How sad it is that men of intelligence and education should be so blind to the simple truth of God's revealed word, when the "sure word of prophecy" is as "a light that shineth in a dark place until the day dawn." Surely the light never shone brighter than it does now. Praise the Lord for the truth. While the nations are angry, and the whole world is in commotion—while "men's hearts" are "failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are on the earth," Jesus bids his children lift up their heads, for their redemption draweth nigh.

How cheering to the waiting ones the blessed thought that Jesus is coming; yes, coming to take his weary bride to her everlasting rest—to a home not made by hands, in the New Jerusalem, the city of the living God. With this glorious prospect before us, let us watch—watch, lest we falter in the hour of temptation—watch, lest amid the perils of the last days we sink among the many quicksands around us, or are bewildered with the delusions that are like a snare in our pathway. Let us watch while the enemies of God are doing their last work, preparatory to the last great battle of "Armageddon," and possess ourselves with patience, that we may be ready to meet our coming King.

LIZZIE A. GARDNER.

WALKING WITH GOD.

Two men in Scripture are said to have walked with God—Enoch and Noah; and the one was carried up that he should not see death, the other was carried over the waves of the flood. They walked by faith. All the different parts of man's natural life and movements are used by the Spirit to symbolize the spiritual. "My foot standeth in an even place." "I will not sit with the wicked." "I will lay me down in peace." "Run with patience the race set before you." "I have leaped over a wall." These are exceptional movements; the regular movement of a man's daily life is his walking. His whole life, in all its movements, small and great, are comprehended in this.

In walking in Christ these four things are included:

1. Reconciliation.
2. Abiding.
3. Fellowship.
4. Obedience.

This walk on earth is through storms and trials; but there is another walk when this is ended, and then the Lord comes "they shall walk with me in white"—the walk of peace, and triumph, and glory—when the Lamb shall lead us to the living fountains of waters, and God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes.—Dr. H. Bonar.

MAINE CONFERENCE.

The Maine Westerly Quarterly Conference was held with the brethren in Bowdoin, Sept. 15th, and over the following Sunday, with good success. The meetings were held in the Dennet school-house, with good attendance and interest until Sunday, when it was removed to the Baptist meeting-house; the style and condition of which strongly reminded us of a former generation, now sleeping in dust, who once worshiped there, and will soon awake to eternal life. The house was well filled, and we trust good was done.

Quite a number of preaching brethren from different parts of the State were present to preach the word. Will those brethren who wish the next session in their place, in December, please give us due notice by letter?

A WORD OF THANKS.

I would render a tribute of praise to-day,
To the bountiful Author of good,
For the manifold blessings he strews in my way;
Lest I should be tempted to wander astray,
And neglect to love as I should.

Especially now would I praise his dear name,
For the recent and signal display
Of rich grace in giving me vigor again,
The unsearchable riches of Christ to proclaim,
Thus cheating the grave of its prey.

Another strong reason exists in my mind
For praising and thanking the Lord,
In the undeserved favor he gave me to find,
By providing me friends so attentive and kind,
When helpless, and sick, and abroad.

I pray that the blessing of heaven may fall
In large measure on them where they be,
That Christ will not fail to reward one and all,
Nor suffer disaster a soul to befall,
But assure each—"Ye have done it to Me."

Westfield, Oct. 7th, 1870. E. OWEN.

"TAKE MY HAND, PAPA."

In the dead of night, I am frequently wakened by a little hand stealing out from the crib by my side, with the pleading cry. "Please take my hand, papa!"

Instantly the little boy's hand is grasped, his fears vanish, and soothed by the consciousness of his father's presence he falls into sweet sleep again.

We commend this lesson of simple, filial faith and trust to the anxious, sorrowing ones, that are found in almost every household. Stretch forth your hand, stricken mourner, although you may be in the deepest darkness and gloom, and fear and anxious suspense may cloud your weary pathway, and that very act will reveal the presence of a loving, compassionate Father, and give you the peace that passeth all understanding.

The darkness may not pass away at once, night may still enfold you in its embrace, but its terrors will be dissipated, its gloom and sadness flee away, and in the simple grasp of the Father's hand sweet peace will be given, and you will rest securely, knowing that the "morning cometh."—Congregationalist.

GENTLE WORDS.

O, these are words which angel lips
Might covet sure to claim;
Sweet words of comfort, joy and peace,
So holy, free from blame;
Heart-words of cheer, which bless the soul,
Heal the bruised reed and make it whole.

Gems.

— Moderation is the great secret of government. To be always dissatisfied is the way to lose all authority and respect. The consequence of those people is most cheerfully acknowledged who seem least forward to assert it.

— Surely, as the lower the ebb, the higher the tide, so the lower any descend in humility, the higher they shall ascend in honor or glory. The lower this foundation of humility is laid, the higher shall the roof of honor be overlaid.

— Whatsoever we bestow let it be given with a cheerful countenance; a man must not give with his hand and deny with his heart.

All things are possible to God—
To Christ the power of God in man,
To me, now I am all renewed,
I through him am formed again,
And now through Christ, from sin set free,
All things are possible to me.

— Remember that self-interest is more likely to warp your judgment than all other circumstances combined; therefore look well to your duty when your interest is concerned.

— God's word is like God's world—varied, very, very beautiful. You never know when you have exhausted all its secrets. The Bible, like nature, has something for every class of mind.

— The true gentleman is always modest. He is more ready to obtain the opinions of others than to parade his own.

— Never be sorry for any generous thing that you ever did, even if it was betrayed. Never be sorry that you were magnanimous, if the man was mean afterward. Never be sorry that you gave. It was right for you to give, even if you were imposed upon. You cannot afford to keep on the safe side by being mean.

— The good may well be termed the salt of the earth; for where there is no integrity, there can be no confidence; and where there is no confidence, there can be no unanimity.

— Never stand aside for trifles. Let them do that honor to you.

— Whatever you dislike in another, take care to correct in yourself.

Take the bright shell from its home in the sea,
And wherever it goes it will sing of the sea.
So take the fond heart from its home and its hearth,
'Twill sing of the loved to the ends of the earth.

— When the flaunting banner of ambition becomes the shroud of death, where is all its vaunted greatness? Why, buried in the earth with him o'er whose proud head it floated in the wind.

— The cowardly and the inactive lie in the ditch where they fall, or under the ruins that crush them; but the hopeful and energetic are upon their feet again, moving once more towards the goal of success, and more cautiously than before.

— The moral cement of society is virtue; it unites and preserves, while vice separates and destroys.

— Take the world as it is, not as it ought to be.

— The fewer the words, the better the prayer.

— The sun-dial only counts the bright hours.

EFFICACY OF PRAYER.—I no more believe that God leaves a right prayer, offered in the right spirit, to pass unnoticed, than I believe that he will let this whole summer pass over without a drop of rain or dew. In securing answers to our requests, we must co-operate with the Lord. Some people ask him to do their work. "Father," said a little boy, after he had heard him pray fervently for the poor at family worship, "Father, I wish I had your corn crib." "Why my son?" "Because, then I would answer your prayer." I have heard professing christians pray for the conversion of their children, while they are taking them night after night into scenes of frolic and dissipation. We may make fools of ourselves, but the Almighty will never let us make a fool of him. "God is not mocked; whatsoever we sow, we shall also reap." Neither does God ever mock us.—T. L. Cuyler.

NAME YOUR OWN CHILDREN.—Many persons are in the habit of sending in articles for publication without giving them any title. The acceptance or rejection of an article frequently depends upon its title. A good head is worth ofttimes half the article. It should be very expressive—a sort of bull's eye window through which a reader can get a good glimpse of the spirit of the whole. It should not generally exceed three words, but no rule can be adhered to in this respect. The shorter and more expressive, the better. An author should never commit so important a part of an article to any one else—Herald of Peace.

A PANTHEIST minister met Dr. Emmons one day, and abruptly asked—
"Mr. Emmons, how old are you?"
"Sixty, sir, and how old are you?"
"As old as the creation," was the answer, in a triumphant tone.
"Then you are the same age with Adam and Eve?"
"Certainly; I was in the garden when they were."
"I have always heard that there was a third person in the garden with them," replied the doctor, with great coolness, "but I never knew before that it was you."

Hygiene.

"This is for your health."—PAUL.

RADICAL REFORM.

We wish to pronounce, unqualifiedly, in favor of radical reform. We believe in the oft-repeated injunction, "Cease to do evil; learn to do well." . . . Like other reformers, we see no half-way ground between right and wrong; no place for compromise with error. . . . . .

All hygienists are agreed that the eating of pork or other similar food, is transgression of law, and hence a sin. But suppose a person were to be placed for a length of time where he could get no other food. To eat nothing at all would be suicidal, and a transgression of the sixth commandment of the decalogue. In this case the circumstances decide as to the sinfulness of the act, which they cannot be allowed to do in respect to violation of the moral law.

And so it is in every case of transgression of physical law; the conditions and circumstances determine the degree of wrong in the act. Those who make the health reform a part of their religion, as no small proportion of our readers do, will agree with us that they themselves would be regarded as guilty in the sight of Heaven in doing things that they would not consider as criminal in their neighbors who had not received the light of truth and become established in it.

Hence in bringing about a change of diet, we must take into account the circumstances, especially such as are beyond the person's control. We do not advocate a slow change. Let it be brought about as rapidly as circumstances will allow. But were all who become convinced of duty in regard to the matter to drop every article of diet to which objection could be made, and substitute only radically and rigidly hygienic food, in our opinion fully one half would abandon the system in discouragement, who would be led to persevere by a careful and judicious gradation in the change.

Nor would a person's previous determinations in the matter be a sufficient safeguard to carry him through. Under the depressing influence of a radical change of diet, good resolutions are frequently shaken all to pieces, and persons who naturally get credit for considerable firmness, under this ordeal get fickle and vascillating as the weather-vane.

With many, however, this is not the case. They do not seem to be particularly susceptible to such influences, and can make the change with little or no effort. Their blood-making organs will take care of what is presented to them; and they are perhaps disposed to judge of others by their own standard. But he who would accomplish the greatest amount of good must learn to take people as he finds them, and without lowering the standard of truth and right, make due allowances for circumstances, and endeavor to help those who are for the time being unable to help themselves. "Of some, have compassion, making a difference.—Health Reformer.

THE BABIES.

In an article in Good Health, on the care of babies during "teething," the writer says:

"It is particularly important, on account of the feverishness to which an infant is subject during the period of teething, to secure it against the cold, and especially to keep it out of draughts, care being taken at the same time that the air is kept pure by proper ventilation. Children during this period are very subject to attacks of bronchitis, which are often very serious; they are often, too, seized with much 'wheezing' on the chest, and seem to be about to have some very severe chest complaint; but the symptoms pass off as suddenly as they appear.

Restlessness at night is commonly associated with the feverishness of teething: a warm bath before going to bed is a very useful remedy for this: opiates or soothing syrups, most of which contain opium, should never be given; the slumber they produce in these cases is unhealthy and unrefreshing. In the event of any nervous symptoms arising, as spasmodic croup, or convulsions, the infant should immediately be placed in a warm bath, and medical aid should be sent for.

Treatment of an infant undergoing the critical process of dentition, should consist in strict observance of the rules of health. More air, more water, more repose, are needed; and greater regularity in feeding should be observed."

DIARRHEAL COMPLAINTS ATTRIBUTED TO DISEASED MEATS.—Dr. Harris, President of the New York Board of Health, stated that of thirteen head of cattle purchased at the New York cattle yards, apparently healthy, every one was attacked with disease before they could be driven to Westchester county and slaughtered; that large quantities of diseased meat had been sold in market, and notwithstanding the extraordinary precautionary measures taken to preserve the health of the city of New York, the deaths last week from diarrhæal causes exceeded the number of deaths from sun-stroke during the recent heated term; that these deaths were principally among middle-aged persons, and that their sickness was mainly attributable to diseased meat.

Professor Gamgee affirms that one-fifth of the common meat of Great Britain—beef, veal, mutton and lamb—is diseased, while Professor Gerlach states that in Berlin at least as much diseased as healthy meat is consumed. In New York City last year the Board of Health caused over one hundred and twenty tons of unsound meat, fish and poultry to be destroyed. —Our Dumb Animals.

WHISKY.—Says Dr. Guthrie: "If you want to keep a dead man put him in whisky. If you want to kill a living man, put the whisky into him. Before God and man, before the church and the world, I impeach intemperance. I charge it with the murder of innumerable souls. In this country, blessed with freedom and plenty, the word of God and the liberties of true religion, I charge it as the cause—whatever be their source elsewhere—of almost all the poverty, and almost all the crime, and almost all the misery, and almost all the ignorance, and almost all the irreligion that disgrace and afflict the land. 'I am not mad, most noble Festus. I speak the words of truth and soberness.' I do in my conscience believe that these intoxicating stimulants have sunk into perdition more men and women than found a grave in that deluge, which swept over the highest hill-tops, engulfing a world of which but eight were saved."

COVERING THE LUNGS.—One of the most important things to be considered in dress is the careful covering of the chest and back. Exposing the lungs by inadequate shielding of these portions of the body from cold is too generally practiced, especially by ladies. To cover the chest alone most carefully is not enough. There should be a thick covering over the shoulders.

DYSPEPTICS should never eat fruit except at meal time, and then not to excess.

THE TRUTH, AND NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH.

"I didn't mean it, aunty," said John, the color rising to his face. "I just said it for fun."

"Told a lie in fun!"

"Now, aunty, that is too bad! It's making a mountain out of nothing. I detest a liar, and you know I do."

The boy's eyes flashed with quick indignation.

"And yet," said Aunt Mary, the sober look not going out of her eyes, "you told Edie that on the other side of the mountain was a garden in which the plants had golden leaves, and bore rubies and diamonds and pearls for fruit."

"But she knew it wasn't so, Aunt Mary. She knew it was only my talk."

"You wanted her to believe it, didn't you?"

The color grew deeper on John's face.

"Edie is a very little girl, John. She is just beginning to learn about things. How should she know whether a pearl grew on a bush or came out of the sea unless she were told? And it seems to me you are not making a generous use of what you have learned when you make sport of her ignorance."

"Oh, aunty! I never thought of it in that way," said John. "I only wanted to have a little fun."

"There are plenty of ways to get fun, my dear, that are right and innocent," replied Aunt Mary. "And I am glad you can see that one of these ways is not in making sport of a little child's ignorance at the expense of truth."—Children's Hour.

BOYS, SPARE THE BIRDS!

Don't kill the little birds!
Who sing on bush and tree,
All through the summer days,
Their sweetest melody.

Don't shoot the little birds!
The earth is God's estate—
And he provideth food
For small, as well as great.

Don't kill the little birds!
Whose plumage wings the air,
Whose trill at early morn
Makes music everywhere.

What though the cherries fall,
Half eaten from the stem?
And strawberries disappear,
In garden, field and glen?

Still, like the widow's cruse,
There's always plenty left;
How sad a world were this
Of little birds bereft.

Think of the good they do,
In all the orchards round,
A grub we scarcely find,
Where robins most abound.

In this great world of ours,
If we can trust His word,
There's food enough for all—
Don't kill a single bird!

THE HORNET'S NEST.

Some time ago, a farmer, finding a hornet's nest under the eaves of his barn, determined to destroy it. So he took some matches, tied them to a pole, and with them set fire to the nest, and totally destroyed it; unfortunately, however, the barn was also burned, together with the grain, to the value of fifteen hundred dollars, on which there was no insurance.

"What a fool!" some one says. Not so great a fool as thousands are proving themselves to be.

This man burned down a barn to get rid of a hornet's nest. What else is a man doing who drinks rum to cure disease? "It may save life," the wise doctor says. Yes, but it is apt to destroy it after a while. I know many a man who, in trying to burn out a pain in his breast by firing his stomach with brandy, has set his whole house on fire, and both body and reputation were destroyed.

Take care, children, that you do not set fire to your house for the sake of destroying a hornet's nest. Never mind what friends and others may say about it.—Banner.

Kind hearts are the gardens,

"HE SMELLS OF RUM."—A little girl went to the fair with her father and mother. There were many nice things to be seen, and Mary thought them all very fine. One of the men who kept the fair took great pains to show them to Mary; but when Mary could get away from him she ran to her father and mother, and would not go back. Her mother said, "Why do you do so, my child? The man is very kind to show you all the nice things." Then Mary put her lips close to her mother's ear, and said in a low voice, "He smells of rum, ma," and so she would not go to him at all. We think Mary did right.—Ex.

LINGER NOT.

The time is short!
If thou wouldst work for God it must be now—
If thou wouldst win the garland for thy brow—
Redeem the time.

Shake off earth's sloth!
Go forth with staff in hand while yet 'tis day;
Set out with girded loins upon thy way—
Up, linger not.

Fold not thy hands!
What has the pilgrim of the cross and crown
To do with luxury or couch of down?
On, pilgrim, on.

Sheathe not the sword!
The battle lies before thee, and the prize
Hangs yonder, far above these earthly skies—
Fight the good fight.

Life ebbs apace!
Fast crumbles down this house of mortal clay,
Fling not like dust thy precious hours away—
The end is near.

Faint not, O man!
Follow the Master through the glorious strife,
Follow his footsteps till they end in life—
Be strong in him.

With his reward
He comes, he tarries not, his day is near,
When least men look for him will he be here—
Prepare for him.

SLEEP: THE AWAKING.

BY O. R. FASSETT.

"As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness." Ps. 17: 15.

(Concluded.)

James Leonard Corning, spending "A Sunday with the Ashes of the Heretics," writes from the graves of Luther and Melancthon to the Independent: "Again and again we lifted the oaken doors, and gazed down upon the simple record; and is it any wonder that for the moment sentiment had full sway, and this hoarded dust seemed more precious than gold and jewels? And yet, when reason reasserted her function, I said, 'What would it have mattered if these ashes, like those of Wickliffe, had been cast into some river and been borne to the sea beyond recovery?' The invisible forces of great and noble lives cannot be imprisoned in sepulchres or drowned in floods. And so I cannot think that the great reformers in their spirit-home care much for these mouldering relicts which drew our footsteps hither."

How virtually is the doctrine of the resurrection ignored and done away by this spurious and fabled heathen tradition? And does the writer forget that the remains of Wickliffe were dug from their resting-place, where they had slept forty years, and cast into the brook Swift, which runs into the Avon, to destroy his hope of a resurrection from the dead?

"The Avon to the Severn runs,
The Severn to the sea;
And Wickliffe's dust did spread abroad
Wide as the waters be."

Also, that the enemies of the cross and the hope of the gospel, after burning John Huss at the stake, gathered his ashes and threw them into the Rhine, in contempt of his hope, and sent his soul to conscious purgatory? But, thanks be to God, Omniscience knows where not only is "the hoarded dust" of Luther and Melancthon, which seemed to the writer "more precious than gold and jewels"; but where the scattered dust of these eminent servants of the Lord is, and Omnipotence will gather them, and quicken and new-mould that dust into living forms by a glorious and triumphant resurrection from the dead to an immortal life; and their bodies, redeemed, shall shine in the image of their risen Lord and Redeemer, to the disappointment and confusion and everlasting shame of their enemies and all who believe not the hope of the gospel.

"How they so softly rest,
All, all the holy dead,
Unto whose dwelling-place
Now doth my soul draw near!
How they so softly rest,
All in their silent graves,
Deep to corruption
Slowly down sinking!
And they no longer weep
Here, where complaint is still!
And they no longer feel
Here, where all gladness flies!
And by the cypresses
Softly o'ershadowed,
Until the Angel
Calls them, they slumber."

—Longfellow.

The solemn, the serious, the stern reality, of this condition in death, and yet the comforting hope the gospel affords, has been so graphically portrayed in the language of Dr. Spring of New York, in the close of one of his sermons, that I cannot forbear to quote the remarkable sentiment and beautiful and eloquent words he has used:

"We die; but intervening ages pass rapidly over those who sleep in dust. There is no plate there on which to count the hours of time. No longer is it told by days, or months, or years; for the planets which mark those periods are hidden from the sight. Its flight is no longer noticed by the events perceived by the senses, for the ear is deaf and the eye is closed. The busy world of life, which wakes at each morning and ceases every night, goes on above them, but to them all is silent and unseen. The greetings of joy and the voice of grief, the revolution of empires, and the lapse of ages, send no sound within that narrow cell. Generation after generation are brought and laid by their side; the inscription upon their monumental marbles tells the centuries that have passed away; but to the sleeping dead the long interval is unobserved. Like a dream of the night, with the quickness of thought, the mind ranges time and space almost without a limit. There is but a moment between the hour when the eye is closed in the grave, and when it wakes to the judgment."

How impressive this description of the departed dead. How remarkable and true the fact is the picture drawn. The dead are gone to the dark night of death, the profound slumbers of the grave, the land of silence! They await the morning that is to dawn when the "Sun of Righteousness" shall arise. Yet to "the sleeping dead, the long interval is unobserved." "After death the judgment." Heb. 9: 27. There may be intervening ages between the hour of death and the day of judgment; but that space is so annihilated by the state of unconsciousness of the dead, that in the language of Bishop Whateley, "To each person the moment of his closing his eyes in death will be instantly succeeded by the sound of the last trumpet, which shall summon the dead." A person struck down with lightning to insensibility and death, or killed by accident, as in a railroad disaster, or who dies by sudden disease,—the next moment to him is the judgment!

I must confess, to me there is a seriousness and a solemnity in the reflection of the intermediate state as thus presented, and a necessity of a constant preparation for the judgment, as revealed in the Scriptures, which does not affect the mind with the thought of the long interval of a conscious intermediate state of partial rewards. And certainly there is greater consistency in the doctrine, and more harmony with reason and the Holy Scriptures concerning the nature of the penalty of sin, which is death,—a future day of judgment,—and the retributions that day will reveal. And it does away with purgatory for the purification of the souls of the dead, and the error of the doctrine of endless progression of the spirits of the dead.

3. The proof is found in the fact that from the sleep of death the dead are to be awakened, and that constitutes the resurrection.

The awakening of Lazarus out of his sleep occurred four days after his decease, and by his actual resurrection from the dead and the sepulchre where he slumbered in death. John 11.

Modern spiritualism and immaterialistic orthodoxy, so reputed to be, make this awakening to occur simultaneously with dying, as though one could fall asleep and awake at one and the same time. A philosophical impossibility! "Death is the evolution of life," it is asserted. "There is no death; what seemeth so is transition." Hence it is made to appear that the dead are alive! the sleeper awake!

The Scriptures, however, more consistently, make the epoch of the falling asleep in death and the awakening two distinct and separate periods. The time for the two to occur, however short the period, must have an interim between. Death is denominated "falling asleep," the resurrection from a state of death, the "awakening out of sleep." And if death is the condition of sleep, the resurrection from the dead must be the awaking from that sleep; and nothing short of it. To make the Scriptures teach otherwise is to make them teach an absurdity; and if it could be made to appear that they do so teach, they would be undeserving of credence as a divine revelation! Let us be careful how we "corrupt the word of God," or "wrest the Scriptures," or "handle the word of God deceitfully."

The epoch for the awakening of the sleepers in death is fixed "at the last day." Dan. 12: 1-3; 1 Cor. 15; Rev. 11; John 5: 28, 29; also John 6.

"Through sorrow's night and danger's path,
Amid the deepening gloom,
We, soldiers of an injured King,
Are marching to the tomb.

There, when the turmoil is no more,
And all our powers decay,
Our cold remains, in solitude,
Shall sleep the years away.

Our labors done, securely laid
In this our last retreat,
Unheeded, o'er our silent dust,
The storms of life shall beat.

Then Love's soft light o'er every eye
Shall shed its mildest rays,
When the long silent dust shall rise
With shouts of endless praise."

II. In what the likeness of his Redeemer consists.

1. In being raised like him to a condition of immortality and incorruptibility. Paul affirms concerning Christ:—"Knowing that Christ, being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him."—Rom. 6: 9. And Jesus by his angel has declared, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen."—Rev. 1: 18. He, therefore, is now endowed with "the power of an endless life." The risen saints, "at the last day," will attain a like immortality and incorruptibility. Jesus has said, "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage. Neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."—Luke 20: 35, 36. "Behold," says Paul, "I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."—1 Cor. 15: 51-58.

2. In being glorified like him in person. Peter affirms on the day of Pentecost, "The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers, hath glorified his Son Jesus; whom ye delivered up, and denied him in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let him go."—Acts 3: 13. As a glorified being, his person in splendor eclipses the grandeur of the meridian sun; and he is "the brightness of his Father's glory."—Heb. 1: 3. An illustration of him as a glorified being was given upon "the holy mount," when he was "transfigured" before his disciples. Matt. 17.

The apostle assures us that "as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly" (1 Cor. 15: 49), and that in the day of his coming. "For," he says, "our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body."—Phil. 3: 20, 21.

It is when "them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt," that "they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever."—Dan. 12: 2, 3. And, adds Jesus, "The righteous shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father."—Matt. 13: 43.

3. In being raised to a sinless and perfect state.

Although Jesus Christ never was a sinner, and in him was never found guile, or the least stain of guilt, yet he was placed under temptation and made under the law. Over all he however triumphed gloriously together with the adversary of men, the devil; and the full conquest in his own person is achieved as a final victory over the powers of darkness. His people, however, are not yet perfected, nor above the power of the tempter, or of sin, nor will they be until they are glorified and redeemed from corruption, and put on immortality. Then they will be above temptation, and sinning, and be translated into a sinless, pure, and holy world, to dwell therein henceforth as pure and sinless as their Savior. To me, and it must be to every christian heart, a most enrapturing thought, that an eternity in a sinless world is the hope of the redeemed. Finally:

III. The satisfaction to be experienced.

"As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness," says David. Nothing short of the experience of this hope will satisfy him. First, nothing in this world, even the riches and honors, and all the world offers to its votaries (v. 14). Second, nothing in a state of death, or during the sleep of death; for he conceived and regarded the state in death as one of no conscious reward or enjoyment. "In death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?"—Ps. 6: 5. "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence."—Ps. 115: 17. And his anxious inquiries were, with the calamity of death before him, "Wilt thou show wonders to the dead? Shall the dead arise and praise thee? Shall thy loving kindness be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulness in destruction?"—Ps. 88: 10, 11. Assured that this would be the case, and triumphing in the hope (Ps. 71: 20-24), he utters the sentiment of the text with rapture: "I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness"; which language, when compared with that of the beloved John, reveals David's hope to be that of "the resurrection," at the appearing of his Lord. "Beloved, it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." And John adds, "Every man that hath this hope in him [Christ] purifieth himself, even as he [Christ] is pure."

The satisfaction, then, to be experienced, which David desired and earnestly hoped for, was to see his Redeemer in his effulgent glory, just as he is, being himself justified and purified; and to "be like him," "crowned with glory, honor, and immortality" (Rom. 2: 7; Heb. 2: 9), and reign with him forever in his everlasting kingdom in the new earth, or when his prophetic prayers are fully answered —"Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more." "And let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen, and Amen. The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended." And well they might be, for he could ask no more. Ps. 72, and 102.

"Then shall I see, and hear, and know,
All I desired or wished below;
And every power find sweet employ,
In that eternal world of joy."

REMARKS.

When we contemplate the millions of the sleeping saints and martyrs of Jesus, who like David have gone down to the grave, and are in the profound and undisturbed slumbers of death, awaiting the coming morning of the resurrection, and the consummation of all their ardent hopes of eternal life;—when we think of kindred, who each lie in their silent beds of dust—gone to corruption, and our hearts are saddened in the bereavement, and we drop the scalding tear of sorrow and affection far away from their graves, or on the green sod which covers their precious remains;—when, too, we consider that we may die, and be buried beneath the ground in the narrow house ere our Redeemer shall come, how we are comforted with this "the blessed hope."

The saints of God will rise again; they shall "awake and sing" from the dust. Our dear ones, whom we have laid away in deep sadness, having closed their eyes in the slumbers of death, shall awake to life, and we shall see them again in immortal bloom, to fade and die no more; and we shall hear their familiar voices long since hushed in the silence of the grave. And we too, should we fall asleep in death, and kind friends convey us to the grave and bury us there, as the last sad office of kindness and affection they can minister to us, shall "hear the voice of the Son of God, and . . live." "Begotten to this lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead," may we not sing these most expressive and beautiful words, so in agreement with the language of David, and which I have adopted as my evening hymn:

"If I in thy likeness, O Lord, may awake,
And shine a pure image of thee,
Then I shall be satisfied when I can break
The fetters of death and be free.
I know this stained tablet must first be washed white,
To let thy bright features be drawn;
I know I must suffer the darkness of night,
To welcome the coming of dawn.

O! I shall be satisfied when I can cast
The shadow of nature all by,
When this cold, dreary world from my vision is passed,
To dwell 'neath an unclouded sky.
I now feel the blest morning begins to draw near,
When time's dreary fancy shall fade,
If then in thy likeness I may but appear,
In glory and beauty arrayed.

To see thee in glory, O Lord, as thou art,
Freed from mortal, perishing clay,
My spirit is longing to be where thou art,
And sighs for the dawn of that day.
And when on thine own image in me thou hast smiled,
Within thy blest mansion, and when
The arms of my Father encircle his child,
O! I shall be satisfied then!"

OPEN STILL.

"Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear."—Isa. 59: 1.

No, blessed be his holy name, the door of mercy is open still. Christ is still on the mediatorial seat pleading for sinners, and whosoever will may come and take of the water of life freely. But the time is soon coming when it will be closed forever; then, where will the ungodly and the sinner appear? Those who are righteous will be righteous still; the unjust will be unjust still; and the filthy will be filthy still.

How solemn the thought that we are so fast hastening towards the judgment, and so many souls yet unsaved. Should it not arouse us, as christians, to be up and doing while the day lasts? There is not a moment to spare. How many thousands of poor perishing mortals are rushing heedlessly along the downward road to ruin, and so many sleeping christians taking their ease in Zion, thinking that there is nothing for them to do. O, christian professors, let us bestir ourselves to action in the divine life, for this is no time to sleep. We are living in the last days, and what we do must be done quickly. All the prophecies of the Bible are being fulfilled. Soon the last trump will sound. Then how shall we appear before our God, if we allow these precious moments to run to waste, when there is so much work to be done for our Master? Let us arise and gird on our whole armor, and go to work now, while the hand of the Lord is "not shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear."

Hark! the voice of Jesus crying,
Who will go and work to-day?
Fields are white and harvests waiting,
Who will bear the sheaves away?

Loud and long the Master calleth,
Rich reward he offers free;
Who will answer, gladly saying,—
"Here am I, send me, send me"?

CHASING A REVIVAL.—No. 7.

What more can be said to arouse the church to activity in revival work? for this is special work; it is work to some purpose, and reaches into the ages to come: all other labors of the church will end with the coming of Christ.

We much doubt whether the generality of preachers have this subject at heart as they should to exonerate themselves in God's sight. We are inclined to think that but few of them have any burden, or heartfelt desire to see men converted in God's way. They all have some favorite subject they wish to enunciate, and this takes precedence of all others. We have no expectation of seeing a revival or hearing of one in any church, until its members are united, and humbly at the feet of Jesus pleading for mercy, and fasting withal. We have often intimated that the ordinary work of the church does not often eventuate in the conversion of any large number of souls. It is much like an army in time of peace. It may have its drills, its dress parades and pastimes, but does not throw a missile into the enemy's camp, and makes no effort to break its lines.

We hear occasionally of a few here and there being brought from darkness to light, but what are they among so many? Where is the strong faith that takes hold upon the promises of God, as did Jacob of old, and says, "I will not let thee go, unless thou bless"? Has it been weakened by those who have taught that the door of mercy is shut? We fear there is too much of this leaven lingering in the minds of some. We think there are yet many precious souls to be gathered into the fold, especially the lambs of the flock; and if Sabbath School workers would lay aside all the modern machinery and formality that have been introduced into this work, and make the conversion of the children a speciality, there would probably be a rich harvest gathered into the fold. And I would say, lay aside the catechism, and turn the key upon every other book but the Bible and hymn-book, and labor, and fast, and pray, and persuade, until every child in the school is born again,—born of the Spirit, brought from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. For they had better be ignorant of doctrines, or creeds, or histories, or genealogies, than to be destitute of the love of God shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost.

Dr. Kirk, of Boston, once said at a Sabbath School Teachers' Convention, that children have more heart than intellect; and this truth should be indelibly impressed upon every teacher's memory, and he should aim to have the heart given to Christ before striving to cram the brain with logic, or doctrines, or any thing else that will not stand the fires of the last day. We feel the importance of this revival work among the young; for it is the only work, as we have intimated, that will tell at the day of judgment.

Daniel in his closing words says, "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars forever and ever." A crown in glory studded with stars will be a high honor to the wearer, and the language above intimates that it can be secured, and by turning men to righteousness; and here we are brought again to consider the subject of conversion, and this is something that requires almighty power. We think it was one of the Wesleys was once met by a drunken man, who took him by the hand, and said,

"Don't you know me?"

"I have no recollection of ever seeing you before."

"Why, you converted me once."

"Well," said Wesley, "you look like some of my work. If God had done it, you would have presented a more perfect specimen."

There is evidently too much of this kind of work in the church at large. Then aim at the heart, and that it may be renewed by the Holy Spirit; and that preacher or church whose plane is not up to this point, has set the standard too low.

We think the time has come to which the Savior referred when he said, "Watch." What did he mean? We suppose multitudes will keep a closer watch upon the telegrams, and the reports of battles and movements of armies, than upon their own hearts; and if they require these influences to arouse them to the service of God, they must have a sluggish soul. As for myself, I have concluded to chase nothing but salvation, and this will require all my powers. D. N. SMITH.

DEW DROPS.

It is not enough that we are conscious of our gifts, but we must pray over them that they may bring forth the most possible fruit.

"Stir up the gift that is in thee."

Faith brings fresh blessings to the soul in all times of need; it is easy to believe the word of God, when we obey it. Obedience is better than costly sacrifice.

Faithfulness in the closet, brings the presence of Jesus with us in the smallest duties. Answers to prayer are delightful incidents, scattered all the way through life, giving interest and great importance to very common things. "The very hairs of your head are all numbered."

"Looking unto Jesus," imparts strength and joy to the soul, but looking unto self is a forlorn hope, and never carries us a step further on the right way. Try the great remedy, Christ and sufficiency, and so look up for help, that the habit will be upward, and not groveling in the weakness of self-sufficiency.

It requires less faith in presenting general petitions, than to be special and particular; but when we go to the mercy seat with requests earnestly filling our thoughts, our faith is fixed as it were in a focus, and we must know that we are heard and regarded. When we have the presence of God in prayer, we are not inclined to ask for faith, for we cannot help believing in the divine presence—and we need never be without it, for Christ is continually bowing his ear to his people. Only be as ready to ask, as Jesus is to bestow, and you will never cry, "my leanness, my leanness!"

The church must thoroughly learn one great, important lesson—Christ's oneness with his people.

Many people rest short of clear evidences of their acceptance in Christ. It is not only our privilege to have one or two evidences, but to abound in them—and resting short of a clear state of acceptance, is insincere in us, for God is willing to bestow all the inward satisfaction we can need or require.—Guide to Holiness.

For the World's Crisis.

"WORTHY."—Luke 20: 35.

Ponder well the word, O my soul! Let every vain or ambitious or worldly thought be hushed to silence, and let every hope of justification by any works of righteousness that we have done be put far from us as the east is from the west, when we approach the tribunal of our own heart, and examine ourselves by the light of God's unchanging word, that we may know if the evidences that we belong to him are such as will avail us in the day when he shall make inquisition, and bring into judgment every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil. "For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things." But if our heart condemn us not, because we abide in him, "then have we confidence toward God," that we should not be ashamed before him at his coming.

How blessed to know that we have not to plead any righteousness of our own; that Jesus himself ministers the sacrifice that shall forever purge away our sins, cleansing us from all unrighteousness, that he may present us "holy and unblamable," and "faultless," "before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy."

Consider the work that he hath wrought in us, to the praise and glory of his grace, whereby we are accepted in the Beloved, and have obtained an inheritance in his name. While our own righteousness is as "filthy rags," in him we have the "righteousness of God." And of such he has said, "They shall walk with me in white, for they are worthy."

Some one has illustrated the way in which God looks upon the christian, as being like the view we have of objects when examined through colored glass. Every thing we see is invested with the charm of light and beauty peculiar to the glass itself. Even so doth God behold every humble, trusting, loving child of his, in the face of his Son, arrayed in all the glory and loveliness of person and character which pertains to Christ alone. How blessed the condition, to be found in him, not having on our own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ; the righteousness which is of God, by faith.

"Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God;" and there is now "no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit." And we are persuaded that "neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." CARRIE W. BIXBY.

SUBSTITUTION.

BRO. GRANT:—In Crisis No. 77, our corresponding editor, Bro. Sheldon, very pertinently asks the question—"How could Christ be put in the sinner's place, and, as the sinner's substitute, suffer the penalty instead of the sinner, provided that penalty is really everlasting misery?" Now my object is not to "interview" Bro. S., or his article; I most heartily endorse it, so far as it goes; but it is equally pertinent to inquire, how Christ, in suffering the penalty of the divine law, acted as a substitute in anybody's stead, whether the penalty be everlasting misery, everlasting death, or simply death, irrespective of duration.

This doctrine of "substitution" in God's administrative justice, or in his plan of redemption, is a fruit of the tree of immortality grown in the native soil of man's unregenerate nature, as evinced in every theology framed by the churchmen under the apostasy. It is commonly denominated "the commercial view," in which Jesus is represented as assuming the sinner's obligations, standing in the sinner's place, and paying the debt in the sinner's stead. This constitutes the foundation and corner stone of universal salvation; but insurmountable difficulties are at once encountered.

First, if it be so, then it is no more of grace, but of debt, from the Father to the Son. But Secondly, let the obligation incurred be what it ought, whether death spiritual, moral, physical, temporal, or eternal; death absolute, or life in misery; it would still remain true, that if Christ had assumed and paid the sinner's debt, then should the debtor have been at once discharged. But so far from this being true, we find that death still reigns, save in a moral sense, and in this, excepting those who believe into Jesus Christ. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."—Rom. 8: 1, 2. "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth."—10: 4. But Jesus himself said in John 3: 36, "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." And Isaiah (57: 16) affirms that if God be always wroth, the spirit should fail before him, and the souls which he had made.

To my apprehension, nothing is plainer than the simple yet sublime truth, that Jesus Christ, prompted by divine, compassionate love, did actually, truly die on my account, and in my behalf,—took on my sins, was made sin for me (in my behalf), by taking on my nature, by being born of a woman and made under the law,—"made under the law"; alas! how few either comprehend or apprehend the force of that apostolic declaration recorded in Gal. 4: 4,—"To redeem them that were under the law"; not of the Jews only, but of the Gentiles also; for whom Christ was also made a curse, or was accursed, died for (on account of) our sins; died unto one sin, the sin of us all, the sin of the human race, the Adamic sin. Rom. 5: 17-19; 6: 6-10. "Who was delivered [to death] for [on account of] our offences, and was raised again [to life] for [in order to procure] our justification."—4: 25. By Christ's obedience unto death (the penal infliction), the reconciliation of the race was procured, so that it was made possible for them to return from death and receive the gift of eternal life; unto which they are justified by faith in his living again to officiate in the presence of God as high priest in their behalf, until he shall appear the second time, without a sin-offering, but unto salvation.

ENOSH.

This Hebrew word, translated "mortal man" in Job 4: 17, and also in the margin of 2 Chron. 14: 11, occurs over one hundred times in the Old Testament. Aaron Pick, in his Hebrew Lexicon, defines it "mortal man." Mr. Robert Young, an eminent Scottish Hebrew scholar, says it is generally derived from a root signifying "he was sickly, mortal"—as in 2 Sam. 12: 15; Job 34: 6; Isa. 17: 11; Jer. 30: 12, 15; 17: 16. He says: "Others derive it from an Arabic root, signifying to grow, sprout. But I think the former derivation is preferable. Hence enosh would mean a sickly person, either with reference to mind or body."

Think of it! Man is over one hundred times designated by this term enosh, derived from a root signifying sickly, mortal, and never once associated with any term signifying immortality, except as relates to life eternal to be obtained through Christ. Thus the Scriptures speak of man. How differently he speaks of himself. How he boasts of an inherent immortality, and an undying soul. If theologians would confine themselves to Scriptural phrases in setting forth the nature and destiny of mankind, we should see a mighty revolution in doctrine.—Ex.

SPIRITUALISM AS IT IS.

Knowing something of the effects which spiritualism has upon its believers, I feel it is but justice to state them. I have noticed (and I speak from my own experience), that it is only when a person is in a backslidden condition that he is ready to accept its teachings in the place of those contained in the Bible. No one who has vital piety is willing to give it up and accept something else.

Christianity and spiritualism are no more alike than noonday brightness and midnight darkness. I am compelled to say that while the one gives sweeter joys than earth can give, the other causes a state of unrest and unhappiness, as I have known experimentally; and I have come to the firm and determined conclusion to renounce it henceforth and forever. It is a subtle system of religion at best; and for that reason it is all the more dangerous. Whatever rejects the salvation wrought out by Jesus Christ, is unworthy the name of religion. There is no life nor saving power in any such system, however much it may be extolled. And we are expressly warned against it in the Scriptures. Many are trying to climb up some other way, but there is only one way to be saved.

It is when men throw aside the Bible, as their only rule of faith and practice, that they are like a ship in mid-ocean without chart or compass. The Bible is our only infallible guide, and it is only when we accept it as such that we are safe. No one can possibly be a christian and a spiritualist at the same time.

Jesus taught plainly the doctrine of an atonement, but spirits deny it. Which shall we believe? "Let God be true, though every man be a liar." Again, they declare that there is really no God; for if he is but a principle, as they claim, existing in all forms of matter, he is no more a God than is electricity, or the air we breathe. Think of praying to a principle! the idea is absurd. The Bible teaches us a personal God—far different from the God of spiritualism.

A company of men were out in a thunderstorm, when one, more bold and daring than the rest, pointed his gun toward heaven and blasphemously defied God. No sooner were the words uttered than a bolt of lightning descended, striking him dead. Ah! sinner, it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

Other instances have been recorded where men have suddenly been struck dumb for profaning God's holy name. This shows that he gives some pretty plain demonstrations of his personality.

We are told that evil is the lesser good. And spirits teach that sin will finally be outgrown. "He that is filthy, let him be filthy still; and he that is unrighteous, let him be unrighteous still." This is an inspired declaration, and it must be true. We know that it is not in the nature of wicked men to grow better. Nothing but the power of God's Holy Spirit can make a radical change in the heart. Without it man is in a lost condition.

Spiritualism comes and says, "Peace, peace, when there is no peace." Suppose we tell men that they must live moral and upright lives; what will it amount to? Will such talk arouse men to a sense of their sinfulness in the sight of a holy and just God? Not an individual would ever be converted without something more thorough is taught. The great need of the times is, more plain preaching and holy living. But we have come to the time "when men will not endure sound doctrine." Many seem to think it makes no difference what a person believes, if he is sincere. "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." A man's sincerity cannot save him unless he is on the right track. Spiritualism and the Holy Spirit cannot dwell together in the same heart. As one goes in, the other goes out. Those who have had experience in both, know this is the case.

It is lamentable that there is so much of a cold rationalism taking the place of a vital christianity. I have the means of knowing that there is a vast amount of it. The religion of Jesus Christ is held up as an object of contempt and ridicule, and prayer and devotion are by many considered beneath their dignity. Infidel publications are on the increase, and the minds of the rising generation are poisoned by their sentiments. The blood of Christ is compared to the blood of "Cock Robin," and His merits to those of Thomas Paine. What word has spiritualism to offer against such sentiments? Not one.

That we are living in the last days, when iniquity shall abound, is evident. We have that form of deception among us that would, if it were possible, deceive the very elect. God alone can rescue men from the terrible effects of unbelief. No human power can do it. It paralyzes spirituality as does palsy the body. It is an experience that I pray others may be delivered from. But with a firm trust in my heavenly Father, I shall be able to overcome all things; and I hope to have a home with all the good and the blest, to range the sweet fields of paradise when Jesus appears, and sing the song of redemption in that fair land where the woes of earth can never come. OLD-TIME PUNCTUALITY.—An anecdote has come down to us from the olden time in relation to one of the then "standing order" in the eastern part of our State. A parishioner had entered the church after morning prayer had commenced, and at the close of prayer was thus addressed by his pastor; "Neighbor Bryant, it is to your reproach that you have disturbed the worship of God by entering late, living as you do within a mile of this place, and especially so since here is Goody Barstow who has milked seven cows, made a cheese, and walked five miles to the house of God, in good season."—Congregationalist.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Oct. 26, 1870.

Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

LIBERAL OFFERS.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

We are anxious to have our paper reach several thousand new readers the coming year, and become a blessing to them. It is the best means we have of sowing the seed of the gospel of the kingdom in some hearts, and we should all awake, and do whatever we can to have its warnings of the coming judgment reach as many new readers as possible.

Some of our preachers have done nobly, and others would gladly help on the good cause, if they could receive aid for their families while they spend their time for the paper. For the benefit of such, the A. C. P. Society, at a recent meeting, by vote authorized the Agent to pay ten per cent to preachers on all collections for the Crisis and Young Pilgrim; and it is hoped they will take hold of the work in earnest, and have great success. Those who understand the expense of publishing a paper, know that it would cost no more to set up the type for twelve or fifteen thousand copies, than it does for a less number; hence, after our regular issue of about nine thousand copies is run off, we could print several thousand more at the cost only of press work and paper. It has, therefore, been concluded by the Editorial Committee and Business Agent, to whom the Society referred this subject, to make the following liberal offers to new subscribers, to induce them to form clubs, and thus make success easy to all who put forth efforts to obtain new subscribers.

TRIAL OFFER.

We will send the World's Crisis three months on trial, to new subscribers, for fifty cents. We ask our friends to obtain yearly subscriptions, if possible; but where subscribers can be obtained for only three months, please visit them again, and, if possible, get them to renew before their paper is stopped at the end of three months.

To aid in obtaining new subscribers for 1871, we make the following offer of nearly

Three Months Free.

We will send the Crisis—for the balance of this year, from the time the name is received—free to all new subscribers for 1871, sent in before Jan. 1st.—Rate $2.50.

Now is the time to subscribe, and put forth energetic efforts to obtain new subscribers.

CLUBBING WITH OTHER PAPERS.

As many persons take several papers, and could be induced to take the Crisis, if they could get two papers at club rates, we have accepted offers to club other papers with the Crisis, which will enable our friends to obtain subscribers where it would otherwise be impossible to introduce our paper.

If any of our regular subscribers wish any of the papers on the list at club rates, they can get new subscribers for the Crisis, as it is not necessary that both papers should be sent to the same address.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS THREE OR SIX MONTHS FREE.

We will send the World's Crisis six months, and the Phrenological Journal and Packard's Monthly (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or the World's Crisis three months, with the Rural New Yorker (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or, three months with the New York Weekly Tribune (price $2.00) one year for $2,00; or three months with the Bee-Keeper's Journal and National Agriculturist (price $1.00) one year for $1.00.

CLUBBING.

We will send any one of the following periodicals with the World's Crisis, each one year, as follows:—

The Bee-Keeper's Journal and National Agriculturist ($1.00) and the World's Crisis both for $3.00
The Laws of Life and World's Crisis for $3.25
The N. Y. Weekly Sun ($1.00) and World's Crisis for $3.25
The (weekly) Bright Side and World's Crisis for $3.25
The Christian and Bee-Keeper's Journal and World's Crisis for $2.90
Rural New Yorker ($3.00) and World's Crisis for $4.75
The Horticulturist and World's Crisis for $4.00

N. Y. Weekly Tribune ($2.00) and World's Crisis for $4.00
Prairie Farmer ($2.00) and World's Crisis for $4.25
Christian Union ($2.50) and World's Crisis for $4.25
Manufact'r and Builder ($1.50) and World's Crisis for $3.50

"OUT OF THE BODY."

Said Paul:—"It is not expedient for me doubtless to glory. I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord. I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell; God knoweth); such a one caught up to the third heaven. And I knew such a man, (whether in the body, or out of the body, I cannot tell; God knoweth;) How that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter. Of such a one will I glory; yet of myself I will not glory, but in my infimities."—2 Cor. 12: 1–5.

In this Scripture there is no mention of soul or spirit. Paul does not say, I knew a spirit, but "I knew a man in Christ." It should be kept in mind this scene all transpired while Paul was alive, and therefore will afford no light on the condition of man in death. Paul had a vision of paradise, as it is to be, when restored. When in that vision, beholding the coming Eden, he could not tell whether he was taken away bodily to see it, or only mentally. The same is true, when we see things in dreams. The sight in the dreaming state is so like the reality, that we can not tell whether we are seeing it mentally, or with our natural eyes.

When speaking of one of his visions, the prophet Ezekiel says: "And he put forth the form of a hand, and took me by a lock of mine head: and the spirit lifted me up between the earth and the heaven, and brought me in the visions of God to Jerusalem, to the door of the inner gate that looketh toward the north." Ezek. 8: 3. In this case he was carried "in the body" to see that of which he was to speak. At other times, like John upon the isle of Patmos, the objects are seen only mentally, while the physical organism is at rest. Paul was unable to tell which was his condition when in the vision. It would be absurd to say that the apostle could leave himself, and be gone for a time, and then come back into himself again. The one who passed through the whole wonderful experience, is represented by the word "man."

He says: "I knew a man in Christ; . . . such a one caught up to the third heaven. . . . I knew such a man, . . . that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter, of such a one will I glory."

"SPIRITUALISM EXPOSED."

It is now well known that some of the most noted dark-circle mediums, such as John Mc Queen, Davenport Bros., Fay Bros., Eddy Bros., Ferris and wife, and many more that might be named, have used deception in their performances. Inasmuch as they are following lying, seducing spirits, it is not at all remarkable that they should learn to imitate them in their hypocrisy and deception.

Among the noted dark-circle mediums, John Mc Queen, of Hillsdale, Mich., stood number one. In the "Progressive Age," of Feb. 18, 1865, published by Moses Hull, Mr. W. F. Jameison says: "If Mc Queen's seances were not genuine, I would freely confess I should have no faith in any dark circle manifestations." Mr. Jamieson is an intelligent gentleman, and a noted Spiritualist, who was associated with Mr. Mc Queen.

The following is from the "Banner of Light."

"FOUND THE LIGHT. As I am the happiest man living to-day, I wish the whole world to know why I am so. Hear, O heavens, give ear, earth, and the rest of mankind; hear, hear, hear. Never, until a few days past, have I been satisfied of immortality. Mr. John Mc Queen, of Hillsdale, Mich., has been with us, a medium for very wonderful manifestations of spirit power. No one here doubts his honesty as a medium, not even one of the hundreds that have been present at his circle, night after night. From two to sixteen bells have been heard to keep perfect time with a violin, all at once, and the bells placed on the heads of those in the circle very gently. Loud concussions were heard in the inner circle, which startled all present. The medium was carried above the heads of the inner and outer circles. All this was done in a dark room, but no one here doubts its reality. I know none who have been more skeptical than myself. The medium was unconscious, but was made to speak while above the heads of the circle. He also breathed very loud while being carried round on his side upon the chair. Lights were also seen over head in the room. These are facts, and no man in Kendallville dares dispute them. AMOS D. COSMER.
Kendallville, Ind., March 15th, 1864."

The following is from a letter written by an "investigator:"—

"The bells were raised from the table, carried about the room, and rung at such a distance from the medium, as to preclude the possibility of his ringing them himself. They were placed on the heads, hands and feet of different members of the circle. How are we to know that Mr. Mc Queen did not carry them around, and then dispose of them? Can a man leave a circle, grope his way in the dark in a crowded room, where there is scarcely the space of a foot between the inner and outer circle, ring bells, and place them on the heads of half a dozen persons, and all in the room unconscious of the fact? If so, then we are all stupid as mules, and John Mc Queen a remarkable genius."

The following is from one of M. W. F. Jamieson's hand-bills:

"MODERN SPIRITUALISM EXPOSED. The mystery explained. W. F. Jamieson, who has been for five years a Spiritualist lecturer and debater, and who is thoroughly acquainted with most phases of mediumship and the philosophy of Spiritualism, begs leave to announce to the citizens of this place, that he has secured the services of John Mc Queen, the celebrated musical manifestation medium, and who was considered by the Spiritualists to be one of the most powerful physical manifestation mediums in the world for dark-circle manifestations; and will give the same manifestations with the same conditions that the Spiritualists declare to be necessary for spirits to manifest themselves to mortals. Spiritualists will be invited to form a circle to produce a battery, when the manifestations will proceed. They are the chiming of bells, loud concussions, and rappings; the Indian spirit war-whoop, lights, etc., etc. Spiritualists are earnestly invited to witness their exposure."

Moses Hull is reported to have said at Dowagiac, Mich., in 1865, in his lecture before a large audience, "My friends, John Mc Queen is a greater man than was Jesus Christ, for he performs greater miracles."

Mr. Mc Queen was detected in his trickery at his sixth seance in Moses Hull's office of the "Progressive Age," in 1865.

Thus we find that the "wonderful proof of immortality, that made Mr. Cosmer "the happiest man living," consisted in the tricks of John Mc Queen. We are not surprised that one who follows the demons should be led to do as did Mr. Mc Queen. Many others are doing a similar work. Would that they might become as honest as Mr. Mc Queen, and confess and forsake their evil deeds of deception, before they are swallowed up in perdition.

EXPLANATION ONCE MORE.

As many do not yet understand the date on their papers, or wrappers, we would say, the date on the paper is the time to which you have paid. If it is 7 Sept. 70, it means that you have paid to last Sept. If Nov. or Dec. 70, it shows that you have paid so much in advance; but if it is 67, 68 or 69, it shows that you are in arrears from that date, and ought to pay up immediately.

"EVER BE WITH THE LORD."

The apostle's affirmation, 'So shall we ever be with the Lord" (1 Thess. 4: 17), must be verified at the right time, in the right manner, and in the right place, to harmonize with the plan of Heaven. When, how, and where shall we "ever be with the Lord"? are questions that deserve consideration. Death is not here, nor elsewhere, specified as the time when we are to "be with the Lord"; but the coming of the Lord and the resurrection are here introduced as prerequisites to the introduction of that eternal scene of happiness: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." This statement cannot be set aside. It distinctly introduces the Savior's future advent, to awaken the dead saints, as the time when we are to "be with the Lord"; not a few of us at a time, but "together with them," with the resurrected saints; and we are to "meet" the Lord before we shall be with him; he will "descend," and we shall be "caught up" till we "meet"; and not till then shall we "be with the Lord." The same gathering time is specified by the Savior, as connected with his future coming: "And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds."—Matt. 24: 31. This gathering occurs, as we learn from the preceding verse, after "they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Not till thus gathered can the saints "be with the Lord."

The same time is specified in the Savior's great promise—"I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."—John 14: 3. Not till Christ shall receive the saints unto himself will they "be with the Lord"; and not till he shall "come again," will he thus receive them. And in harmony with this, Paul testifies,—"When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. 3: 4. Then we shall "be with the Lord," and not before.

But how are the saints to "be with the Lord"? in a disembodied state, or as physical personalities? No intimation can be found that disembodied men are ever to be with the Lord. Paul's statement concerning being "absent from the body" and "present with the Lord," has been tortured by theologians to signify an existence for the soul without a body; but the truth is, Paul does not speak of being "absent from the body" at death, but at the resurrection, as we shall presently see. Let us hear Paul's statement: "For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. Now he that hath wrought us for the self same thing ["that mortality might be swallowed up of life," which takes place, not at death, but at the resurrection] is God, who also hath given us the earnest of the Spirit. Therefore [or, for this reason—for the reason "that mortality is to be swallowed up of life"] we are always confident, knowing that whilst we are at home in the ["natural"] body, we are absent from the Lord (for we walk by faith, not by sight); we are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the ["natural"] body, and to be present with the Lord."—2 Cor. 5: 4–8. We remark—

1. If modern theologians are correct in claiming that to "be unclothed" signifies a disembodied state, Paul denies desiring that state—"not that we would be unclothed"—but if the unclothed state is simply the mortal state, as we claim, then Paul desired not to remain a mortal man.

2. He plainly tells us that his desire was "that mortality might be swallowed up of life"—not to get rid of mortality by having it eternally sleep in death, but by having it "swallowed up of life"; and every body is aware that mortality is not swallowed up of life either at death or during the reign of death; nor can it be before the resurrection, when "this mortal shall put on immortality."

3. He also informs us that God "hath wrought us for this self same thing"; that is, "that mortality might be swallowed up of life."

4. He then adds, "Therefore we are always confident, knowing that whilst we are at home in the body we are absent from the Lord"—because mortality is not yet "swallowed up of life." The present "natural" body is referred to, before being "swallowed up of life." While in this mortal state, "we walk by faith, not by sight"; but when we get into the immortal state, we shall walk "by sight." He adds, "We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord"—not by saying, but by having "mortality swallowed up of life"; which occurs not at death, but at the resurrection. "Absent from the body"—the natural body—by having it immortalized; and "present with the Lord," after mortality is "swallowed up of life," being "raised a spiritual body," and "caught up to meet the Lord"—"so shall we ever be with the Lord," not destitute of a body, though absent from the mortal body as the result of a change—mortality "swallowed up."

But where are we to "be present with the Lord"? Jesus says, "I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." But where will he be when he comes again? Not in heaven, for he will have just come from heaven. When he comes again, he will be here again; and then the saints will all be with him. If it should be objected that Jesus did not mean to be understood that the saints should be where he will be at his coming, then he must have meant by "where I am," the very place where he was at the time he uttered the words—on the earth—which would amount to the same thing. The saying, "where I am," must either mean "where I am" when I "come again," or "where I am" while speaking—not where I may go before I come again, for he is not to "receive" them till he comes again, and certainly they cannot be with him before he shall "receive" them. The Revelator foretells a time to come when, under the sounding of the seventh trumpet, the "kingdoms of this world" shall "become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever"; not previous to the resurrection, for under the same trumpet comes "the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou [God] shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints."—Rev. 11: 15–18.

If Christ is to reign in "this world," after the judgment, even "forever and ever," then in order for the saints to be with him, they must dwell here too. And this agrees with the Savior's statement—"When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, . . . then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."—Matt. 25: 31–34. This very world was created on purpose as a dwelling-place for sinless man; and if man had stood his trial without yielding to the tempter, he would have lived "forever" in the world God placed him in; but the first Adam fell, and brought a curse upon the earth, and man's original home is now a realm of sin and sinners. But under Christ, the second Adam, this very kingdom, now filled with transgressors, and groaning under the curse, shall be dispossessed of its sinful occupants, be renovated by Divine power, be filled with the glory of God, and be given to the saints of the Most High; and then "the tabernacle of God shall be with men," among whom "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain." To "ever be with the Lord" under these circumstances, in the society of the good and the true of every age and clime, will be glorious. W. S.

QUARTERLY MEETINGS.

Order is preferable to confusion anywhere; and much confusion is produced by calling every little meeting of two or three days length a quarterly meeting. The giving of a big name to a meeting does not alter the character of the meeting. It is either a quarterly meeting, or it is not; let it be called by the right name.

But what is properly a quarterly meeting among the Advent people? It is a meeting appointed by the conference each quarter of the year, making four such meetings per year, in each conference. But frequently different churches wish a special meeting of two or three days in their midst, and forthwith advertise it as a quarterly meeting. The more of such special meetings the better, but why call them quarterly meetings? They are not quarterly meetings, for they do not come once in a quarter, sometimes not more than once a year, or once in two years; and even if each church were to hold such a special meeting regularly each quarter, still it would be augmenting confusion to unqualifiedly notice them as quarterly meetings, seeing that order of meeting is already established all through our ranks in every conference.

Call things by their right names; let special meetings be known as such, and not as quarterly meetings. I have heard many complaints, so I have spoken. W. S.

A STRONGER MOTIVE.

The brevity of human life has long been pressed upon the attention of men as a consideration why they should not delay to "seek the Lord." If that has ever been a worthy consideration, it is just as valuable now as ever, with the additional consideration that the judgment is almost due—thus forming a stronger motive power for being in haste to seek the Lord. Death may come first, but the judgment must come soon; so it is not safe putting off the work of preparation to meet the solemn scenes of the judgment day. "It is near, and it hasteth greatly."

Truly "time is short," and our work must be done without delay. When we reach the marriage supper of the Lamb, it will be said, "The bride hath made herself ready;" but while getting ready, "The Spirit and the bride say come." And in earnestly laboring to get sinners ready, we keep ourselves ready; indeed, we cannot keep ready while doing nothing.

We must work. And were ever men pressed into the work with a stronger propelling power than we are—the judgment just upon us, and the multitudes unapprised of it, and unprepared for it? W. S.

MESSIAH'S REIGN.

Gabriel affirmed, "Of his kingdom there shall be no end."—Luke 1: 33. The first query is, Does the angel here predict a literal kingdom? We insist he does, because (1) every other feature of this angelic prophecy is literal—the child to be born was literal, the birth of the child was literal, the name given to the child was literal; and when we reach the time for his kingdom to commence, why will not that also be literal? Indeed the whole prophecy must be fulfilled on the same principle, whether literal or spiritual; and since a part has already been fulfilled on the literal principle, it is a Divine guarantee that the balance must be fulfilled on the same principle, else God will abandon his own approved rule. (2) Every other prophecy concerning the Messiah in the past has also been literally fulfilled. It was prophesied that he should be born of a "virgin." The fulfillment was literal. It was prophesied that he should be born in "Bethlehem." The fulfillment was literal. It was prophesied that he should appear as the "Messiah the Prince" in sixty-nine prophetic weeks, or four hundred and eighty-three years, "from the going forth of the commandment to restore and rebuild Jerusalem." The fulfillment was literal.

It was prophesied that Jerusalem's demolished wall should be rebuilt, and that in sixty-two prophetic weeks, or four hundred and thirty-four years from that epoch, Messiah would be "cut off" for the sins of men. The fulfillment was literal. It was prophesied that his grave should be with the rich. The fulfillment was literal. It was prophesied that his repose in death would be so short that God would not suffer him to see corruption. The fulfillment was literal. It was prophesied that he should sit on the right hand of the Father till his foes should be given over to destruction. The prediction is being literally fulfilled.

It was prophesied that he should come with ten thousand of his holy ones "to execute judgment on all." His coming will be literal. Then why will not his kingdom be literal? It will be, for it will be the "kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world"; "the kingdom under the whole heaven," embracing "the kingdoms of this world"; but not till the "seventh trumpet" sounds, when sinners will be destroyed, and saints be rewarded, small and great. TRACTS TO SCATTER IN WIS.

Wishing to scatter my four new tracts more extensively in Wisconsin than I have been able to do with my own hand, with the help of a few friends, I offer to send by mail to any brother or sister living in Wisconsin, as many as 10 cents will prepay, if they will send me the postage, provided they send any time before the close of November, giving plain directions where to send them. I limit the offer to Wisconsin for the present, and restrict as to the quantity allowed each individual, fearing they may be too soon exhausted. Let no one send over 10 cts. in postage unless they design it as a donation to aid the enterprise. Direct to William Sheldon, Brodhead, Green Co., Wis., and send within the time specified. W. S.

REPENTANCE.

It is extensively admitted that repentance is a prerequisite to salvation, but there are various views as to what constitutes repentance, some insisting that repentance signifies reform, and others claiming that it means "godly sorrow."

Though a repentance without reform would be worthless, it is equally true that a reform without repentance will fail to give us a passport into the heavenly kingdom. To leave off sinning is not enough, for the dark account of the past must be adjusted before we can enjoy the favor of God or the home of the saved. Reform enables us to do right for the future, but leaves the past unsettled. "Godly sorrow worketh repentance," but is not itself the completion of repentance—only its basis; but "if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."—1 John 1: 9. Only that repentance that has "godly sorrow" as its basis, and confession of sin as its result, can secure pardon here or salvation hereafter. W. S.

CONVERSION.

The work of conversion, or a change from sin to holiness, is not so mysterious as multitudes are led to suppose. The arrangement of Heaven is not intricate. Divine revelation concerning the plan of salvation was not given as an incomprehensible enigma; but in the very terms calculated to convey instruction, and not to conceal it. The explicit statement of revelation is: "Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness."

Pardon is requisite to free man from sin; and as no man can pardon his own sins, an appeal for pardon must be made to one who has the power to pardon; or, in other words, repentance must precede pardon, and pardon frees man from sin, and this freedom from sin is conversion. The process is not mysterious, nor difficult of comprehension. Repentance brings pardon, and pardon brings conversion, or a change from sin to holiness, all through the agency of the Holy Spirit. It is reconciliation to God. W. S.

PRAISE.—Gratitude to God for his mercy toward us, and his blessings bestowed upon us should not be smothered, but be breathed out in praise. This always asking, and never acknowledging the receipt of blessings bestowed, is not pleasing to God. Praise God for the blessings received as fast as they are bestowed upon us, and that will augment our enjoyment; and by pursuing this course, you may have a constant fullness of peace within. We don't praise God enough for the blessings received. The Bible is full of praise to God. We must not overlook the divine hand in the small blessings received, nor omit to praise God for them. The Psalms especially are full of praise to God. While we need not pray less, let us praise more. W. S.

"GLOOMY DOCTRINE."—For the want of a better argument against the sleep of the dead, it is often denominated a "gloomy doctrine." If the sleeping saints could count the lapse of time, or if that sleep were to be eternal, then indeed it might be regarded "gloomy;" but as a thousand years and a moment of time are of equal length to an unconscious man, the gloom exists only in imagination; and as death's slumbers are to be terminated by divine power, there is no cause for gloom. Who ever felt gloomy on going to sleep at night because they should be unconscious till they should awake in the morning? There is as much occasion for gloom here as in the other case. W. S.

AN APPEAL.

To the friends of Bro. Simeon Roby, of Warner, N.H.

It is our duty to bring to your notice the suffering condition of this brother. You all know of his earnest endeavors to make "full proof of his ministry," and of the sacrifices he has made for the truths we all hold dear. But for the past year or more his health has been such as to keep him from laboring sufficient to support his family and enable him to preach in new places "without price." This fall, for over six weeks, he has been sick with billious fever, followed by the typhoid; and, although some better now, he will be unable to hold meetings or to work for many weeks.

Bro. Roby was ordained at Concord, N. H., nearly two years since, by Brn. Couch and Boutell; since which he has baptized many who have come to a saving knowledge of the truth by his labors. He has often walked to his appointments, whether it was good or bad traveling, fair or foul weather. But now he is confined to his bed, and is in need of your sympathy and material aid. Do not let this humble and faithful brother and his dear, good family suffer, while there is abundance at your command wherewith you can supply his wants. "What thou doest, do quickly." Contributions by mail should be addressed to Eld. Simeon Roby, Warner, N. H. C. W. SARGENT.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 24th, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

DOUBLE REBUKE.

At one of our campmeetings in New England, a few years ago, a young preacher, dressed in real modern fashionable style, preached to a large audience in a mission tent. He was more thoroughly acquainted with prophecy, history, and the theory of christian precepts, than with the pains of the cross and the death of human pride.

At the close of his expository argument, he endeavored to enforce upon his hearers the duty of self-denial in plainness of dress, and alluded to the humility, plainness of dress and consistent depotment of the early Methodists, whose godly appearance made them so conspicuous in society that the people could recognize a Methodist by his or her dress. He deplored their apostasy and conformity to modern fashion, urging his hearers not to apostatize as these had.

As he closed his remarks, a gentleman stepped forward from the rear of the audience to a spot where he could be plainly seen, and admitted the christian duties the speaker had enjoined, and added his testimony to the statement of the ancient Methodist style of dress, and claimed that some Methodists had not departed from it yet, offering himself (saying, "I am a Methodist)," dressed in plain, economical, godly style, as evidence of the fact. Then moving toward the stand, he proposed to stand up beside the speaker before the audience and compare the styles in which each were dressed.

At that moment the admirers of their teacher hastily rallied around the preacher in the dandy dress, breaking up the meeting, and preventing the more critical contrast in dress which was about to be made.

Paul has well said, "Happy is he who condemneth not himself in the thing which he alloweth." Rom. 14: 22. Let us who preach and teach, be careful to live out what we enjoin upon others, and be ensamples to the flock of God. I. C. WELLCOME.

REPORT

Of the R. I. and East. Ct. Conf., held at Lafayette, R. I., Oct. 5th to 7th, 1870.

All who were present unite in pronouncing this one of our best sessions. The attendance was good, and each one seemed disposed, yea, anxious to do what they could to add to the interest of the meeting.

Wednesday, 2 P. M. A good social meeting. In the evening preaching by Bro. Wm. Kellaway, from Ps. 27: 13, 14, followed by some stirring exhortations, after which an invitation was extended to the unconverted, and one trembling sinner arose.

Thursday, half-past nine A. M. Met for business. Bro. Durfee being absent, Bro. E. Bellows was called to the chair. The following churches were reported: North Scituate—Getting along peacefully. Wyoming—Interest as good as at any time during the year. Exeter—No marked change since the last conference. Lafayette—Never held out better through the summer. Westerly—Ready to die; suffering for lack of discipline, and from other causes. West Gloucester—In a flourishing condition; well united, not only in spirit but in faith. River Point—Have not been in better condition for years. Greatly benefited by the tent-meeting and last conference. Rocky Brook—Interest very low. A somewhat better state of feeling than there has been. A good Sabbath School. Danielsonville—Few in number, but strong in the Lord.

One of the most interesting features of this meeting was the reports of our preaching brethren. Nearly all had seen hopeful conversions. All testified that the work grew better as they drew nearer the rest that remaineth for the people of God. Bro. Kellaway had the undivided attention of the congregation while giving an encouraging account of the progress of truth in England. All seemed to feel remarkably good natured while Bro. Cotton spoke of his position "out in the ocean of God's love," where he found "neither bottom or shore."

Visiting brethren present were invited to participate in all our deliberations, except voting. Brn. Himes and Wood were chosen a committee to act with the chair in supplying the pulpit during the meeting. At two P. M., preaching by Bro. E. B. Card. Text, 1 Cor. 15: 26. The subject was appropriate and the discourse made quite an impression upon the minds of the audience, as we were informed at its close that a dear sister had fallen a victim to the "enemy" while the brother was preaching. The prayer-meeting appointed to precede the preaching occupied the entire evening. This seemed to be the leading of the Spirit which was so copiously showered upon us.

Friday, nine A. M., met for business. Bro. Durfee in the chair. The resolution concerning the printing of the Constitution, referred from our last session, was called up. The subject of the revision of the Constitution being again agitated, Brn. Durfee, Bellows and Sweet were chosen a committee to consider the propriety of such revision. This committee after consultation reported themselves satisfied with the old Constitution. Their report was accepted and adopted. The motion to print was amended as follows, and passed: Moved, That we employ Bro. N. A. Angell to print two hundred copies of the Constitution of this conference. The matter of ordination, referred from our last session, was then called up. It appearing that the church with which the Bro. was connected had neglected to comply with the rules of the conference, it was voted to defer the matter until our next session. Lest there should be any misapprehension, I would say that the conference does not question this brother's fitness for ordination, but they cannot ordain him until the church complies with the rules of the conference.

The following resolution was presented and passed unanimously: Resolved, That every preacher connected with this conference shall be required to report to each annual meeting, either in person or by letter. Let each preacher make a note of this, and remember that the next is our annual session.

Brn. R. R. Perry and Wm. Kellaway being invited to become members of the conference, accepted, and were received. Bro. E. Bellows was appointed to visit the church at Rocky Brook.

The following resolution presented by Bro. Bellows passed after a lengthy discussion: Resolved, That this conference recommend to the churches to obtain and settle pastors to locate among them and take the general oversight of the churches. Moved, That we invite the churches at Putnam and Woodstock Valley, Ct., to join this conference. Carried. A vote of thanks was tendered to the Lafayette church for their kindness and hospitality. Adjourned to meet with the church at Rocky Brook, R. I., the first Wednesday in January next. Preachers present: A. Durfee, E. Bellows, E. R. Wood, R. R. Perry, D. V. Corey, D. O. Hopkins, J. S. Collins, W. Kellaway, E. B. Card, E. Cotton, C. H. Sweet, and Sr. Crumb. Delegates: R. R. Knight, F. Mann, W. Teft, W. Himes, C. Pierce, C. F. Dixon, and F. Sheldon. C. H. SWEET, Clerk.

FREEDMEN'S MISSION.

After some remarks upon the question of discontinuing the mission, it was Moved, That we adjourn sine die. Carried.

C. H. SWEET, Clerk.

THE CAMPMEETING IN NEW MILFORD, CT.

BRO. GRANT:—By the request of some of the brethren I take the responsibility of writing a few lines for the Crisis about the campmeeting held in New Milford, Ct. It commenced Sept. 3d, and held over the 11th. A few gathered on Saturday evening, and had a season of prayer and praise, and consecrated the ground, who were willing God should work through whom he would. On Sunday a goodly number gathered from the east, west, north and south; and some of them being filled with the Spirit, made the sacred grove echo and re-echo with their songs of praise. It was blessed to be there.

The preaching brethren present were: H. K. Flagg, J. L. Wood, P. Tatro, W. Knight, H. K. Walling, N. H. Barbour, and all united. No discordant notes; none feeling—I am a little better than you; stand thou there; but it was one united voice. Some came back to Father's house, and a feast did the saints of God have.

There were few out through the week, but God's presence made the meeting so good that we hardly thought our numbers were few. The prayer meetings, most of them, were conducted in the fear of God, and the saints were quickened, the wanderer returned; the sinner feared and trembled, which was a sure evidence God was with his people. Although despised and cast out by the world, they know in whom they believe, blessed be God.

"In him I do and will rejoice,
I'll praise him with a cheerful voice,
Until the theme my tongue employs
In realms of bliss forever."

The sermons were all calculated to benefit, if men would be doers of the word as well as hearers. The blessing of God crowned the meeting all the way through. It was the best campmeeting I ever attended, excepting one held in Lanesville some thirteen years ago. Preachers and people all on a level; black and white all the same; one harmonious song; all bound for the port of endless rest, and so near the shore, willing to lay aside all hobbies, and every thing that tends to distract and divide. Glory to God, I am so glad we are almost home. It was a feast of fat things to my soul, a place preferable to any that can be found on this old earth; and if such meetings as these can be so sweet, what will it be to meet in the kingdom of God, where trials come no more?

"There his soft hand shall wipe the tears
From every weeping eye,
And pains, and groans, and griefs, and fears,
And death itself, shall die."

On Sunday evening Bro. Tatro spoke on the text—"Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss." The sermon was well calculated to strengthen the weak and erring, and at the close Bro. Flagg threw in a chink stone, as he called it, by talking a little on the passage—"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." I felt truly he preached a great sermon in a few words, and I thought it would well pay if I had to go on the strength of it forty days. Wednesday afternoon, Bro. Flagg preached from Dan. 8: 13, 14. He threw out some new ideas of the value of entering into the sanctuary, and the more we stayed there the better christians we were. Bro. Barbour, from New York city, preached on Friday morning. On Saturday evening, Bro. Tatro spoke from Eph. 4: 27,—"Neither give place to the devil." Oh that all might heed it, that we ever might remember it, for the devil has come down in great wrath, knowing he hath but a short time, and will if possible deceive the very elect. Oh that we might be wise as serpents and harmless as doves, and give no place to the devil.

On Sunday morning a love feast. Over seventy testimonies were given in, and most of them right to the point. Then a large crowd were gathered for the services of the day, and J. L. Wood preached from 1 Pet. 4 : 18,—"If the righteous scarcely are saved, where shall the sinner and the ungodly appear?" In the afternoon and evening, H. K. Flagg. A goodly number gathered around the table to imitate the Last Supper of our Savior, before he went away. Blessed be God, he is coming again.

"Oh hail! happy day, that speaks our trials ended,
Our Lord has come to take us home,
Oh hail, happy day!"

Thus ended one of the best meetings many ever enjoyed, for which all the glory belongs to God, and I will praise him forever.

Hotchkissville, Ct. Susan E. Teeple.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. B. Waite.

Bro. Grant:—After being at the tent meeting in Providence, and listening to your preaching on the subject of "patience," I left after the evening meeting, fully resolved that as for me and mine we would serve the Lord more faithfully than ever before. We consecrated all to Christ anew, and went to work for the Lord in good earnest. The result is, to me, most wonderful; such peace of mind, such joy in the Lord, I have never enjoyed before in all my pilgrimage. I had long felt that I was living beneath my privilege; had felt for some time that the Lord was soon coming. My impressions are being confirmed every day. Yes, I know my redemption is at hand.

When the time came for the Springfield Campmeeting, my anxiety was so great to hear preaching on the signs of the times, I felt I must go, notwithstanding the long distance, and I a cripple. Thursday morning I started with my little girl in her twelfth year. We had a prosperous journey by the will of the Lord. Arrived on the ground just as it began to rain. By the kindness of Bro. Roberts, Bro. Munger was informed of my needs, and sent me to the Westfield tent. Meeting soon commenced. All strangers, yet I felt they were of Father's family, and I was at home. I expressed the anxiety I felt for my little girl. One sister said, "We will pray for that little one, if she will come forward." She did so, and obtained the blessing of forgiveness, and gave good evidence of her faith in Christ, and has been walking after the pattern ever since. My joy was great.

Saturday morning I started for home, feeling doubly paid for the pains taken to go. Did not get sick by lying in wet clothes and having the rain come down upon me while in bed. Had been taking medicine for my throat, but threw it away on the ground, and have not taken any since. Am well all over, physically and spiritually.

Commenced meetings in my own house, two evenings in a week for two weeks, and then every evening, assisted by the faithful labors of Bro. Roberts. He is full of faith and zeal. Bro. Card, one of the meek ones, has preached to us a few times to our profit. We visit from house to house, and practice what we preach. Family altars have been erected in many families. A good number have been converted, backsliders reclaimed, and six were baptized last fourth Sunday; six next Sunday, if the Lord will. To God be all the glory.

We have had our trials, but, praise God, we will trust in him, and we shall overcome all at last. Yours looking for and expecting the Lord very soon. J. B. Waite.

Warwick, R. I., Oct. 18th, 1870.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. C. M. Duncan writes from Milpetas, Cal.:—"I love to read your paper; it does me so much good, especially the letters from correspondents. They express my own feelings. I came to this country in 1860, from England. I had been a member of Dr. J. Cumming's church for six years. There I heard preached the second coming of our Lord for the first time, and the new earth for our inheritance. How often I have wished myself back again, that I could listen once more to those glorious truths. There is no church in this place, and preachers' visits are like those of angels, few and far between.

Last year, a neighbor took us to the next town, where we looked on in amazement at the dancing, festivals, concerts, grab bags, etc., in the churches. Last spring, Bro. D. D. Reed came here, and preached the pure word of God. Bro. and Sr. Reed visited us, and showed the mortality of man, the sleep of the dead, and immortality through Christ alone; and when and where we should look for our reward. I bless God that husband and self were enabled to see and believe. Our Bible seems a new book. We are rejoicing in the light. How I want every one to see it. There is a little flock in Santa Clara, six miles from here. We go as often as we can."

Sr. S. A. Cummings writes, Aug. 24th:—"Bro. J. H. Dadmun came here last May, and preached the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. I attended the meetings Sunday, June 11th, for the first time; and I thank God that he sent me there to hear the blessed truths of the gospel of Jesus. We have had meetings nearly every Sabbath since, and had a number of prayer-meetings. Though our numbers are few, we can claim the blessed promise, that 'where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them.' Praise God, he has been with us. O, how much better I love to read my Bible; and how many precious promises I find there that I never noticed before. I understand it better; for God, in his great mercy, has helped me to understand. We find more opposition than encouragement. But we will never give up, God helping us; for we mean to have a home on the new earth.

Sometimes, when I am alone, I get so full of glory, that it seems as if I could shout the praise of God so that I could be heard for miles around. Sr. L. E. Saulpaugh preached here a week ago last Sabbath, and we hope to be able to sustain regular preaching. Pray for us, that we may be found faithful to the end."

Bro. J. G. Hook writes, Oct. 23d:—"Our meetings continue increasing in interest. Last Sunday was a glorious day for God's people. We had a meeting last evening long to be remembered. A young man, whose mother had preached, he said, for forty years among the Friends, arose and testified that our meeting had saved him from suicide, as he was going to end his life that night. Rum was his ruin. We expect to close after next Sunday."

Bro. O. W. Kimball writes:—"God has been at work in Buckfield, Me. Backsliders have been reclaimed and sinners converted to God, and are now rejoicing in hope of life when Jesus comes."

Nothing teaches patience like a garden. You may go round and watch the opening bud from day to day; but it takes its own time, and you cannot urge it on faster than it will. If forced, it is only torn to pieces. All the best results of a garden, like those of life, are slowly but regularly progressive.

Obituaries.

Miles. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Waveland, Shawnee Co., Kan., Sept. 10th, 1870, my mother, Martha Miles, aged forty-five years, four months, and twenty-one days.

She lived an exemplary life, ever trying to bring up her children in the way they should go, by both precept and example. Her utmost theme was the Bible and the truths of the soon coming kingdom. And though her faith was strong that she would live to see the coming of the Savior, she now sleeps; and though great is our sorrow, and much we miss her, we sorrow not as those without hope, for we know that in the morning of the first resurrection she will be raised incorruptible, to die no more. She died as one going to sleep. Lanie Miles.

Greely. Died, in Hudson, N. H., Oct. 6th, 1870, Charles A., son of Samuel and M. A. Greely, aged twenty-one years and five months.

Charlie has left the comforting evidence, for his heart-stricken friends, that he sleeps in Jesus, and that when the Life-giver shall appear, he will live again, immortal.

The funeral was attended by the Revs. Otis Cole and M. Chaffin, who improved the solemn occasion for the comfort of a large circle of mourning friends. H. W. B.

Drew. Died, in Alton, N. H., Oct. 15th, 1870, Charlotte, widow of John Drew, aged seventy-nine years, nine months, and six days.

The subject of this notice was one of the early believers in the second coming of Christ, as preached by Bro. Miller, and was a dear lover of the word of God. Her doors were always open to entertain strangers, as they passed that way, bidding the saint God speed. She left a number of children and relatives to mourn her loss. Remarks on the funeral occasion, by the writer, from Rev. 21 : 5. Israel Damman.

Hicks. Died, at Central Falls, R. I., Aug. 28th, Carrie A., wife of Bro. B. F. Hicks, and daughter of Bro. John and Sr. Hannah Shannon, of Portsmouth, N. H., aged twenty-four years and eleven months.

Sr. Carrie was converted and united with the church in Portsmouth ten years since. But her work is done. She sleeps in Jesus, and awaits the Life-giver's return. This oft afflicted family are sustained by the "blessed hope." J. W. White.

Gasper. Died, at Biddeford, Me., Sept. 26th, Hattie A. Gasper, of Surry, Me., aged seventeen years and eleven months.

Sr. Hattie sought the Savior eight or ten months since, and we trust sleeps in Jesus, and will come forth to a glorious immortality at the resurrection. Joseph W. White.

Cain. Died, in Goshen, N. H., Oct. 4th, O. F. Cain, aged forty-eight years and four months. M. A. Cain.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

Tours, Oct. 20. Advices from Paris embrace the text of another proclamation, issued by M. Jules Favre, to the French people. He announces therein that France refuses peace at the price of dishonor. Prussia seeing the invincible and unflinching attitude of her adversary, now proposes to punish France with death. But Prussia is mistaken in her antagonist; she discovers no sign of weakness, no cringing to the oppressor. France will not yield to the enemies' ambition to degrade her, but will fight and resent to the death.

Oct. 21. The occupation of Bourges by the Prussians is imminent.

Berlin, Oct. 21. Advises from Versailles announce that the French are incessantly shelling the Prussian works upon the terrace of Mendon. The forts are constantly firing upon the Prussian's working parties, impeding their operations.

The Prussian government, mindful of the enlistment in the French service, of numerous battalions of American, Italian and Irish volunteers, has issued a decree threatening that the most severe measures will be enforced against foreigners captured with arms in their hands.

Tours, Oct. 21. Later advices received from Paris by balloon bring the following manifesto addressed to Mayor Arajo of Paris, and through him to be communicated to the resolute Parisian:

It is necessary to resist the legitimate popular enthusiasm, and to guard the interest at stake, and await patiently the day when the army carries its efforts and its offensive operations beyond the Conciento.

This restraint to the gallant defenders will be irksome, but is imposed as a measure of safety. No infantry can face the Prussians unless accompanied and supported by artillery equalling in calibre, the strength of the Prussian's. Without as formidable artillery we clearly could not cope with them, therefore we are preparing artillery instructions to cannoners, and are rapidly arming the troops with improved arms, and drilling and accustoming them to the rapid firing of rifles.

We must avoid exposure to a disaster which neither our bravery nor our moral superiority could avert or overcome. I will not accede to the pressing public impatience, but shall pursue to the end the plan which I have traced out without revealing it. I ask in return the continuance of the popular confidence which has been reposed in me.

Orders have been issued to provision Lyons with subsistence for 70,000 men for two months.

The Generals commanding the military subdivisions are ordered to keep their troops in readiness to proceed to Lyons. These movements are doubtless in anticipation of active operations by Prussians, from the direction of Belfast.

London, Oct. 23. Telegrams from Florence announce that Greece and Turkey have concluded an alliance for mutual defense and offense against any power threatening conquests in the East. This coalition is undoubtedly against Russia, which is presumed to be meditating measures towards Turkey, with the ultimatum of establishing her supremacy upon the Black Sea.

The Prussians, under the Crown Prince Albert, moving against this city upon the south of the Loire, have commenced the bombardment of Verdun. They have established a battery in the forest of Verdun.

Tours, Oct 23. A despatch from Chartres, via Lemans, announces that the Prussians, 15,000 to 20,000 strong, having completed the investment of Charbu, sent a courier under a truce, to the Mayor and Prefect, demanding the surrender of the city under threats of a bombardment from fifty guns. The Mayor and Prefect despatched a note to the Prussian commander, surrendering the town. The Prussians then marched in and took peaceable possession of the city.

Many of the Prussian infantry have been quartered in great military barracks.

London, Oct. 23. It is announced that the Foreign Office here has received official notification that the British Ministers, Lord Lyons at Tours, and Loftus at Berlin, have asked the respective governments to which they are accredited, to consent to an armistice, in order to allow the convention of the Constituent Assembly of France to meet.

Their representations will be made simultaneously. It is also stated that assurances come from Vienna and Florence, that the governments of Austria and Italy have signified their earnest support of the intervention of England. Russia has made isolated representation, it is supposed, to the same effect.

Tours, Oct. 22. The following official despatch has just been received here from Neufchatel:—

On Friday, the 14th inst., Marshal Bazaine made a sortie with 80,000 men, crushing the enemy, which consisted of twenty-six battalions of infantry and two regiments of cavalry. He also captured 193 wagons, laden with stores and provisions of war.

Sickness among the besiegers is constantly increasing. The Prussians have been forced twice to renew their army around Metz.

Another despatch from Neufchatel says the siege of Verdun has been interrupted lately by the vigorous defence of the French. The latter have made several sorties and inundated the environs of the town.

London, Oct. 23d. [Special to the New York World.] Gladstone and Granville spent the whole of to-day in consultation with the Prussian, Russian, Austrian and Italian Ambassadors, and Gen. Boyer. The latter had an interview with Conti, Napoleon's Secretary at Mars, and subsequently one with the Empress at Chiselhurst.

London, Oct. 24. The Pall Mall Gazette publishes an important rumor in an edition, issued this afternoon, to the effect that King William has accepted Marshal Bazaine's conditions of peace and that the Empress Eugenie consents to proceed to the King's headquarters at Versailles, and sign the treaty, as being the reigning head of the French government, until deposed by a legally constituted assembly.

Tours, Oct. 24. The Prussian commander at Orleans has posted placards all about the city, containing an appeal to the citizens, and informing them that the French government and not the Prussians is their real enemy.

The journals reply to this appeal bitterly, encouraging the people to defend the country to the last extremity.

DOMESTIC.

The Earthquake.

Boston, Oct. 20.—An earthquake was felt here at 11.26, forenoon, causing perceptible vibration of buildings and creating great alarm among people employed in upper stories. Near the corner of State street and Merchant's Row, a block of granite in a building was cracked and another block forced outward from the wall three or four inches. The shocks lasted thirty seconds. Reports from Montreal, Sackville and Bangor, state that an earthquake was felt at the same time, with much force.

Portland, Me., Oct. 20. A slight shock of earthquake was felt here about 11.35 a. m. Buildings shook quite perceptibly and on the wharves it was felt much more distinctly.

Bangor, Me., Oct. 20. A distinct shock of earthquake was felt here at 11. 35.

Lewiston, Me., Oct. 20. A slight shock of earthquake was felt here at half past eleven causing some excitement but no damage.

Burlington, Vt., Oct. 20. A distinct shock of earthquake was felt here at 11.26 this morning, lasting about fifteen seconds, with regular vibrations from south to north. Clocks stopped, crockery was shaken down, etc., but no serious damage done. No rumbling was heard.

New York, Oct. 20. A shock of earthquake was felt in this city and various parts of the United States and Canada about 11 o'clock. At Schenectady a building perceptibly swayed, and the inhabitants rushed terror stricken into the streets. At Cleveland the national bank building and other blocks swayed to and fro. At Meadville, Pa., Montreal and other places there was also intense excitement.

Providence, Oct. 20. A shock like earthquake occurred here at twenty-seven minutes past 11 o'clock this forenoon. Large buildings were shaken so that the occupants ran into the street in some cases.

The Earthquake of 1755.

On the 18th of November, 1755, a great earthquake happened, when Boston was considerably shaken and which was felt with great severity throughout North America. The shock continued about four minutes and a half, the course being from N. W. to S. E. One hundred chimneys were levelled with the roofs of the houses, and over fifteen hundred more were more or less injured. One brick chimney, thirty feet high, had a brick thrown from it a distance of thirty-two feet, and several were turned partly round. The tottering of buildings on made land was extremely frightful, and the ways about them were covered with brick and fragments. The gable ends of fifteen buildings were thrown down as far as the eaves. The vane on Faneuil Hall, weighing thirty pounds, supported by a spindle five inches in diameter, was broken two feet from the top and fell to the ground.

A new vane on one of the churches was bent three or four points of the compass. A distiller's cistern was burst by the liquid, breaking down the whole side of the building. Clocks were stopped, old springs ceased to flow, and new ones burst out. It was a terrible night, the most so perhaps that ever New England saw. When we remember it we are afraid, and trembling taketh hold of our flesh. The weather was clear, wind S. W., the thermometer and barometer undergoing very little variation, a great white frost covering the ground in the morning. A second shock followed in an hour and a quarter, and a third on Saturday evening following at 8 o'clock and twenty-seven minutes; also another on Friday, Dec. 19th, at ten o'clock, a. m., each lasting several seconds. The vibrations of the earth were very swift, each being preceded by a peculiar rumbling noise.

War Items.

☞ The Cologne Gazette says the Prussians around Paris are quartered in the finest villas and other private residences, sleep on luxurious couches, stable their horses in the libraries, feed the kitchen fires with rich carvings from the houses and orange trees from the conservatories. Fruit, vegetables and other food are abundant.

☞ A correspondent of the Guardian says, though the Prussians are beyond the range of the guns of Paris, they completely encircle the city. The main portions of the besieging forces are grouped in three or four formidable bodies, which are connected by telegraphs and good roads, admitting of the rapid transportation of forces to any weak point assailed.

☞ The women of Paris are forming an organization with the object of rendering all the assistance in their power to the defenders of the city.

☞ The Parisians say they burned St. Cloud to prove to the enemy that they will hesitate at no sacrifice for the defence of the capital.

☞ General Paladines, commanding the Army of the Loire, has issued an order of the day declaring that he will shoot soldiers guilty of insubordination, and asking the men to shoot him if he fails in his duty.

☞ Despatches from Paris are full of details of the measures taken by the authorities to insure a lasting supply of food. The cattle and sheep are well sheltered, and many horses are killed daily and their flesh salted. Care is taken to keep up the supply of vegetables. The stock of potatoes on hand is enormous.

☞ Despatches from Hamburg state that ten French ships of war are outside of Heligoland-Nouera in sight of the mouth of the Elbe. Preparations to meet the French vessels have been made to the Weser.

☞ Minister Washburne has informed Jules Favre that he himself will remain in Paris as long as the government authorities do.

☞ A large French force is assembled at Besancon. General Garibaldi has issued a stirring address to the Francs-tireurs.

☞ The Roman provinces are to be consolidated into one, with five prefectures.

☞ An official proclamation has been issued from Orleans announcing that the Prussian terms of peace are the cession of the provinces of Alsace and Lorraine.

☞ Paris is praying, but in secret, for peace. She is afraid to say it aloud. There is really no want of "pluck," patience or endurance among the Parisian; but the situation has become terribly distressing. They have an enormous amount of poverty and suffering, but still great hope.

☞ Five hundred houses were destroyed in the siege of Strasbourg, and ten thousand people were rendered homeless.

In Brief.

☞ A correspondent of the Springfield Republican predicts that all the storms during the approaching winter will come from the north or north-east, and that "they will not be attended by high winds or severe cold."

☞ The Sabbath schools of the United States have 1,000,000 teachers, and 7,000,000 scholars.

☞ As a proof of the severity of the battle at Weissenburg, a French journal states that one of its standards changed hands twenty-seven times.

☞ The most popular physician at St. Petersburg is a woman—Madame Susloff.

☞ Candidates for the Methodist ministry in Ohio cannot use tobacco.

☞ King William, of Prussia, was present at the battle of Waterloo. He was then but eighteen years old.

☞ The £100 prize of Mr. James Mason, for the best managed farm in Oxfordshire, England, has been awarded by the judges to Mrs. Mary E. Millington.

☞ It is estimated that the European war will cost each nation engaged in it from thirty to fifty million dollars a month; and the people who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow will have to pay for it.

☞ A terrible earthquake recently occurred in Asia, involving a region of nearly two hundred miles in extent, on the confines of Thibet, China and Burmah. Over three thousand human lives were lost. In one place a mountain fell, and a new one was suddenly upheaved. Many villages were destroyed.

☞ Deserters from Metz are so numerous, that the Prussian commander before that city has been compelled to issue orders declining to admit them within the Prussian lines.

☞ Dr. Beecher, when challenged by some worthless infidel to public debate, said, "I am too busy in hurling my Bible at just such fellows as you. I will just do to you as I did the other day. I was lately riding my horse leisurely to one of my out appointments, and had laid down the reins and opened my Bible. While I was studying it intently, a skunk walked into the road before me and stopped my horse. I threw my Bible at him and went on."

TERMS OF "THE BIBLE BANNER."

The Bible Banner will be mailed to subscribers at One Dollar a year, payable in advance, if possible, but always within three months.

A Book Free.

Knowing the power of valuable books in making effectual impressions of truth, and the ease with which agents form large clubs for a paper when they can offer a book free to each subscriber, we have concluded to publish in the first number of the Banner a list of books, by our best writers, mostly on prophetical and doctrinal subjects (prices from 25 to 50 cents, in paper covers), and send the choice from the list post paid, free, to every yearly subscriber.

"The Banner" for Free Distribution.

We will furnish the Bible Banner for free distribution at 40 cents a year, or a few samples by mail, with or without price, to all who will send us their address.

The "Banner" and the "Crisis."

Any subscriber to the World's Crisis who has not paid for the year 1871, by remitting $3.25 to the Crisis office, will receive both papers during the year; and any person who has not been a subscriber to the Crisis, by remitting $3.25 to the Crisis office, shall receive both papers for the year 1871.

"The Bible Banner" Free.

Those who devote their time and energies to the gospel ministry can have the Banner free by sending us subscribers; and any person who will act as our agent, and send us five or more subscribers, with the money, can have the Banner free, or retain 25 per cent., or select a premium from the large list of valuable articles which will appear in the first number of the paper. We hope to be able by the issue of the first number to announce a systematic plan, by which all who have willing hands and hearts may do much in the good cause.

Oh, let us wake up, trim our lamps, and let the world hear the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." We hope all who love the truth to which the Banner is specially devoted, and can take the paper or work for it, will subscribe at once and send for prospectus and sample copies.

Money by draft, or post office order on New York, made payable to H. A. King (resident editor), may be sent at our risk. Address

"THE BIBLE BANNER,"

ALL THINGS EARNEST.

Time is earnest,
Passing by;
Death is earnest,
Drawing nigh.
Sinner, wilt thou trifling be?
Time and death appeal to thee.

Life is earnest;
When 'tis o'er,
Thou returnest
Nevermore.
Soon to meet eternity,
Wilt thou never serious be?

Heaven is earnest;
Solemnly
Float its voices
Down to thee.
O! thou mortal, art thou gay,
Sporting through thine earthly day?

Hell is earnest;
Fiercely roll
Burning billows
Near thy soul.
Woe for thee, if thou abide,
Unredeemed, unsanctified.

God is earnest;
Kneel and pray
Ere thy season
Pass away;
Ere be set his judgment throne,
Vengeance ready, mercy gone.

Christ is earnest,
Bids thee "come!"
Paid thy spirit's
Priceless sum.
Wilt thou spurn thy Savior's love,
Pleading with thee from above?

Thou refusest,
Wretched one!
Thou despisest
God's dear Son!
Madness! dying sinner, turn!
Lest his wrath within thee burn.

When thy pleasures
All depart,
What will soothe thy
Fainting heart?
Friendless, desolate, alone,
Entering a world unknown!

O, be earnest!
Loitering
Thou wilt perish;
Lingering
Be no longer—rise and flee;
Lo! thy Savior waits for thee.

ARGUMENTS FOR OBSERVING THE SEVENTH-DAY SABBATH.

(Concluded.)

Having already noticed some of the main arguments usually adduced to enjoin the keeping of the seventh-day Sabbath in the gospel age, it may be well to notice others, and show their fallacy. The claim is often made that Isa. 56: 1–7, enjoins the observance of the Sabbath just before the coming of the Lord, even on Gentiles: "Thus saith the Lord, keep ye judgment, and do justice: for my salvation is near to come, and my righteousness to be revealed. Blessed is the man . . . that keepeth the Sabbath. . . . Also the sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the Lord, to serve him, and to love the name of the Lord, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant; even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer [here the quotation is usually discontinued, but the balance of the verse reads]; their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for mine house shall be called a house of prayer for all people." This text carries the Sabbath no further than it carries "burnt offerings" and "sacrifices." If it really brings the Sabbath into this dispensation, it as plainly brings "burnt offerings" and "sacrifices" here too. This point is too plain to be overlooked.

Again, we are informed that the Sabbath must continue in force through this age, as it is to continue in force even in the new earth, in proof of which the following text is quoted: "And it shall come to pass from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me." Isa. 66: 23.

If this text carries the observance of Sabbaths into the new earth, it also carries the observance of new moons there; and certainly that is carrying the "shadow" into the sunshine. But I am told this clause simply means from month to month. Then the other merely signifies from week to week. So this dodge is fatal to the seventh-day theory. They do not wish the text to teach the observance of new moons in the future world, and in attempting to escape this, they destroy their own theory. From month to month, and from week to week, instead of new moon observance, and Sabbath keeping, is the evident meaning of the text. Just think of carrying the fourth commandment into the world to come: "Remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor [in the new earth], and do all thy work [in the new earth], but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work [in the new earth], thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man servant [in the new earth], nor thy maid servant [in the new earth], nor thy cattle [in the new earth], nor the stranger that is within thy gates." Will the saints have men servants and maid servants in the world to come, either hired servants or bond servants? Will one class be poorer than another class, and have to hire out in the kingdom? And will God need to keep a standing prohibition against working them on the Sabbath-day? And will the poor "cattle" have to "work," too, in the new earth? And are there to be "strangers" there?

But another serious consideration arises here. A law must have a penalty. The Sabbath, being an ingredient of the decalogue, must have a penalty attached to it while it remains a law, in any age.

If the decalogue is a perpetual law, reaching into the deathless age, it must have a penalty running parallel with it—a penalty in the new earth—and that penalty is death. What! death in the new earth, where all are immortal, and "equal to the angels?" There can be no law without a penalty; and if this is an endless law, and a changeless law, it must have an endless penalty, and a changeless penalty. But if the advocates of its perpetuity are correct in saying that the stoning penalty belonged only to the ceremonial arrangement, and ended at the cross, and that underlying that penalty was the eternal death penalty, which continues in force through the gospel age, then this penalty must certainly extend into the new earth, if the decalogue is a changeless and endless law. But Christ says of the resurrected saints, "Neither can they die any more." How can a death penalty be inflicted upon deathless beings, even though they should sin? Imagine Jehovah saying to the immortal inhabitants of the new earth, "Thou shalt not kill" your fellow immortals—thus forbidding an impossibility! saying at the same time, if you do this impossibility, I will inflict a death penalty upon all such immortals—thus making God threaten another impossibility.

Will God have a law in the new earth prohibiting impossibilities? Will he have a law there with a penalty which it is impossible to inflict? Can there be a law without a penalty? And can there be either a change or an end to the penalty of a changeless and endless law? If so, where is that change specified? Death is the wages of sin.

Again, the claim is made that the Sabbath is an ingredient of a covenant that is to reach into the future, for many centuries at least, and therefore the seventh-day Sabbath is still enjoined. The most shameful perversion of Scripture I have ever met with, is the claim that the covenant embodying the seventh-day Sabbath is enjoined upon a thousand generations, and therefore must reach through this age into the new earth. We have only to read the texts referred to, with their contexts, to see the base imposition, for it is entitled to no milder name:

"He hath remembered his covenant forever, the word which he commanded to a thousand generations, which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac, and confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law; and to Israel for an everlasting covenant: saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan." Ps. 105: 8–11.

"But because the Lord loved you, and because he would keep the oath which he had sworn unto your fathers, . . . know therefore that the Lord thy God, he is God, the faithful God, which keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love him and keep his commandments to a thousand generations: . . . wherefore it shall come to pass, if ye hearken to these judgments, and keep and do them, that the Lord thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant and mercy which he sware unto thy fathers." Deut. 7: 8–12.

"Be mindful always of his covenant; the word which he commanded to a thousand generations; even of the covenant which he made with Abraham, . . . saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan." 1 Chron. 16: 15–18.

The covenant here referred to is one that was made with their "fathers," while it is said of the covenant that contained the Sabbath commandment, "The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day." Deut. 5: 3. Only the covenant made with their "fathers," instead of the one that contained the Sabbath commandment, is referred to. Who can be blind enough not to see this? That covenant will hold good to a thousand generations; and in order to share in its realization, it became necessary to obey God, or to walk in the path marked out under the law, while the law was in force; and it is now needful to walk in the path marked out under the gospel. It is true we read "the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant (Ex. 31: 16); and the same is said of the passover, circumcision, the Mosaic priesthood, the blowing of trumpets, the burning of incense, and the offering of sacrifices; and the same argument that would bring the Sabbath into this age, would also bring all these obsolete appendages of the Levitical arrangement into the gospel economy. If these ceremonies were limited to the "generations" of the Jews, so was the Sabbath.

For the want of better arguments, we are often reminded that after the crucifixion certain women "rested on the Sabbath according to the commandment." This is simply a record of what transpired, or a history of their doings, without sanction, or comment. It is not at all probable that they were aware that a new dispensation had then dawned, for even Peter was still unenlightened on the question of Christ's resurrection, "for as yet they knew not the Scripture that he must rise again from the dead" (John 20: 9); and if Peter was thus in the dark three days after the crucifixion, is it strange that these women still thought they were under the Mosaic law? One must be hard pressed to resort to such arguments.

Again, we are informed that Paul frequently preached on the Sabbath to Jews and Gentiles. So he did on other days. Did he therefore keep other days as Sabbaths? Paul did many things on the principle of availability, aside from preaching on the Sabbath, when he could get the ears of the people to the best advantage; he circumcised (Acts 16: 3); he kept feast days (Acts 18: 21); he purified himself and others, and had offerings made for them, according to the obsolete law of Moses (Acts 21: 26); all this was done upon the principle of availability, that he might the better gain access to those who were wedded to the law of Moses, and give them the light upon these minor points after he had convinced them of the correctness of the gospel plan; and, certainly, if he could do all this, to gain the desired end, he would not omit preaching on the seventh day, when the people all turned out to meeting.

We are also reminded that Jesus in predicting Jerusalem's destruction, said to his followers that should then be living, "Pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath:" but this no more intimates that their flight on that day would be sinful to flee in the winter. The Savior well knew that the Jews would still be clinging to the law of Moses, and would stone any man who might venture to make his escape on the Sabbath; therefore, it would be dangerous to attempt a flight on the Sabbath, as well as in the inclement weather of winter.

Again, texts of Scripture containing the expression, "The law of God," are quoted, with the claim that reference is made to the writing on the tables of stone, in contradistinction to the "law of Moses"—that the ten commandments are the "law of God," which can never be abrogated, while the balance of the law was the "law of Moses," and ended at the cross. The claim that this decalogue is an endless law, and adapted to the future world, as well as this, we have examined, and exposed its fallacy. If only the ten commandments were recognized as the "law of God," and if it were true that this law could never be abolished, then it would follow that the seventh-day Sabbath, as an ingredient of this law, would still be obligatory; but upon the other hand, if something beside the ten commandments is included in the "law of God," and that law can never be abrogated, those ceremonial ingredients would also still be obligatory. There is no escape from this conclusion. Then it is a matter of interest to learn what is included in "the law of God," seeing the claim is made that it signifies the decalogue, in which the seventh-day Sabbath is enjoined, and if the "law of God" cannot be abolished, all of its component parts must still be observed, whether Sabbaths, sacrifices, or ceremonies. As we proceed we shall not only learn what is included in the "law of God," but also learn that the same thing which is styled the "law of Moses," is also styled "the law of God." "They spake unto Ezra the scribe to bring the book of the "law of Moses" . . . So they read in the book of the "law of God." Neh. 8: 1–8.

Here a certain "book" is mentioned, which is not only called the "law of Moses," but is plainly called "the law of God;" and now if "the law of God" can never be abolished, the entire catalogue of requirements contained in this "book" are still in force; for there is no evading the fact that it is called "the law of God;" and among other things, "they found written in the law . . . that the children of Israel should dwell in booths in the feast of the seventh month." This law, which is called "the law of God," speaks of building "booths," and keeping "feasts," none of which things are written on the tables of stone—yet they are to be found in "the law of God," thus proving that something beside the tables, or ten commandments, is recognized as belonging to the "law of God." Furthermore, if "the law of God" can never be abolished, these "feast" days, and the building of booths, with the other ceremonies, are still to be continued, and nothing is left to be nailed to the cross, for the entire "law of Moses" is called "the law of God," as we have proved, just as really as the ten commandments.

In 2 Chronicles 31: 3 we read concerning "the morning and evening burnt offerings, and burnt offerings for the Sabbaths, and for the new moons, and for set feasts as it is written in the law of the Lord." Nothing can be found on the tables of stone concerning the "burnt offerings," "new moons," or "set feasts," yet it is all written in "the law of the Lord," which proves that something is included in "the law of God" aside from the ten commandments. Moreover, if the "law of God" could not have ended at the cross, and been succeeded by a new law, these "burnt offerings," and "new moons," and "set feasts" are still to be adhered to.

Not only is the book of the law indiscriminately called the "law of Moses" and "the law of God," but the tables of the law are just as really called the "law of Moses" as the "law of God." "Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded him in Horeb for all Israel, with the statutes and judgments." Mal. 4: 4. Here the law which God made in "Horeb" is plainly called the "law of Moses." What law did God give in "Horeb"? "The day thou stoodest before the Lord thy God in Horeb . . . he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone. And the Lord commanded me at that time to teach you statutes and judgments." Deut. 4: 10, 12, 13.

Here we have the law brought to view which was given in "Horeb," and also the "statutes and judgments. Here are two things mentioned—first, the law given in "Horeb," secondly, the "statutes and judgments," which include all the ceremonial features of the law. This law given in Horeb, and written on the "tables of stone," is called the "law of Moses." No other law was ever given in Horeb aside from the decalogue, and the "statutes and judgments," which are also often styled the "law of Moses," but are not here referred to under that name, as they are distinctly mentioned in contradistinction to that which is here called "the law of Moses"—"with the statutes and judgments." So there is no evading the fact that the decalogue is styled the "law of Moses." This destroys the claim of two distinct laws, one styled the "law of Moses," and ending at the cross; the other styled the "law of God," and continuing in force—for we have seen that the book of the law, and the tables of the law, are indiscriminately styled the law of God, and the law of Moses—being simply different departments of one law, which has been succeeded by a new law—the "law of Christ," or "law of faith."

But whatever of the decalogue is needed in the new arrangement, or whatever of the written Book of the Law is agreeable to the gospel scheme, has been enjoined by Christ or his apostles—thus sanctioning some features of both departments of the law as harmonizing with the principles of the "law of Christ;" but never have they enjoined the seventh-day Sabbath on christians. So no claim can be laid to the seventh-day because it was on the table of stone.

Again, to prove that the seventh-day Sabbath is enjoined on christians, various texts are quoted containing the phrase "the commandments," with the claim that the ten commandments are meant, and consequently that the Sabbath commandment is included. But this claim that the phrase "the commandments" refers to the original ten, no more nor less, is a false claim, as will be seen by the use made of it by the Savior.

"And behold, one came and said unto him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life? And he said unto him, . . . if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments. And he said unto him, Which? [which commandments?] Jesus said, Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Honor thy father and thy mother; and thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Matt. 19: 16–19. Here Christ quotes one commandment that was never on the tables among the ten, and he pronounces it a "commandment" among "the commandments," thus annihilating the claim that the phrase "the commandments" has reference to the ten, no more nor less, and that consequently the fourth commandment is in this way enjoined. Five of these commandments were from the tables of stone, and the other from Leviticus 19: 18.

The fact that Christ himself, in telling what he himself meant by "the commandments," includes those that never were among the ten, is utterly subversive of the claim that just ten commandments are meant by the phrase. Either Christ was wrong in his use of the phrase "the commandments," or it is wrong to insist that this phrase has exclusive reference to the ten commandments, and thus insist that the Sabbath commandment is made binding on christians. If Christ used the phrase correctly, it is folly to claim that it has reference only to the ten commandments, in the absence of a particle of proof, and in opposition to Christ, simply to make it appear that the seventh-day Sabbath is enjoined upon us. "The commandments," both from the "tables" of the law, and from the "book" of the law, so far as congenial to the gospel plan, are quoted and sanctioned as being in harmony with the principles of the gospel; but never has the seventh day been thus represented as coinciding with the gospel arrangement. Those commandments enjoining the observance of days are never referred to as being in harmony with the "law of Christ."

"The commandments" that now receive divine sanction, omitting those of a ceremonial cast in the former age, include the following: "And this is his commandment, that we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ" (1 John 3: 23), and God "now commandeth all men everywhere to repent" (Acts 17: 31), together with the Savior's "new commandment"; none of which were ever written on the tables of stone, and all of which belong to "the commandments" of this dispensation, in which catalogue the seventh-day Sabbath is never found. So this argument is unavailing. It is one thing to assert that the phrase "the commandments" refers only to the ten on the tables of stone (and the assertion, as we have seen, is contradicted by Christ), and quite another thing to prove the assertion. The commandments of the law include the ten, with the others; but the commandments of the gospel include all that are in harmony with the New Covenant principles, by enjoining them; but the seventh day is not thus included.

Paul groups together "an holy day," "the new moon," and "the Sabbath," reaching only to Christ. Col. 2: 16, 17. We are now down this side of the law-shadow, in the gospel sunshine. Three classes of days helped compose the shadow; "holy days," "new moon" days, and "Sabbath days." Nor can the point be evaded by trying to apply the Sabbath days to the festival Sabbaths; for Paul distinctly mentions two classes of days besides the new moon days; and if "Sabbath days" indicate festival Sabbaths, what class of days is left to be meant by "holy days," unless the seventh-day Sabbath? But if "holy days" signify the festival Sabbaths, then no other days are left to be meant by "Sabbath days" except seventh-day Sabbaths, unless we make Paul use tautology: "Let no man judge you . . . in respect of festival Sabbaths . . . or of festival Sabbaths." Who would accuse him of such nonsense?

So turn the text whichever way we may, the seventh-day Sabbath is made a component ingredient in the shadow which ended at the cross. Let us walk in the sunshine of the gospel. W. S.

WE MAY GO TO JESUS.

Sweet it is to know,
When the heart with grief is bending low,
When by sorrow pressed,
That we may in humble prayer,
All our wants to Jesus bear,
And by him be blessed.

He would have us bring
Every trial, that through life may seem
Dark and hard to bear,
Unto him, and he'll impart
Comfort, strength to every heart,
And our burdens share.

Storms of life may blow,
Brightest scenes of earth be mixed with woe,
Friends may droop and die.
When no earthly hope can cheer,
All is darkness, all is drear,
And alone we sigh.

We may always find
Sweet relief, if with a trusting mind
We to Jesus go.
Yes, in him we'll find a friend,
Who will all our steps attend,
Through this vale below.

— Awe is a right feeling; but it is not the particular feeling that Christ was set forth to secure in us, which was that of intimate, endearing, familiar relationship, and which was intended to enable us to carry ourselves easily, yea, rather to make us feel that we are carried by him.

— The universal want is love. Christ is the exhibition of love. Love is above everything else. There may be reverence, there may be fear, and they may be filial; but they are not to be compared with love. Christ was made to love. He is the bride of the soul.

In some way or other the Lord will provide;
It may not be my way,
It may not be thy way,
And yet in his own way
"The Lord will provide."

— A man, in order to enter the kingdom of God, ought not to pattern himself after a needle. A needle may go through fabric easier for being slim; but God wants men to be broad, capacious.

—I find many persons who worship God, and who are conscientious and earnest. I find some persons who rejoice. I find very few persons who lean upon the bosom of Christ. I find very few persons who walk with Christ in his own spirit.

— A man's soul without Christ in it is like a lantern without a light in it; and the moment a man has an abiding sense of Christ in him the hope of glory, he is permeated, and the light springs through him.

— Men often boast of progress, when they are only moving in a circle; and are sure they are in the right path, because in every circuit the footsteps multiply, when they are only following their own tracks.

— A good action performed in this world receives its recompense in the other, just as water poured at the root of a tree appears again above in fruit and flowers.

Die and begin to be;
For so long as thou hast not this,
Thou art but a gloomy stranger
Upon the darkling earth.

— Those who, in simplicity, follow the direction of heavenly wisdom, will be likely to find their guide fully a match for the most crafty.

— Wisdom is the olive which springs from the heart, blooms on the tongue, and bears fruit in the actions.

— He who sins against man may fear discovery, but he who sins against God is sure of it.

— A prime part of wisdom is to keep a good conscience; the next part is to keep a good tongue.

— Piety and peace go hand in hand; but piety and discord have no connection: where the latter prevails it destroys the former.

— The way to cure our prejudices is, that every man should let alone those that he complains of in others, and examine his own.

— We often hate for one little reason, when there are a thousand why we should love.

— If we would fully enjoy the light, let us have no deeds that we wish to cover.

— No man has a right to do as he pleases except when he pleases to do right.

— Life is half spent before we know what it is.

CLOSING CRACKS IN STOVES.—It may be convenient to know a ready method of closing up cracks, which are not uncommon in cast iron stoves; and we are assured that the following receipt is a reliable one. Good wood ashes are to be sifted through a fine seive, to which is added the same quantity of clay, finely pulverized, together with a little salt. The mixture is to be moistened with water enough to make a paste and the crack of the stove filled with it. This cement does peal off or break away, and assumes an extreme degree of hardness after being heated. The stove must be cool when the application is made. The same substance may be used in setting in the plates of a stove, or in fitting stove pipes, serving to render all the joints perfectly tight.

LEAN HARD.

Lean hard upon the Father who shapes thy paths; he will uphold thee; lean hard upon the angels who guard thy steps, no stone shall bruise thy feet or tangled net entrap thee. Lean hard in love but falter not, bearing, yet upborne, the burden shall prove light, at which in doubt and fear thou faintest now.

"Child of my love, 'lean hard,'
And let me feel the pressure of thy care.
I know thy burden, child, I shaped it,
Poised it in mine own hand—made no proportion
In its weight to thine unaided strength;
For even as I laid it on, I said,
'I shall be near, and while she leans on me,
This burden shall be mine, not hers;
So shall I keep my child within the circling arms
Of mine own love.' Here lay it down, nor fear
To impose it on a shoulder which upholds
The government of worlds. Yet closer come;
Thou art not near enough. I would embrace thy care,
So I might feel my child reposing on my breast.
Thou lovest me? I know it. Doubt not then;
But, loving me, LEAN HARD."

ARE YOU CONVERTED?

"Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out."—ACTS 3: 19.

I often look around and see so few striving for the kingdom, that I say sometimes with Paul, "Who is sufficient for these things?"

Reader, the Bible says that without conversion there can be no salvation. You attend the means of grace, perhaps; you like good people; you can distinguish between good preaching and bad; but that will not save you. Do you love God? Do you love his appearing? Do you love to speak of his goodness? Have you ever felt your sins and repented of them? Are you looking to Christ for pardon and eternal life? Do you long for perfect holiness, and follow hard after it? Have you come out from the world? Do you delight in the Bible? Do you wrestle in prayer? Do you love Christ's people? Do you try to do good to the world? Are you a Christian in business and on week days, and by your own fireside?

Reader, I beseech you not to turn away from my questions, however unpleasant they may be. Answer, though it may prick your conscience and cut you to the heart. Answer, though it prove you in the wrong, and expose your fearful danger. Rest not till you know how it is between you and God. May the Lord help you to repent and believe the gospel, and be prepared to meet him at his coming. H. S. MITCHELL.

DANIEL 9: 26, 27.

The Cottage Bible on Dan. 9: 26–7, on the expression, "But not for himself": "The expression is certainly elliptical. . . . Our translators, following the Jews, have here placed only a colon; but Dr. Boothroyd and others (in our opinion very judiciously) a full point; here ending the prophecy SO FAR AS CONCERNS THE MESSIAH. 'And the people of the prince.' This certainly ought not to be applied to the Messiah, but to Titus and his army; for the city was not destroyed by christians, but by the Romans. The wrong pointing led to a faulty division of the verses, and confounded two parts of the prophecy perfectly distinct. The Romans destroyed both the city and sanctuary; and the end thereof was with a flood, attended with nothing but desolation and destruction, till the nation was destroyed, or scattered through the earth.

"'And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week"—that is, of years. Boothroyd, in explanation of this, remarks: The Romans made a league with the Medes, Parthians, and others, that they might be at liberty, with all their strength, to prosecute the war with the Jews. They did so, and in the midst of this period, A. D. 70, all Jewish sacrifices ceased forever. The reckoning days for years and weeks, for such years, is not peculiar to the Scriptures. Varro says he was entered into the twelfth week of his years; i. e., his eighty-fourth year.—Quoted in Bp. Chandler's Def."

TRUST IN JESUS.

A doctor who was once visiting a christian patient, had himself been anxious to feel that he was at peace with God; the Spirit of God had convinced him of sin and need, and he longed to possess "that peace which the world cannot give." On this occasion, addressing himself to the sick one, he said: "I want you just to tell me what it is, this believing and getting happiness—faith in Jesus, and all that sort of thing that brings peace."

His patient replied: "Doctor, I have felt that I could do nothing, and I have put my case in your hands—I am trusting in you. This is exactly what every poor sinner must do in the Lord Jesus."

This reply greatly awakened the doctor's surprise, and a new light broke in on his soul.

"Is that all," he exclaimed, "simply trusting in the Lord Jesus? I see it as I never did before. He has done the work."

Yes, Jesus said on the cross, "It is finished," and "whoever believeth in him shall not perish, but have everlasting life." From that sick bed the doctor went a happy man—rejoicing that his sins were washed away in the blood of the Lamb.

RULES OF TABLE ETIQUETTE.

True politeness has its origin in christian charity and kindness, and all standard rules of etiquette were founded for the greater convenience and happiness of members of society. Although the reasons may not be obvious at first sight, they exist and will be apparent on careful consideration.

1. Do not keep others waiting for you either at the beginning or close of the meal.
2. Do not sip soup from the tip, but from the side of the spoon.
3. Be careful not to drop or spill anything on the table-cloth.
4. Keep your plate neat; do not heap all sorts of food on it at once.
5. In passing your plate to be re-helped, retain the knife and fork.
6. When asked for a dish, do not shove, but hand it.
7. While drinking, do not look around.
8. Instruct the servant to hand the cup at the left side, so that it may be received by the right hand.
9. Do not drink your tea or coffee without first removing the teaspoon from the cup to the saucer.
10. Use the knife for cutting only; never put it to the lips or in the mouth.
11. Break your bread into small pieces, and rest them on your plate while spreading.
12. Do not eat too fast; besides giving one the appearance of greed, it is not healthy.
13. If you find anything unpleasant in your food, put it aside as quietly as possible, without drawing the attention of others to it.
14. Do not open the lips, nor make any unnecessary noise in chewing.
15. Do not touch the head.
16. Do not rest the elbow on the table.
17. Do not speak with the mouth full.
18. Brush the table neatly before bringing on the dessert.
19. Be thoughtful of, and attentive to, the wants of those about you.
20. Converse on pleasant subjects with those sitting near you.
21. Do not say anything not intended for all present to hear.
22. Leave your plate with the knife and fork lying parallel, the handles pointing to the right.
24. Never leave the table before others without asking the lady or gentleman who presides to excuse you.

NAPOLEON.

A German correspondent writes from Frankfort, September 13:—

"The probability of Napoleon returning to France, and being reinstated upon the throne, grows stronger daily. The German press look with suspicion upon imperial honors still being paid to the prisoner at Wilhelmshohe. The Prussian official Staats Anzeiger announces that it is true that Napoleon sought death in the fighting of the first of September, and fought on foot from eight o'clock in the morning until three in the afternoon; and we all know that nothing can gain the sympathy of the world for an expiring man like bravery shown. The feeling of hate once shown in Germany against Napoleon has turned to pity, and in many cases to amusement.

The rumors currently reported, and believed by the people, are to the effect that Napoleon will only remain at Wilhelmshohe until the German army shall have entered Paris; that then he will return thither, and, according as circumstances permit, either seize the reins of government himself, or abdicate in favor of his son. Only when the whole government machinery is fairly in working order will peace be concluded. Prussia will not, these reports say, recognize the republic, and so far the latter's addresses have fallen coldly upon Germany. The King of Prussia, it is said, still acknowledges the legality of the plebiscite, by virtue of which, the voice of the people, Napoleon is still Emperor of the French. Nothing else can explain the honors paid to Napoleon on his journey to Wilhelmshohe."

WELL PUT.—Admitting that the spirits do hold communion with the earth, how does it happen that the spirits of men distinguished for their good sense in this world should rap out such arrant nonsense after their transfer to the next? Why, for instance, should the spirit of John Quincy Adams come all the way from its sphere to communicate something like this: "Ever the Empyrean glows with the golden effulgence of truth, and man, emancipated from the terrestrial dust, soars to the hights of flowery magnificence, while white-robed truth attends upon him, and his soul expands in the purified atmosphere of a rejuvenated existence!" "Confounded nonsense," exclaims the reader. Exactly so; but it is just the kind of nonsense which the "Spiritual" journals give us in hundreds of columns. It is a melancholy fact that no "Spirit" has yet been reported to us as talking otherwise than like an idiot or lunatic.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE LAZY PREACHER.—A lazy preacher called on Dr. Adam Clarke one morning, and was greatly surprised to find that the doctor had already written quite a number of pages on his Commentary. When the doctor told him the number of hours he had been in his study, he answered, that was all well enough, but as for himself he had not grace enough to rise so early. The doctor replied that God did not give men grace to do what they could accomplish without it, and that all that was necessary to be out early was simply to get up.

The doctor took a sensible view of the matter. A man should go to bed with his mind at peace; sleep as long as is needful—instead of turning over, turning out, and go to work and accomplish something. Men are dying in the stived-up air of bed-rooms. Let them get up, and when they have got up, be about their Master's business.—Ex.

☞ The Boston Saturday Evening Gazette says that the Rev. Dr. Alexander H. Vinton was instantly cured of chewing tobacco by a young miss of twelve, to whom he was giving good advice about Lent. She said: "Pshaw! don't preach self-denial to me when you have your mouth full of nasty tobacco!" The reverend gentleman turned aside his head, removed the odious weed from his mouth, and has never since tasted it.

THE BEST WAY.—John Bunyan was once asked a question about heaven, which he could not answer, because the matter was not revealed in the Scriptures; and he thereupon advised the inquirer to live a holy life, and go and see.

THE ANGELS' SONGS TO BE HEARD AGAIN.—The angels have had two great gala days: the first when creation was finished; the next when Christ was born. They are to have a third when he shall come again in the clouds of heaven.—Seeds and Sheaves.

SIR WILLIAM HAMILTON used to say that a man never knows anything until he has taught it in some way; it may be orally, or it may be by writing a book. There is a deep wisdom in the remark, which all readers would do well to ponder.

A PLEA FOR LITTLE TOES.

We confess to being unable to understand why the Lord ever made a little toe on the human biped unless he made it for a perpetual penance, for it is purely a sacrificial little toe. But then we have often wondered why he made mosquitoes, fleas and snakes. The unavailing knowledge which the latter imparted to Eve, to the everlasting sorrow of her multitudinous daughters, to our mind was not cause sufficient for the making of the tempter. Thus through much tribulation we have come to the conclusion that the Lord made him, and little toes also to torment us, of course because a little wholesome torment is good for us.

But it is not agreeable and we would like to mitigate it. For we really think that even little toes have "rights" as well as men, babies and women, which all shoemakers are bound to respect. Why don't they, then? We devoutly believe that there is not a shoemaker in the universe who by any means pleasanter than the pillory could be brought to allow space in a boot to hold the helpless little toe. We speak with the unction of experience. We have planted a foot on a piece of paper as wide as it would spread, and, while the shoemaker followed the outline, have conjured him to leave room for that toe. He never did it. Numerous untarnished boots hanging against a wall, bear expressive witness to the inhumanity and utter lack of anatomical knowledge in shoemaking men. No wonder a girl out West had her little toes chopped off. And no wonder the young lady in Hartford had such sore feet on her wedding day that she could not stand up to be married. The only wonder is that our women stand up at all, much more that they walk, which, by the way, they do more badly than any women under the sun, except the Chinese. We used to pity the poor Chinese women, but have transferred our compassion to our country women. Look at them as they pass by your window some bright day! The wretched fiction of a "Grecian bend," the more wretched fact of laced up lungs, cannot account wholly for that feeble, teetering, gasping walk, a walk utterly devoid of vitality, elasticity or grace; but looking down, the wretched little boot with its French heel, bringing the whole weight of the body upon the toes, explains it all. And this creature with cramped nerves and muscles, partial and feeble circulation, is to be the mother of men!

The ungarnished fact is that American women are fast becoming a nation of cripples. Nothing can prevent their growing to be such, unless there is an entire and radical change in the shape of their shoes. Girls, respect the rights of your little toes. If you don't they will turn and rend you.—Brooklyn Union.

GOOD HEALTH.

After a good constitution, as a requisite to health, come good physical habits. These require:

1. A good supply of nutritious food.
2. Daily and regular exercise in the open air.
3. Pure water to drink.
4. Pure and abundant air for our lungs.
5. Eight hours of good sleep out of every twenty-four.
6. Cleanliness.
7. Regularity in all our habits and employments.
8. Wise but not excessive recreation.
9. Last, but not least, useful, congenial occupation.—Herald of Health.

DON'T DO IT.—Don't smoke. Don't chew. Don't snuff. Don't drink spirituous liquors of any kind. Drink pure water only, and don't dilute it with tea, coffee, etc.; it will not hurt you if taken full strength. Don't make an omnibus of your stomach, and act as though there was always "room for more inside," when it is filled to repletion. Don't be irregular in your habits. Don't be lazy. Don't overwork either body or brain, if it is possible to avoid it. Don't fail to secure an abundance of Nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep. Don't always look exclusively upon the dark side of things. Don't fret. Don't do any of these things, and you may feel very certain of enjoying good health and peace of mind.

REMEDY FOR CORNS.—Bathe the feet well in tepid water, to soften them; then pare the corns very closely with a sharp penknife; rub on well green peach tree leaves; perform the process once or twice a day. The corns will entirely disappear, and not return without the cause that first occasioned them.

☞ Our houses and barns we lock and keep in careful repair; but our bodies and minds are repeatedly robbed and roughly handled before we consent to take like precaution with them.

BOY.

Over the fence is a garden fair,
How I would love to be master there!
All that I lack is a mere pretense,
I could leap over the low white fence.

CONSCIENCE.

This is the way that crimes commence,
Sin and sorrow are over the fence

BOY.

Over the fence I can toss my ball,
Then I can go in for it—that is all;
Picking an apple up near a tree,
Would not be really a theft, you see.

CONSCIENCE.

This is a falsehood—a weak pretense,
Sin and sorrow are over the fence.

Whose is the voice that speaks so plain
Twice have I heard it, and not in vain.
Ne'er will I venture to look that way,
Lest I shall do as I planned to-day.

CONSCIENCE.

Coveting that which is over the fence.

CHILDREN'S ETIQUETTE.

Always say, "Yes, sir," "no, sir," "yes, papa," "no, papa," "thank you," "no, thank you," "good night," "good morning." Use no slang terms.

Clean faces, clean clothes, clean shoes, and clean finger nails, indicate good breeding. Never leave your clothes about the room. Have a place for everything and every thing in its place.

Rap before entering a room, and never leave it with your back to the company.

Always offer your seat to a lady or old gentleman.

Never put your feet on cushions, chairs, or tables.

Never overlook any one when reading or writing, nor read or talk aloud while others are reading.—School-day Visitor.

FORGIVE AND FORGET.

I heard two little girls talking under my window. One of them said in a voice full of indignation:

"If I were in your place I'd never speak to her again. I'd be angry with her as long as I lived."

I listened, feeling anxious about the reply. My heart beat more lightly when it came.

"No, Lou," answered the other, in a sweet and gentle voice, "in a sweet and gentle voice, "I wouldn't be so for all the world. I'm going to forgive and forget just as soon as I can."

"I shall do as I please," cried Charlie.

"No, Charlie," said his sister, "you must do as God pleases."

"Must I not act for myself?" asked Charlie.

"Yes, but you must act for yourself, Charlie, on God's principles, not on Satan's principles."

SOMETHING FOR JESUS.

Savior! thy dying love
Thou gavest me,
Nor should I ought withhold,
Dear Lord, from thee.
My soul would humbly bow,
My heart fulfill its vow,
Some off'ring bring thee now,
Something for thee.

O'er the blest mercy-seat,
Pleading for me,
My feeble faith looks up,
Jesus, to thee.
Help me the cross to bear,
Thy wondrous love declare,
Some song to raise, or prayer,
Something for thee.

Give me a faithful heart—
Likeness to thee,
That each departing day
Henceforth may see
Some work of love begun,
Some deed of darkness done,
Some sinful wand'rer won,
Something for thee.

All that I am and have,
Dear Lord, for thee;
In joy, in pain, in life,
In death, for thee;
And when thy face I see,
My ransomed soul shall be
Through all eternity,
Something for thee.

THE END AT HAND.

Not only do numerous chains of prophetic events unmistakably bespeak our special nearness to the close of earth's sinful history, but sacred time measurements, limiting the duration of earthly kingdoms, tell the same story, even after making due allowance for possible inaccuracies in the exact epoch of commencement.

These measurements are near their termination, and opponents begin to feel the force of this great fact, and are seeking to evade the unwelcome conclusion, by denying the premises; or, to repeat what we have said elsewhere, they insist "There is prophetic time in the Bible—it is all literal time": thinking thus to invalidate the argument. But if this claim is true, it not only overthrows the time argument, but blots out Christianity, and brands Jesus Christ as an impostor; for the true Messiah was to come in sixty-nine weeks "from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem"; and if literal time, instead of prophetic time, is here given, Jesus is proved to be a false Messiah, for he did not come for hundreds of years after the termination of sixty-nine literal weeks, and, therefore, cannot be the predicted Messiah. The true Messiah must come at the time specified, and Jesus came at no such time unless prophetic time is given; and, therefore, unless prophetic time is here given, Jesus is not the true Messiah.

Also, sixty-two weeks were to measure from the erection of Jerusalem's wall to the cutting off of the Messiah, and if literal time is meant, Jesus was not "cut off" at the end of sixty-two literal weeks, nor till several centuries later; therefore, unless prophetic time is given, Jesus is not the promised Messiah, but an imposter.

Also, the "five months" under the fifth trumpet, and the "hour, day, month, and year," under the sixth trumpet, are by this principle reduced to literal time, although already so exactly fulfilled in prophetic time. This is dispensing with prophetic time at too great an expense—the denial of Jesus as the Messiah, and the denial of prophecy already fulfilled in prophetic time.

But if there is prophetic time in the Bible, this question may be asked: How can we discriminate between literal time, and prophetic time? Let us candidly notice the manner in which literal time is, invariably, given in the Bible; and then the rule by which we can distinguish between literal time and prophetic time:

1. Literal time, in the Bible, is invariably given in years (instead of days) when more than one year is given; and a plurality of years is never expressed in days. Such a thing as expressing three years and a half by 1260 days, is unknown in the Bible. Such a thing as expressing six years, four months, and twenty days, by 2300 days, or any other number of years on the same principle—is not once found in the Bible. This is not God's style of giving literal time to men; he always conforms to the usages of men in reckoning time, as in the case of the seventy years' captivity. There is not an exception to this rule in the Bible. It is also true, that when a space of literal time over a year long is given, it is never given in weeks. Nor are several years of literal time ever expressed in months.

2. As God invariably gives literal time in the ordinary way, it follows that when a measurement of days over the number contained in a single year is given, the time is prophetic. Also, time given in connection with symbols is generally prophetic. With these two facts before us, we need not be in doubt whether given measurements of time are literal or prophetic. Thus the 2300, 1260, and 1335 days, are positively proved prophetic. Let no one outrage Jehovah's own rule by trying to literalize them. Let this sickly counterfeit be repudiated by every lover of truth.

The Bible certainly contains prophetic time which spans the history of our world in its polluted form, and points out the introduction of a new era. For instance, in Daniel 8, a measurement of 2300 days was given as the length of time to precede the cleansing of the sanctuary, limiting the duration of the vision to this measurement; and yet not a single feature of the vision but what occupied over 2300 literal days: the "ram" operated over 2300 literal days; the "goat" continued more than 2300 literal days; its "first horn" lasted over 2300 literal days; so did the "four horns," and the "exceeding great horn"; and yet they were all to be extinguished within the limits of the 2300 days: hence prophetic time is employed.

There is no way to escape the solemn conclusion that God has given prophetic time, and the time is about out. We are confirmed in this conclusion by the present fulfillment of the jots and tittles of propnecy. "Blessed is he that watcheth." Let us be sure that we do the work assigned us, that we may be found ready. "Let us not sleep as do others," but "work while the day lasts." W. S.

For the World's Crisis.

"THIS GENERATION."

Many term this generation a curiosity, partly from curiosities multiplying, crime being accounted as one; a better term would be the curiosity of justice. We are living in a sensational state, and that journal that is not sensational, or fashionable, is not read much; the various crimes of the bloody assassin, or the paramour, are so woven up in the warp of religious and secular journals; the reason is, the public taste being so vitiated that nine readers out of ten are gratified by it. Says Harper's of March on "Novels":—"Novels are largely influential in moulding society. No one can doubt who sees how universally they are read, at the age when opinions are forming. We deem it of serious importance that those who scatter these powerful formations abroad should consider what they are doing for the century to come. The religious papers no longer condemn novels, but on the other hand we have seen commendatory notices in them as could produce none but a dangerous effect."

Says a writer in the American Baptist.—"It was a rare thing for members of churches to patronize balls or theatres, or tolerate the reading of novels. Now we find leading ministers among the popular writers of fiction."

Rev. Henry W. Beecher received $30,000 from the N. Y. Ledger for writing a novel. The very next announcement was that Mr. Bonner had engaged a dozen pious divines to write stories. No wonder that novels reach the enormous circulation of 250,000 copies of one work; while an edition of the Scriptures can hardly pass the first. I see by Appleton's journal for March 27, 1869, p. 27, that Berthold Auerbach is at work upon an historical novel. The manuscript will be presented to the Jews of Eger, who will publish 50,000 copies of the work, and use the profits in building a new synagogue. Money changers are not all dead yet.

The Ledger of July 23, 1870, says:—"Rev. Dr. Tyng's story, which was written for and published in the Ledger, has since been published by the American Tract Society."

Rev. H. W. Beecher's novel has since been dramatized for the stage. I know of one family who has taken to novel reading, and who has subscribed for a novel newspaper since Beecher and other divines (pardon the word divine) have written novels for the press. They said if it was right for ministers to write novels, it was not wrong for the members of churches to read them. Some of our popular plays performed on the stage are written by Rev. gentlemen: instance, Revs. Mr. Hill, James, Ingraham; and while I write last night's Boston Herald has been handed me, in which I see announced for next Saturday's performance at "The Globe" theatre, Rev. Mr. White's play of "The King of the Commons," for Sept. 17th, 1870.

The church and world have got to be pretty well mixed up in these last days. The Portland Transcript of May 8th, 1869, in "City Items," says—"Don't forget the festival of St. Paul's church at City Hall. The old-fashioned Morris dance will alone be worth the price of admission."

The Herald of Oct. 31st, 1869, says in its "Items"—"At Church Congress in Liverpool, Eng., Archdeacon Dennison encouraged the men of his parish to play 'cricket' between the services on the Sabbath." It would seem a little odd to St. Paul if he had been living at this day, to find christians having a jovial dance or playing "cricket" between the services on the Sabbath, especially if the sermons were on the judgment and resurrection.

It is no wonder that it is apparently harder to worship God now than it was forty years ago, when there is such a mixture of good and bad. At Foxboro, Mass., I heard the Rev. Mr. Dane preach; he was an old man of about seventy years or so. In his remarks he said it was harder to worship God at the family altar now, than forty or seventy years ago. Then, almost everybody read the Bible in the house, whether they were converted or not. His parents read it for fifteen years in the family before they were converted; but now infidelity was "on the increase." This reminds me of an anecdote related of Bishop Henshon. A young minister fresh from college wished to commence preaching at New Orleans. The Bishop dissuaded him, on account of the many temptations; concluding with—"The man who gets to heaven by way of New Orleans, ought to be more than doubly rewarded hereafter"—as it was such a hard place to live in.

A HOME FOR THE WEARY.

Words by M. V. SALTMARSH. Music by GEO. E. LEE.

Says the Post of June 18th, 1870, in an article on "Salaries":—"The old-fashioned clergyman is a thing of the past; such a one would be out of place in these times of liberal thought. Old-fashioned salaries, also, are as much out of place, as it was sinful among the early Methodists to adorn the frail body with the tinsel and fripperies of the beau monde, which is a dead letter now-a-days." The same paper, on "Sunday Morning Inspection," says:—"Most women attend divine service to show their new clothes, or to see the new fashions."

Old Methodist times were vastly different from the present. I have seen the plain buildings in which Wesley himself preached, and they were as different from those I am about to speak of, as day is from night, or truth from falsehood.

A Methodist church was building and just about finished at Washington, D. C., in 1868, costing $200,000. Pews for the President, etc., etc. Windows to be memorial, or historical, commemorating great men and great events of the age. Altar and pulpit from cedar and fir-wood brought from Mount Lebanon, Palestine. I have heard my grandmother, who lived under the preaching of John Wesley, speak much of the plainness of the early Methodists. Poor churches have a poor chance in these days. Says the Journal, on Baptist Conference at Salem (1867): "Voted, to raise $20,000 for feeble churches; but less than one-fifth was raised. In 1868, an attempt was made to get it by district collections, but not one district has contributed its share; only sixteen churches in the State have given over $100."

This apathy in the churches seems to confirm what was said at a church conference by Judge Smith—that "seven-tenths of all the members in the churches are irreligious persons, and not fit to be there." And as Harper for July (1869, pp. 291–292), quoting from a work by Rev. G. D. Fulton—"The majority prefer an infidel's cheer, to the favor of God and the love of the christian community." This is so much the case, that the Boston Post of May 12th, 1870, remarks—"The religious press in this country has become a by-word and a reproach." On this subject says the American Baptist editorially, "The church is going downward to meet the world; the world is coming upward to meet the church. Thus it seems to us is the characteristic of our times, and never more distinctly seen than in the history of the past year."

And in these days if any one stands up for Jesus or the Bible, he is ridiculed by those who would institute another gospel. Instance the following in the Banner of Light (June 5th, 1869) on "Questions and Answers." The controlling spirit's views were on the following article—"Infidelity advancing"—from the World's Crisis:—"The Crisis pins its faith upon the Bible, and in doing so pins it to a very shallow support. Every thought and deed is the result of inspiration; the Bible is no exception. . . . The World's Crisis is not so blind that it cannot see that the world moves notwithstanding the Crisis is printed. . . . The Crisis may groan, and all such sectarian papers may groan, but the mind marches on. Deity is coming up from its grave, annihilating all creeds and Bibles. It is very amusing to listen sometimes, as we are able to, to the groaning of those individuals who pin their faith to the Bible." I would sooner pin my faith on the Bible, than on a thousand worlds full of the Banner of Light, for its faith or light does not amount in size to a grain of mustard seed, and is of far less virtue. Here is a specimen of its theology in the Banner of June 5th, 1869, from a message from Ned Perkins, who has died and gone to the supposed spirit world: "I hunted about for God, but could not find him"; so he concluded to let God hunt for him, if he wished to find him. "If God wants to find me, so as to send me to hell, he's got to look for me. I aint going to bother my head to look for him." This seems to me to be blasphemy. But ridiculing the Bible is becoming popular in works now.

Renan, in his "Life of Jesus," which has caused such a stir in the literary world, on p. 38, 39, 43, says—"The Gospels are legendary biographies." "Miracles only occur before people who believe them. No miracle was ever performed before an assembly of men, capable of establishing the miraculous character of an act. And we say that there has been hitherto no miracle proved. The belief in miracles implies credulity. Jesus was not of the family of David." In consideration of everything that is taking place in this generation, well might Senator Sprague in his place in the Senate say, "If there is a man in the Senate who can withstand the corrupting influence which surrounds him, he is more than a god."

As the following from the Boston Herald speaks the true state of things, I give it entire. In an article on the signs of the times, it says—"A wicked and adulterous generation asked for a sign in former days, but no sign was given. Our generation, which certainly is wicked and many think is adulterous, is more favored. There are as many signs of the times as there are interests in society. The foundations of the great deep of the public mind are broken up, and it is in an ebullition state. It bubbles up here, and boils up there. Nothing seems fixed or certain. Intellect is as active as the whirlwind, but with no direct aims. In this nervous state nothing can be predicated as to what the results will be. The evidences of to-day are no more to be relied upon than the mirage that was seen last week at Hingham. Our vision is discarded. The saint to-day may be a sinner to-morrow. Nothing is fixed, and things are not what they seem. The places of amusements—the theatres, halls of negro singers, etc., are thrown open, and crowds flock to them. To look upon those audiences, one would say, The people are carried away completely by their love of amusement. If we look abroad, the same nervous excitement prevails. And all this while crime holds high carnival and stalks through the land, increasing in stature every step it takes. It scatters its seeds in every community with unsparing hand, and murder, outrages, robbery, and all manner of wickedness spring up into rank; and vicious people are beginning to inquire, What will be the end of this great commotion?"

And well they may, for accounts from all quarters echo the same complaint. The editor of the Chronicle reports that Horace Greeley of the Tribune said, that "there are, on an average, three hundred murders in New York city every year"; nearly one each day; while the N. Y. Herald reports Chicago as "literally in the hands of cut-throats."

The Post of Jan. 7th, 1870, quoting from the Chicago Tribune, says—"Never was Chicago so crime-ridden as now. A black cloud of terror seems to hang over the city. Crime is fearfully on the increase, and assumes a bolder aspect with every succeeding deed. Criminals are literally in possession of the city, and move and act according to their own sweet will. A score of burglaries is a poor night's work, and half a dozen cases of garroting in the course of an evening are scarcely worthy of comment." And as to another species of crime, licentiousness, that is everywhere. A few items on this subject will be sufficient. New York has one prostitute to every fifteen men. Buffalo, one for every forty-eight. Louisville, one for every seventy. Chicago, one for every fifty. Boston, one for every thirty. New Orleans, one for every one hundred. Mobile, one for every eighty.

In view of this state of things, well may people inquire, What will be the end thereof? May it soon end, and we be ushered into a better world, where everlasting righteousness prevails. JOHN TAYLOR.

DARKNESS.

In nature's darkness, before spiritual light is shed abroad in the heart, all the purposes and desires of the mind are purely carnal and selfish. The unregenerated heart is at variance with God's will, having no light to see the justice of his claims. They who are not God's, are most certainly the devil's, and are serving him, though in full knowledge of the fact that the wages of sin is death. We need no light or guide to travel the road to destruction; the darkness of transgression is favorable for those who follow the blind instincts of a sinful nature.

As light is synonymous with truth, so darkness is with ignorance, unbelief, and sin; the most fearful of all darkness is caused by deprivation of spiritual light; it is a darkness that is a "horror." In the time of Moses we are told of darkness that could be felt, yet greater is the moral darkness that exists in the unrepentant heart.

When the Israelites crossed the Red Sea, the Lord placed darkness between them and the Egyptians, that they might escape, for as God creates the light so he created darkness, which in this case was (to the children of Israel) a blessing; but the natural darkness that man inherits from the fallen Adam can never be anything but a curse.

But, sinner, there is a possibility of coming unto the light, yes, there is a certainty if you will believe in Jesus Christ. In the beginning the Spirit of God moved on the face of the world, thereby bringing the earth into existence out of darkness. So it is the Spirit of God through Christ that works in man moving his sins, thus bringing out his better nature from the darkness of iniquity. Through the workings of the great plan of salvation we are made fitting tabernacles for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

Then let us strive to always walk in the light, not neglecting prayer, or conforming to the world, or we will again be in darkness. The wicked shall be cast out "into outer darkness," or into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment; they are compared to, wells without water, clouds that are carried with a tempest, to whom the mist of darkness is reserved forever.

We have all been in darkness, but through Christ we have been liberated; then should we not do all in our power to show those in their sins the difference between light and darkness, truth and error, life and death?

Time is short; great events hasten on their way; soon it will be too late to plead for mercy. Those who dwell in the land of the shadow of death will be brought forth to everlasting life, or to everlasting death, and irretrievable darkness. May we ever pray for grace and strength to be kept safely through these perilous times, that we may be able to stand before our God in that day of reckoning. Then shall we be worthy of the reward that awaits us in the new kingdom, where all is light, and ever free from pain, sickness, disappointment and all trials; then is consummated the banishment of sin and darkness.

THE GREAT OATH.

"For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he sware by himself, saying, Surely, blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee; and so after he had patiently endured he obtained the promise."—HEB. 6: 13.

The oath here referred to will be found in Gen. 22: 16. This promise does not refer to the possession of the land of Canaan, for "he sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country." Heb. 11: 9. This oath was repeated to Isaac. Gen. 26: 3. The oath and covenant are spoken of as identical, and referring to the land of Canaan, in 1 Chron. 16: 16–18. "Even of the covenant which he made with Abraham, and of his oath unto Isaac, and hath confirmed the same to Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant." The actual oath is contained in Gen. 15: 8–11.

Although the oath and covenant are identical, there are two promises contained in it; one with reference to the possession of the land of Canaan, and the other with reference to the multiplication of seed. It was the latter that Abraham lived to obtain (Acts 7: 7); for Stephen said in his speech (Acts 7: 5), "And he gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on, yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him." This promise is contained in Gen. 13: 17. "Arise, walk through the land in the length of it, and in the breadth of it; for I will give it unto thee."

In the passage just quoted we see that God promised to give Abraham the visible land of Canaan, independent of his seed; and this promise is a part of the oath. We also see that Abraham never had a foothold of land there except the field of Mamre, which was not from God. The seed (not seeds) St. Paul says refers to Christ. But even if it meant the Jews, they never even in the time of Solomon occupied from the river of Egypt to the Euphrates, which are the boundaries given in Gen. 15: 18. The Jews could not be said to possess a land out of which they were carried captive several times, and from which they have been kept for eighteen hundred years. Elizabeth understood its possession differently, for she says (Luke 1: 73–75), "The oath which he sware to our father Abraham, that he would grant unto us that we, being delivered out of the hand of our enemies, might serve him without fear, in holiness and righteousness before him all the days of our life."

Thus, neither Abraham, nor Christ, nor the Jews, have had the visible Canaan from the river of Egypt to the Euphrates, which God swore with an oath to give to Abraham, who is also called "heir of the world."

Saint Peter tells us that the object of these exceeding great and precious promises is, that we may escape the corruption that is in the world, through lust, and be make partakers of the divine nature, after which, that is, the resurrection, the true Israel will possess both the earth and air. TRUSTING GOD.

There is one thing, which we as Christians do not do as often as we ought, and that is, trusting God for the little things (the trifles) in life. We do not go to him just exactly as we would to an earthly friend and tell him all about what we want. We feel too much that we must tell him about our religion and let the rest go.

Is it not the little things that make up the sum of our lives? Is it not the little things that trouble and perplex us? The little things laid upon our load (already so very heavy) laid on our weary shoulders one at a time, seemingly very little things, yet they make a fearful weight. We cannot carry them alone, and he is so willing to help us. Why not ask him? He himself says that even the hairs of our heads are all numbered. Does not he care for all our sorrows then?

He has told us to be careful for nothing, but in everything by prayer and supplicatian to let our wants be known unto him. Can we not take him at his word and trust him for his grace? He does care for the little things, and even in his kingly task of guiding worlds, he takes knowledge of all our steps, leads every foot-fall, and in his book all is written. All, even every idle word must be accounted for in that day. Yes, all, and he careth for us as a father cares for his children. Why do we not ask him to lead us safely along? He will if we ask.

It was quite a while ago, when I was quite young and a very babe in Christ, at a friend's, I was asked, yes, urged, to go to a place where no christian should be seen, altho', alas! they often are, to the eternal disgrace of Christ's cause—and it was a christian who asked me.

Being vastly entertained by the description given, I rather wanted to go. But is it a fit place for a christian? I asked myself. Yes. Was it not a christian who stood before me, urging me to go? Still I hesitated, thinking that my parents would not approve if they knew it. What should I do? I had almost concluded to go, when there came into my mind the thought of going to God with my perplexity.

From the depths of a longing, needy heart, straight upward to his throne went a cry for guidance and direction. Only the brief prayer of a moment, sent up to God for help, but the answer came speepily. Just before, I would readily have gone, now every wish to go was taken away. I had not the least desire to accompany them, and said no, firmly and resolutely.

All that afternoon, alone with God, reading the life of one of our noblest christian missionaries, who worked earnestly for Jesus, one whose whole life was an open epistle known and read of all men, I was blessed, doubly blest with his presence, and almost trembled to think how near I had walked to forbidden grounds.

But his strong arm upheld me. Can I not trust him now in everything. O, he does care for the little things even, and evermore he listens, and while we are yet speaking he will answer.

Go to him in every trial and in every joy. Go to him as a friend, and pray that the time may speedily come, when all shall know him from the least unto the greatest, and we shall be sons of God forevermore!

L. A. BROWN.

DIRECT PREACHING.

"Preach the word." Why? "For the word of God is quick and powerful and sharper than any two-dged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

No wonder men writhe under the terrible strokes of the word of God. It is like a hammer and a fire crushing and burning their souls. The advice of Paul ought to be heeded now. Probably there is more preaching, such as it is, in this age than in any other age since the days of the apostles. Men are going everywhere preaching. What is called "gospel preaching" is not an unheard-of article. But is there directness, pointedness, in even gospel preaching? Is is not too true that while the "gospel preacher" is stringing his literary beads, and counting his logical points, and tilting his theological lance, that men under his effort are "counting the rafters," and selling stocks, pea-nuts, sowing grain, plowing fields, driving engines, anything in fine except hearing him? What is the reason? Simply, there is no directness in the sermon. It is not sent at them, but over them, all around them.

It is related of a Quaker who discovered a thief in his house, that, taking down his grandfather's fowling-piece, he quietly said: "Friend, thee had better get out of the way, for I intend to fire this gun right where thee stands." The preacher of the word ought to fire "right where thee stands," and if "thee" does n't want to get hit, let him run. That is direct preaching, and it is the surest way to "discern the thoughts and intents of the heart" and unmask the hypocrite.

It is frequently observed that those who are direct in their preaching, and fearless in their application of the word to the every-day duties of men, let out some strange secrets in the lives and affairs of men and women. "Some one has told him," they say, and a hunt after the traitor, the revealer of secrets, is instituted. It was God's word that searched their hearts and homes as with a lighted candle, and made them fear and quake exceedingly. No man can be a hypocrite before God, as his word will unravel his tangled skein of lies. "Fra Rocco, a Dominican, preached a celebrated penitential sermon on one occasion; when all the audience were in terror and fell on their knees, showing every sign of contrition, then he cried: 'All who are truly penitent, hold up your hands!' Every man in the vast multitude held up his hand. Then he said: 'Holy Archangel Michael, thou who standest with adamantine sword at the judgment seat of God, cut me off every hand which has been held up hypocritically.' Every hand dropped."

Direct and sensible preaching is what is needed everywhere. Combined with faithful and patient pastoral labor, it will most certainly bring a rich reward. Skylarking after sunbeams and ornate tips to the wings of eloquence, will do for college sophomores, but for men who are dealing with the mighty facts and duties of the gospel it is outrageous.—Amer. Chris. Review.

PARALLELISMS.

There are some singular and startling coincidences existing between some portions of Gibbon's History of the decline and fall of the Roman Empire, and the Revelation of St. John in Patmos. The subjoined instructions of the Caliph (Abubeker) to the Saracens (vol. 3, p. 417), gives a marked correspondence with the language of John (Rev. 9: 4), under the fifth trumpet.

Caliph. "Destroy no palm-trees, nor burn any fields of corn. Cut down no fruit trees, nor do any mischief to cattle, only such as you kill to eat."

John. "And it was commanded them [the locusts of verse 3] that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree, but only those men which have not the seal of God in their foreheads."

Caliph. "As you go on, you will find some religious persons who live retired in monasteries, and propose to themselves to serve God; let them alone, and neither kill them, nor destroy their monasteries; but you will find another sort of people that belong to the synagogue of Satan, that have shaven crowns; be sure you cleave their skulls, and give them no quarter till they either turn Mahommedans or pay tribute."

John. (To the church in Smyrna, 2: 9.) "I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty (but thou art rich), and I know the blasphemy of them who say they are Jews, and are not, but are of the synagogue of Satan." "Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of Satan, who say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee."—3: 9.

John wrote about A. D. 96 or 97, and the Caliph about A. D. 632 or 633.

How plain it is thus shown that John's letters to the churches are of prophetic character, and not, as some suppose, that all the things therein spoken of had their fulfillment in those days wherein those churches had an actual existence. Only six of those churches existed in John's day; the seventh arose afterward; but their "candlesticks" are now nearly all removed out of their place.

MEDITATION 92.

Mercies, though apparently delayed, come at the appointed time.

How is it that thoughts rise in my mind about the promise proving abortive? or how can I conclude that the delays of Providence are ill-timed and unkind? Yet God, notwithstanding all the risings of unbelief in my breast, is punctual to a day. Hence says Moses, that God brought forth the children of Israel in the "self-same day" that he had promised, and that their sojourning in the land of Egypt was completely expired. But what a groaning time did the poor Israelites undergo! Their service was with rigor, their bondage was bitter, their oppression unsupportable, and the cruelty of their foes had arrived at that infernal pitch, as to plunge their helpless males into the river. At length, in this melancholy time Moses was born; but this sad season was spun out till he was forty years old, before he hinted to his brethren that he it was that should deliver them. Yet this faint dawn of relief immediately disappears. Moses is no more to be seen or heard of in all the land of Egypt, and the night of sore affliction is protracted for another forty years.

Now, what cogitations of heart, may I suppose, struggled all this time in the breasts of Jacob's sons, in the breast of Moses? Well he knew in what deplorable circumstances he had left his brethren, nor knew he how their bondage might be increased in his absence; yet, in the account of their glorious deliverance, he confesses that God was a God of truth, and that, however he seemed to delay, still his suffering people were brought forth from the iron furnace at the appointed time, and not a day later than the promise.

Have I, then, any reason to complain of days and months of delay? No. God has appointed a set time, and at the set time will remember me; and it well becomes me, though the time should seem long in my view, to wait with patience for it. God has in all ages so dealt with his people for the exercise of their graces; and these trials, like the instruments of the husbandman, breaking up the fallow-ground of their heart, make them bring forth a plenteous crop of precious fruits, whence accrues an increase of glory to God, and unspeakable joy to their own souls, through the ages of eternity. And is not this more than all that can rise from the present and speedy performance of the promised blessing?

Then sit still, my soul, and calmly wait the end, wondering more that justly-deserved judgments are not immediately executed against thee, than that expected blessings are for a while withheld.—Solitude Sweetened.

SOMETHING FOR JESUS.

Savior! thy dying love
Thou gavest me,
Nor should I ought withhold,
Dear Lord, from thee.
My soul would humbly bow,
My heart fulfill its vow,
Some off'ring bring thee now,
Something for thee.

O'er the blest mercy-seat,
Pleading for me,
My feeble faith looks up,
Jesus, to thee.
Help me the cross to bear,
Thy wondrous love declare,
Some song to raise, or prayer,
Something for thee.

Give me a faithful heart—
Likeness to thee,
That each departing day
Henceforth may see
Some work of love begun,
Some deed of darkness done,
Some sinful wand'rer won,
Something for thee.

All that I am and have,
Dear Lord, for thee;
In joy, in pain, in life,
In death, for thee;
And when thy face I see,
My ransomed soul shall be
Through all eternity,
Something for thee.

THE END AT HAND.

Not only do numerous chains of prophetic events unmistakably bespeak our special nearness to the close of earth's sinful history, but sacred time measurements, limiting the duration of earthly kingdoms, tell the same story, even after making due allowance for possible inaccuracies in the exact epoch of commencement.

These measurements are near their termination, and opponents begin to feel the force of this great fact, and are seeking to evade the unwelcome conclusion, by denying the premises; or, to repeat what we have said elsewhere, they insist "There is prophetic time in the Bible—it is all literal time": thinking thus to invalidate the argument. But if this claim is true, it not only overthrows the time argument, but blots out Christianity, and brands Jesus Christ as an impostor; for the true Messiah was to come in sixty-nine weeks "from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem"; and if literal time, instead of prophetic time, is here given, Jesus is proved to be a false Messiah, for he did not come for hundreds of years after the termination of sixty-nine literal weeks, and, therefore, cannot be the predicted Messiah. The true Messiah must come at the time specified, and Jesus came at no such time unless prophetic time is given; and, therefore, unless prophetic time is here given, Jesus is not the true Messiah.

Also, sixty-two weeks were to measure from the erection of Jerusalem's wall to the cutting off of the Messiah, and if literal time is meant, Jesus was not "cut off" at the end of sixty-two literal weeks, nor till several centuries later; therefore, unless prophetic time is given, Jesus is not the promised Messiah, but an imposter.

Also, the "five months" under the fifth trumpet, and the "hour, day, month, and year," under the sixth trumpet, are by this principle reduced to literal time, although already so exactly fulfilled in prophetic time. This is dispensing with prophetic time at too great an expense—the denial of Jesus as the Messiah, and the denial of prophecy already fulfilled in prophetic time.

But if there is prophetic time in the Bible, this question may be asked: How can we discriminate between literal time, and prophetic time? Let us candidly notice the manner in which literal time is, invariably, given in the Bible; and then the rule by which we can distinguish between literal time and prophetic time:

1. Literal time, in the Bible, is invariably given in years (instead of days) when more than one year is given; and a plurality of years is never expressed in days. Such a thing as expressing three years and a half by 1260 days, is unknown in the Bible. Such a thing as expressing six years, four months, and twenty days, by 2300 days, or any other number of years on the same principle—is not once found in the Bible. This is not God's style of giving literal time to men; he always conforms to the usages of men in reckoning time, as in the case of the seventy years' captivity. There is not an exception to this rule in the Bible. It is also true, that when a space of literal time over a year long is given, it is never given in weeks. Nor are several years of literal time ever expressed in months.

2. As God invariably gives literal time in the ordinary way, it follows that when a measurement of days over the number contained in a single year is given, the time is prophetic. Also, time given in connection with symbols is generally prophetic. With these two facts before us, we need not be in doubt whether given measurements of time are literal or prophetic. Thus the 2300, 1260, and 1335 days, are positively proved prophetic. Let no one outrage Jehovah's own rule by trying to literalize them. Let this sickly counterfeit be repudiated by every lover of truth.

The Bible certainly contains prophetic time which spans the history of our world in its polluted form, and points out the introduction of a new era. For instance, in Daniel 8, a measurement of 2300 days was given as the length of time to precede the cleansing of the sanctuary, limiting the duration of the vision to this measurement; and yet not a single feature of the vision but what occupied over 2300 literal days: the "ram" operated over 2300 literal days; the "goat" continued more than 2300 literal days; its "first horn" lasted over 2300 literal days; so did the "four horns," and the "exceeding great horn"; and yet they were all to be extinguished within the limits of the 2300 days: hence prophetic time is employed.

There is no way to escape the solemn conclusion that God has given prophetic time, and the time is about out. We are confirmed in this conclusion by the present fulfillment of the jots and tittles of propnecy. "Blessed is he that watcheth." Let us be sure that we do the work assigned us, that we may be found ready. "Let us not sleep as do others," but "work while the day lasts." W. S.

For the World's Crisis.

"THIS GENERATION."

Many term this generation a curiosity, partly from curiosities multiplying, crime being accounted as one; a better term would be the curiosity of justice. We are living in a sensational state, and that journal that is not sensational, or fashionable, is not read much; the various crimes of the bloody assassin, or the paramour, are so woven up in the warp of religious and secular journals; the reason is, the public taste being so vitiated that nine readers out of ten are gratified by it. Says Harper's of March on "Novels":—"Novels are largely influential in moulding society. No one can doubt who sees how universally they are read, at the age when opinions are forming. We deem it of serious importance that those who scatter these powerful formations abroad should consider what they are doing for the century to come. The religious papers no longer condemn novels, but on the other hand we have seen commendatory notices in them as could produce none but a dangerous effect."

Says a writer in the American Baptist:—"It was a rare thing for members of churches to patronize balls or theatres, or tolerate the reading of novels. Now we find leading ministers among the popular writers of fiction."

Rev. Henry W. Beecher received $30,000 from the N. Y. Ledger for writing a novel. The very next announcement was, that Mr. Bonner had engaged a dozen pious divines to write stories. No wonder that novels reach the enormous circulation of 250,000 copies of one work; while an edition of the Scriptures can hardly pass the first. I see by Appleton's journal for March 27, 1869, p. 27, that Berthold Auerbach is at work upon an historical novel. The manuscript will be presented to the Jews of Eger, who will publish 50,000 copies of the work, and use the profits in building a new synagogue. Money changers are not all dead yet.

The Ledger of July 23, 1870, says:—"Rev. Dr. Tyng's story, which was written for and published in the Ledger, has since been published by the American Tract Society."

Rev. H. W. Beecher's novel has since been dramatized for the stage. I know of one family who has taken to novel reading, and who has subscribed for a novel newspaper, since Beecher and other divines (pardon the word divine) have written novels for the press. They said if it was right for ministers to write novels, it was not wrong for the members of churches to read them. Some of our popular plays performed on the stage are written by Rev. gentlemen: instance, Revs. Mr. Hill. James. Ingraham; and while I write, last night's Boston Herald has been handed me, in which I see announced for next Saturday's performance at "The Globe" theatre, Rev. Mr. White's play of "The King of the Commons," for Sept. 17th, 1870.

The church and world have got to be pretty well mixed up in these last days. The Portland Transcript of May 8th, 1869, in "City Items," says—"Don't forget the festival of St. Paul's church at City Hall. The old-fashioned Morris dance will alone be worth the price of admission."

The Herald of Oct. 31st, 1869, says in its "Items"—"At Church Congress in Liverpool, Eng., Archdeacon Dennison encouraged the men of his parish to play 'cricket' between the services on the Sabbath." It would seem a little odd to St. Paul if he had been living at this day, to find christians having a jovial dance or playing "cricket" between the services on the Sabbath, especially if the sermons were on the judgment and resurrection.

It is no wonder that it is apparently harder to worship God now than it was forty years ago, when there is such a mixture of good and bad. At Foxboro, Mass., I heard the Rev. Mr. Dane preach; he was an old man of about seventy years or so. In his remarks he said it was harder to worship God at the family altar now, than forty or seventy years ago. Then, almost everybody read the Bible in the house, whether they were converted or not. His parents read it for fifteen years in the family before they were converted; but now infidelity was "on the increase." This reminds me of an anecdote related of Bishop Henshon. A young minister fresh from college wished to commence preaching at New Orleans. The Bishop dissuaded him, on account of the many temptations; concluding with—"The man who gets to heaven by way of New Orleans, ought to be more than doubly rewarded hereafter"—as it was such a hard place to live in.

Says the Post of June 18th, 1870, in an article on "Salaries":—"The old-fashioned clergyman is a thing of the past; such a one would be out of place in these times of liberal thought. Old-fashioned salaries, also, are as much out of place, as it was sinful among the early Methodists to adorn the frail body with the tinsel and fripperies of the beau monde, which is a dead letter now-a-days." The same paper, on "Sunday Morning Inspection," says:—"Most women attend divine service to show their new clothes, or to see the new fashions."

Old Methodist times were vastly different from the present. I have seen the plain buildings in which Wesley himself preached, and they were as different from those I am about to speak of, as day is from night, or truth from falsehood.

A Methodist church was building and just about finished at Washington, D. C., in 1868, costing $200,000. Pews for the President, etc., etc. Windows to be memorial, or historical, commemorating great men and great events of the age. Altar and pulpit from cedar and fir-wood brought from Mount Lebanon, Palestine. I have heard my grandmother, who lived under the preaching of John Wesley, speak much of the plainness of the early Methodists. Poor churches have a poor chance in these days. Says the Journal, on Baptist Conference at Salem (1867): "Voted, to raise $20,000 for feeble churches; but less than one-fifth was raised. In 1868, an attempt was made to get it by district collections, but not one district has contributed its share; only sixteen churches in the State have given over $100."

This apathy in the churches seems to confirm what was said at a church conference by Judge Smith—that "seven-tenths of all the members in the churches are irreligious persons, and not fit to be there." And as Harper for July (1869, pp. 291–292), quoting from a work by Rev. G. D. Fulton—"The majority prefer an infidel's cheer, to the favor of God and the love of the christian community." This is so much the case, that the Boston Post of May 12th, 1870, remarks—"The religious press in this country has become a by-word and a reproach." On this subject says the American Baptist editorially, "The church is going downward to meet the world; the world is coming upward to meet the church. Thus it seems to us is the characteristic of our times, and never more distinctly seen than in the history of the past year."

And in these days if any one stands up for Jesus or the Bible, he is ridiculed by those who would institute another gospel. Instance the following in the Banner of Light (June 5th, 1869) on "Questions and Answers." The controlling spirit's views were on the following article—"Infidelity advancing"—from the World's Crisis:—"The Crisis pins its faith upon the Bible, and in doing so pins it to a very shallow support. Every thought and deed is the result of inspiration; the Bible is no exception. . . . The World's Crisis is not so blind that it cannot see that the world moves notwithstanding the Crisis is printed. . . . . The Crisis may groan, and all such sectarian papers may groan, but the mind marches on. Deity is coming up from its grave, annihilating all creeds and Bibles. It is very amusing to listen sometimes, as we are able to, to the groaning of those individuals who pin their faith to the Bible." I would sooner pin my faith on the Bible, than on a thousand worlds full of the Banner of Light, for its faith or light does not amount in size to a grain of mustard seed, and is of far less virtue. Here is a specimen of its theology in the Banner of June 5th, 1869, from a message from Ned Perkins, who has died and gone to the supposed spirit world: "I hunted about for God, but could not find him"; so he concluded to let God hunt for him, if he wished to find him. "If God wants to find me, so as to send me to hell, he's got to look for me. I aint going to bother my head to look for him." This seems to me to be blasphemy. But ridiculing the Bible is becoming popular in works now.

Renan, in his "Life of Jesus," which has caused such a stir in the literary world, on pp. 38, 39, 43, says—"The Gospels are legendary biographies." "Miracles only occur before people who believe them. No miracle was ever performed before an assembly of men, capable of establishing the miraculous character of an act. And we say that there has been hitherto no miracle proved. The belief in miracles implies credulity. Jesus was not of the family of David." In consideration of everything that is taking place in this generation, well might Senator Sprague in his place in the Senate say, "If there is a man in the Senate who can withstand the corrupting influence which surrounds him, he is more than a god."

As the following from the Boston Herald speaks the true state of things, I give it entire. In an article on the signs of the times, it says—"A wicked and adulterous generation asked for a sign in former days, but no sign was given. Our generation, which certainly is wicked and many think is adulterous, is more favored. There are as many signs of the times as there are interests in society. The foundations of the great deep of the public mind are broken up, and it is in an ebullition state. It bubbles up here, and boils up there. Nothing seems fixed or certain. Intellect is as active as the whirlwind, but with no direct aims. In this nervous state nothing can be predicated as to what the results will be. The evidences of to-day are no more to be relied upon than the mirage that was seen last week at Hingham. Our vision is discarded. The saint to-day may be a sinner to-morrow. Nothing is fixed, and things are not what they seem. The places of amusements—the theatres, halls of negro singers, etc., are thrown open, and crowds flock to them. To look upon those audiences, one would say, The people are carried away completely by their love of amusement. If we look abroad, the same nervous excitement prevails. And all this while crime holds high carnival and stalks through the land, increasing in stature every step it takes. It scatters its seeds in every community with unsparing hand, and murder, outrages, robbery, and all manner of wickedness spring up into rank; and vicious people are beginning to inquire, What will be the end of this great commotion?"

And well they may, for accounts from all quarters echo the same complaint. The editor of the Chronicle reports that Horace Greeley of the Tribune said, that "there are, on an average, three hundred murders in New York city every year"; nearly one each day; while the N. Y. Herald reports Chicago as "literally in the hands of cut-throats."

The Post of Jan. 7th, 1870, quoting from the Chicago Tribune, says—"Never was Chicago so crime-ridden as now. A black cloud of terror seems to hang over the city. Crime is fearfully on the increase, and assumes a bolder aspect with every succeeding deed. Criminals are literally in possession of the city, and move and act according to their own sweet will. A score of burglaries is a poor night's work, and half a dozen cases of garroting in the course of an evening are scarcely worthy of comment." And as to another species of crime, licentiousness, that is everywhere. A few items on this subject will be sufficient. New York has one prostitute to every fifteen men. Buffalo, one for every forty-eight. Louisville, one for every seventy. Chicago, one for every fifty. Boston, one for every thirty. New Orleans, one for every one hundred. Mobile, one for every eighty.

In view of this state of things, well may people inquire, What will be the end thereof? May it soon end, and we be ushered into a better world, where everlasting righteousness prevails. JOHN TAYLOR.

DARKNESS.

In nature's darkness, before spiritual light is shed abroad in the heart, all the purposes and desires of the mind are purely carnal and selfish. The unregenerated heart is at variance with God's will, having no light to see the justice of his claims. They who are not God's, are most certainly the devil's, and are serving him, though in full knowledge of the fact that the wages of sin is death. We need no light or guide to travel the road to destruction; the darkness of transgression is favorable for those who follow the blind instincts of a sinful nature.

As light is synonymous with truth, so darkness is with ignorance, unbelief, and sin; the most fearful of all darkness is caused by deprivation of spiritual light; it is a darkness that is a "horror." In the time of Moses we are told of darkness that could be felt, yet greater is the moral darkness that exists in the unrepentant heart.

When the Israelites crossed the Red Sea, the Lord placed darkness between them and the Egyptians, that they might escape, for as God creates the light so he created darkness, which in this case was (to the children of Israel) a blessing; but the natural darkness that man inherits from the fallen Adam can never be anything but a curse.

But, sinner, there is a possibility of coming unto the light, yes, there is a certainty if you will believe in Jesus Christ. In the beginning the Spirit of God moved on the face of the world, thereby bringing the earth into existence out of darkness. So it is the Spirit of God through Christ that works in man moving his sins, thus bringing out his better nature from the darkness of iniquity. Through the workings of the great plan of salvation we are made fitting tabernacles for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

Then let us strive to always walk in the light, not neglecting prayer, or conforming to the world, or we will again be in darkness. The wicked shall be cast out "into outer darkness," or into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment; they are compared to, wells without water, clouds that are carried with a tempest, to whom the mist of darkness is reserved forever.

We have all been in darkness, but through Christ we have been liberated; then should we not do all in our power to show those in their sins the difference between light and darkness, truth and error, life and death?

Time is short; great events hasten on their way; soon it will be too late to plead for mercy. Those who dwell in the land of the shadow of death will be brought forth to everlasting life, or to everlasting death, and irretrievable darkness. May we ever pray for grace and strength to be kept safely through these perilous times, that we may be able to stand before our God in that day of reckoning. Then shall we be worthy of the reward that awaits us in the new kingdom, where all is light, and ever free from pain, sickness, disappointment and all trials; then is consummated the banishment of sin and darkness.

THE GREAT OATH.

"For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he sware by himself, saying, Surely, blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee; and so after he had patiently endured he obtained the promise."—HEB. 6: 13.

The oath here referred to will be found in Gen. 22: 16. This promise does not refer to the possession of the land of Canaan, for "he sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country." Heb. 11: 9. This oath was repeated to Isaac. Gen. 26: 3. The oath and covenant are spoken of as identical, and referring to the land of Canaan, in 1 Chron. 16: 16–18. "Even of the covenant which he made with Abraham, and of his oath unto Isaac, and hath confirmed the same to Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant." The actual oath is contained in Gen. 15: 8–11.

Although the oath and covenant are identical, there are two promises contained in it; one with reference to the possession of the land of Canaan, and the other with reference to the multiplication of seed. It was the latter that Abraham lived to obtain (Acts 7: 7); for Stephen said in his speech (Acts 7: 5), "And he gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on, yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him." This promise is contained in Gen. 13: 17. "Arise, walk through the land in the length of it, and in the breadth of it; for I will give it unto thee."

In the passage just quoted we see that God promised to give Abraham the visible land of Canaan, independent of his seed; and this promise is a part of the oath. We also see that Abraham never had a foothold of land there except the field of Mamre, which was not from God. The seed (not seeds) St. Paul says refers to Christ. But even if it meant the Jews, they never even in the time of Solomon occupied from the river of Egypt to the Euphrates, which are the boundaries given in Gen. 15: 18. The Jews could not be said to possess a land out of which they were carried captive several times, and from which they have been kept for eighteen hundred years. Elizabeth understood its possession differently, for she says (Luke 1: 73–75), "The oath which he sware to our father Abraham, that he would grant unto us that we, being delivered out of the hand of our enemies, might serve him without fear, in holiness and righteousness before him all the days of our life."

Thus, neither Abraham, nor Christ, nor the Jews, have had the visible Canaan from the river of Egypt to the Euphrates, which God swore with an oath to give to Abraham, who is also called "heir of the world."

Saint Peter tells us that the object of these exceeding great and precious promises is, that we may escape the corruption that is in the world, through lust, and be make partakers of the divine nature, after which, that is, the resurrection, the true Israel will possess both the earth and air.' TRUSTING GOD.

There is one thing, which we as Christians do not do as often as we ought, and that is, trusting God for the little things (the trifles) in life. We do not go to him just exactly as we would to an earthly friend and tell him all about what we want. We feel too much that we must tell him about our religion and let the rest go.

Is it not the little things that make up the sum of our lives? Is it not the little things that trouble and perplex us? The little things laid upon our load (already so very heavy) laid on our weary shoulders one at a time, seemingly very little things, yet they make a fearful weight. We cannot carry them alone, and he is so willing to help us. Why not ask him? He himself says that even the hairs of our heads are all numbered. Does not he care for all our sorrows then?

He has told us to be careful for nothing, but in everything by prayer and supplicatian to let our wants be known unto him. Can we not take him at his word and trust him for his grace? He does care for the little things, and even in his kingly task of guiding worlds, he takes knowledge of all our steps, leads every foot-fall, and in his book all is written. All, even every idle word must be accounted for in that day. Yes, all, and he careth for us as a father cares for his children. Why do we not ask him to lead us safely along? He will if we ask.

It was quite a while ago, when I was quite young and a very babe in Christ, at a friend's, I was asked, yes, urged, to go to a place where no christian should be seen, altho', alas! they often are, to the eternal disgrace of Christ's cause—and it was a christian who asked me.

Being vastly entertained by the description given, I rather wanted to go. But is it a fit place for a christian? I asked myself. Yes. Was it not a christian who stood before me, urging me to go? Still I hesitated, thinking that my parents would not approve if they knew it. What should I do? I had almost concluded to go, when there came into my mind the thought of going to God with my perplexity.

From the depths of a longing, needy heart, straight upward to his throne went a cry for guidance and direction. Only the brief prayer of a moment, sent up to God for help, but the answer came speepily. Just before, I would readily have gone, now every wish to go was taken away. I had not the least desire to accompany them, and said no, firmly and resolutely.

All that afternoon, alone with God, reading the life of one of our noblest christian missionaries, who worked earnestly for Jesus, one whose whole life was an open epistle known and read of all men, I was blessed, doubly blest with his presence, and almost trembled to think how near I had walked to forbidden grounds.

But his strong arm upheld me. Can I not trust him now in everything. O, he does care for the little things even, and evermore he listens, and while we are yet speaking he will answer.

Go to him in every trial and in every joy. Go to him as a friend, and pray that the time may speedily come, when all shall know him from the least unto the greatest, and we shall be sons of God forevermore!

L. A. BROWN.

DIRECT PREACHING.

"Preach the word." Why? "For the word of God is quick and powerful and sharper than any two-dged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."

No wonder men writhe under the terrible strokes of the word of God. It is like a hammer and a fire crushing and burning their souls. The advice of Paul ought to be heeded now. Probably there is more preaching, such as it is, in this age than in any other age since the days of the apostles. Men are going everywhere preaching. What is called "gospel preaching" is not an unheard-of article. But is there directness, pointedness, in even gospel preaching? Is is not too true that while the "gospel preacher" is stringing his literary beads, and counting his logical points, and tilting his theological lance, that men under his effort are "counting the rafters," and selling stocks, pea-nuts, sowing grain, plowing fields, driving engines, anything in fine except hearing him? What is the reason? Simply, there is no directness in the sermon. It is not sent at them, but over them, all around them.

It is related of a Quaker who discovered a thief in his house, that, taking down his grandfather's fowling-piece, he quietly said: "Friend, thee had better get out of the way, for I intend to fire this gun right where thee stands." The preacher of the word ought to fire "right where thee stands," and if "thee" does n't want to get hit, let him run. That is direct preaching, and it is the surest way to "discern the thoughts and intents of the heart" and unmask the hypocrite.

It is frequently observed that those who are direct in their preaching, and fearless in their application of the word to the every-day duties of men, let out some strange secrets in the lives and affairs of men and women. "Some one has told him," they say, and a hunt after the traitor, the [illegible] of secrets, is instituted. It was God's [illegible] that searched their hearts and [illegible] with a lighted candle, and made them [illegible] and quake exceedingly. No [illegible] be a hypocrite before God, [illegible] word will unravel his tangled skein of [illegible]. "Fra Rocco, a Dominican, [illegible] celebrated penitential sermon on [illegible] when all the audience were [illegible] and fell on their knees, showing [illegible] of contrition, then he said: 'All [illegible] are truly penitent, hold up your hands!' Every man in the vast multitude held up his hand. Then he said: 'Holy Archangel Michael, thou who standest with adamantine sword at the judgment seat of God, cut me off every hand which has been held up hypocritically.' Every hand dropped."

Direct and sensible preaching is what is needed everywhere. Combined with faithful and patient pastoral labor, it will most certainly bring a rich reward. Skylarking after sunbeams and ornate tips to the wings of eloquence, will do for college sophomores, but for men who are dealing with the mighty facts and duties of the gospel it is outrageous.—*Amer. PARALLELISMS.

There are some singular and startling coincidences existing between some portions of Gibbon's History of the decline and fall of the Roman Empire, and the Revelation of St. John in Patmos. The subjoined instructions of the Caliph (Abubeker) to the Saracens (vol. 3, p. 417), gives a marked correspondence with the language of John (Rev. 9: 4), under the fifth trumpet.

Caliph. "Destroy no palm-trees, nor burn any fields of corn. Cut down no fruit trees, nor do any mischief to cattle, only such as you kill to eat."

John. "And it was commanded them [the locusts of verse 3] that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree, but only those men which have not the seal of God in their foreheads."

Caliph. "As you go on, you will find some religious persons who live retired in monasteries, and propose to themselves to serve God; let them alone, and neither kill them, nor destroy their monasteries; but you will find another sort of people that belong to the synagogue of Satan, that have shaven crowns; be sure you cleave their skulls, and give them no quarter till they either turn Mahommedans or pay tribute."

John. (To the church in Smyrna, 2: 9.) "I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty (but thou art rich), and I know the blasphemy of them who say they are Jews, and are not, but are of the synagogue of Satan." "Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of Satan, who say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee."—3: 9.

John wrote about A. D. 96 or 97, and the Caliph about A. D. 632 or 633.

How plain it is thus shown that John's letters to the churches are of prophetic character, and not, as some suppose, that all the things therein spoken of had their fulfillment in those days wherein those churches had an actual existence. Only six of those churches existed in John's day; the seventh arose afterward; but their "candlesticks" arenow nearly all removed out of their place.

MEDITATION 92.

Mercies, though apparently delayed, come at the appointed time.

How is it that thoughts rise in my mind about the promise proving abortive? or how can I conclude that the delays of Providence are ill-timed and unkind? Yet God, notwithstanding all the risings of unbelief in my breast, is punctual to a day. Hence says Moses, that God brought forth the children of Israel in the "self-same day" that he had promised, and that their sojourning in the land of Egypt was completely expired. But what a groaning time did the poor Israelites undergo! Their service was with rigor, their bondage was bitter, their oppression unsupportable, and the cruelty of their foes had arrived at that infernal pitch, as to plunge their helpless males into the river. At length, in this melancholy time Moses was born; but this sad season was spun out till he was forty years old, before he hinted to his brethren that he it was that should deliver them. Yet this faint dawn of relief immediately disappears. Moses is no more to be seen or heard of in all the land of Egypt, and the night of sore affliction is protracted for another forty years.

Now, what cogitations of heart, may I suppose, struggled all this time in the breasts of Jacob's sons, in the breast of Moses? Well he knew in what deplorable circumstances he had left his brethren, nor knew he how their bondage might be increased in his absence; yet, in the account of their glorious deliverance, he confesses that God was a God of truth, and that, however he seemed to delay, still his suffering people were brought forth from the iron furnace at the appointed time, and not a day later than the promise.

Have I, then, any reason to complain of days and months of delay? No. God has appointed a set time, and at the set time will remember me; and it well becomes me, though the time should seem long in my view, to wait with patience for it. God has in all ages so dealt with his people for the exercise of their graces; and these trials, like the instruments of the husbandman, breaking up the fallow-ground of their heart, [illegible] bring forth a [illegible] crop of [illegible], whence [illegible] an increase of glory to God, and unspeakable joy to their own souls, through the ages of eternity. And is not this more than all that can flow from the present and speedy performance of the promised blessing? Then sit still, my soul, and calmly wait the end, wondering more that justly-deserved judgments are not immediately executed against thee, than that expected blessings are for a while withheld.—Solitude Sweetened.

AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

LIBERAL OFFERS.

NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

We are anxious to have our paper reach several thousand new readers the coming year, and become a blessing to them. It is the best means we have of sowing the seed of the gospel of the kingdom in some hearts, and we should all awake, and do whatever we can to have its warnings of the coming judgment reach as many new readers as possible.

Some of our preachers have done nobly, and others would gladly help on the good cause, if they could receive aid for their families while they spend their time for the paper. For the benefit of such, the A. C. P. Society, at a recent meeting, by vote authorized the Agent to pay ten per cent to preachers on all collections for the Crisis and Young Pilgrim; and it is hoped they will take hold of the work in earnest, and have great success. Those who understand the expense of publishing a paper, know that it would cost no more to set up the type for twelve or fifteen thousand copies, than it does for a less number; hence, after our regular issue of about nine thousand copies is run off, we could print several thousand more at the cost only of press work and paper. It has, therefore, been concluded by the Editorial Committee and Business Agent, to whom the Society referred this subject, to make the following liberal offers to new subscribers, to induce them to form clubs, and thus make success easy to all who put forth efforts to obtain new subscribers.

TRIAL OFFER.

We will send the World's Crisis three months on trial, to new subscribers, for fifty cents. We ask our friends to obtain yearly subscriptions, if possible; but where subscribers can be obtained for only three months, please visit them again, and, if possible, get them to renew before their paper is stopped at the end of three months.

To aid in obtaining new subscribers for 1871, we make the following offer of nearly

Three Months Free.

We will send the Crisis—for the balance of this year, from the time the name is received—free to all new subscribers for 1871, sent in before Jan. 1st.—Rate $2.50.

Now is the time to subscribe, and put forth energetic efforts to obtain new subscribers.

CLUBBING WITH OTHER PAPERS.

As many persons take several papers, and could be induced to take the Crisis, if they could get two papers at club rates, we have accepted offers to club other papers with the Crisis, which will enable our friends to obtain subscribers where it would otherwise be impossible to introduce our paper.

If any of our regular subscribers wish any of the papers on the list at club rates, they can get new subscribers for the Crisis, as it is not necessary that both papers should be sent to the same address.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS THREE OR SIX MONTHS FREE.

We will send the World's Crisis six months, and the Phrenological Journal and Packard's Monthly (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or the World's Crisis three months, with the Rural New Yorker (price $3.00) one year for $3.00; or, three months with the New York Weekly Tribune (price $2.00) one year for $2.00; or three months with the Bee-Keeper's Journal and National Agriculturist (price $1.00) one year for $1.00.

The Laws of Life and World's Crisis for........$3.25

WRITE FOR THE CRISIS.

It is very much desired that those who preach the gospel of the kingdom should write for "our paper." The saints scattered abroad are anxious to hear from them. We do not ask long articles on some disputed theological point; but short epistles and words of exhortation, suitable for prayer and conference meetings, such as are calculated to feed the flock of God. It is a great comfort to those who seldom hear preaching about the coming of Jesus, to read a few words from those who are standing as watchmen upon the walls of Zion. Shall not their desires be gratified? Come, brethren, let us hear a word from you immediately. Do not put off the matter any longer. Tell us what you think of the signs of the times. Are you satisfied that Jesus is soon coming? Is your faith growing stronger? Have you any desire to go back? Have you ever been sorry that you have preached that "the end of all things is at hand"? We think the answer would be most emphatic, No, never. We would say, Amen.

Come, Brn. in the ministry, let us do all that we can to arouse the people to the importance of the great truths that are now shining forth from the sacred Scriptures. It is more and more apparent that the Bible can be harmonized upon no other basis than the one which allows a personal coming of Christ, the literal resurrection of the dead, the final destruction of the wicked, and the possession of the kingdom under the whole heaven by the saints of the Most High. Let us be faithful, and not shun to declare all the counsel of God.

CHICAGO.

The Lord is still blessing us in Chicago. Two ministers have been reclaimed from a backslidden state, and are now ready to go forth preaching the gospel of the kingdom. One of them has been a noted revival preacher among the Methodists, and has been extensively known. He began to preach when about sixteen years of age. He is now over sixty. For the last fifteen years he has not preached, but has been employed in the medical profession, enjoying much success. He saw so much that was unlike Christ among the brethren, that he lost confidence, was thrown into doubts, and became quite skeptical. In this condition he came to our meetings, and became satisfied that he had once more found those who really enjoyed the christian religion. The Spirit of the Lord strove with him again; he came forward for prayers, was blest, and is now rejoicing in the Lord. He is a man of superior talent, and has had a deep experience. He sees clearly the great truths that man is wholly mortal, and that the wicked will be destroyed. We trust he will yet be a very successful laborer in the vineyard of the Lord. He has united with us in church fellowship.

Our conference meetings are precious. We have two every evening; one before, and one after preaching. Many are having very rich experiences. Yesterday—Sabbath, Oct. 23d, was a precious day. Fifteen were baptized in Lake Michigan, and twenty-six united with the church. In the evening, one hundred and sixteen sat down to the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. It was a heavenly season. The work is onward. New ones request prayers every evening. Next week we are to begin a series of meetings in the Indiana Avenue Baptist church.

DISCUSSION.

Tuesday, two o'clock P. M., Oct. 25th, commenced a discussion in Brodhead, Wis., with Mr. J. C. Crawford, Universalist. The question involved the immortality of the soul, and the salvation of all men. Mr. Crawford is a noted debater. The discussion continued four days, with two sessions a day.

PERSONAL.—Bro. E. N. Bliss is ready to go into places where there are but a few interested in the blessed hope, and hold meetings in private houses, and school-houses. He is a good man, and feels anxious to do all in his power to advance the cause of Christ. He has no family, and can go and work where there is an open door. He is the one of whom Bro. Henry Pratt wrote some time since, as being a Baptist man, whom he asked to ride with him, and who became interested from that time, in consequence of a timely word spoken. Let those who are living where there have been no meetings, send for this brother. Address him at 215 West Polk St., Chicago, Ill.

ETERNAL TORMENT.

But few ministers, at the present day, believe and preach the doctrine that the wicked will be put into literal fire to burn eternally. They have entirely changed their position from that of the ablest and best men who lived fifty years ago. Then it follows that either the old preachers were wrong, or the modern, or both; we think the last position is true. The wicked will not burn eternally in literal fire, and be forever unconsumed; neither is the gehenna fire a mere figure; but as literal as the fire that destroyed Sodom; and the effects will be as literal as was the destruction of the cities of the plain. We are satified that no other position will make harmony in the Bible.

H. W. Beecher recently preached a sermon on "everlasting punishment," by which we include he means "everlasting torment," in which he is reported to have said:

"To suppose that 30,000,000 of people were pouring yearly over the precipice into everlasting punishment, and then to teach that God was a loving father was such an anomaly that people could not believe it. Vindictive justice was once thought to be right, but it cannot be defended in the court of love. . . . An eternity of punishment when it seizes the mind seems to paralyze it with horror, and it is this subject that has puzzled theologians more than any other."

Rather than believe in the doctrine of eternal torment, men like Mr. Beecher are trying to make out that when the Lord says he will destroy all the wicked, he only means a kind of figurative destruction. They come to this conclusion, because they suppose man has an immortal soul, that will be eternally conscious, which cannot be destroyed, but could not live in literal fire. They forget that Jesus tells us to "fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell"—gehenna fire. Many good christian people in the various churches are becoming satisfied that the wicked will be utterly destroyed, as the Bible teaches.

COUNTERFEIT RELIGION.

We are satisfied that much which passes for Christianity at the present day is but a mere counterfeit, destitute of the spirit of Christ. Instead of loving God, its professors love the world, its fashions, manners and customs. Instead of loving their neighbor, as the Bible directs, they love themselves. Instead of being ornamented with the "meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price," they are decorated with all the foolish tinselry that the desires of a proud heart may demand. How unlike primitive Christianity is the most of that which is manifested at the present day.

The following sensible remarks are from "The Stumbling Stone":—

"The most dangerous counterfeit is that which is the most perfect imitation of that which is of greatest value. Those churches which have the most perfect resemblance to true religion without the reality, are the most dangerous institutions in existence. The more perfect the form of orthodoxy or holiness, without the life and power of genuine faith, the more perfectly does it subserve the design of Satan in deceiving and destroying souls; because no counterfeit faith will save, however perfect the imitation. Genuine religion, without any mistake, is all that will warrant the awful hazard of the judgment.

How dreadful is the business of flattering and comforting the people with any thing short of the absolute certainty of true religion."

"FABLES OF INFIDELITY."

Those who have not read the "Fables of Infidelity," will find the book one of special value in this age of skepticism. We are acquainted with no other work, of its size, that contains so many important practical thoughts against modern infidelity. It was prepared by Dr. Robert Patterson, who now resides at 71 North Curtis street, Chicago. He is a thorough scholar, an able minister of the New Testament, and has paid special attention to the strong points that infidels urge against the Bible and its Author, showing himself most fully competent to meet them in their geological, philosophical and astronomical objections, as presented against Christianity. Every body should read "Fables of Infidelity." For sale at this office. Price $1.00.

THE SPIRIT OF PROTESTANTISM.

Some may think it a strange remark, when we say that the prevailing spirit of Protestantism, at the present day, is unchristian, and calculated to make backsliders, and dwarfs in christianity, rather than humble disciples of Jesus. Its spirit is the spirit of the world, instead of the spirit of Christ. Its religion is only lukewarm at the best. Of course there are many true followers of the Savior in the various evangelical denominations; but the great body of professors are but stumbling blocks in the way of sinners.

The theology of the day is full of fables, and its advocates of worldly policy, conformers to the customs and manners of the proud and fashionable, who make no profession of religion; bowing down to the god of this world, seeking honor, pleasure, and wealth; eating and drinking with the drunken; joking and singing merry songs with the ungodly at fairs, festivals, and other scenes of amusement; persecuting those who come out from the world to follow the humble Jesus, and defend his truth; and yet flattering themselves that the world is growing better rapidly, and is about to be converted. O how deluded. Here we are amid the awful perils of the last days, and Protestantism is crying "peace and safety." It seems to think because the Papal power has received a death-blow at Rome, that now all is well; while it is itself drinking the same spirit that resulted in Papacy.

The following from the Chicago Tribune, Oct. 21st, 1870, is a sample of the spirit that rules in the hearts of those who are being educated to preach the gospel of Christ, and who profess to be his ambassadors:—

GRAND REUNION OF THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS OF CHICAGO.

Yesterday afternoon the theological students of the three seminaries of this city, together with those of Evanston, met, by invitation, at the Presbyterian Seminary on the North Side. The afternoon was spent in a match game of base ball between the Congregationalists and Presbyterians, resulting in a victory for the former.

They then sat down to a sumptuous repast, which was followed by a social reunion presided over by J. C. Eastman, Esq., who spoke a few words of welcome.

The following toast was then proposed, which was replied to by Mr. A. O. Taylor, of the Baptist Seminary. "That which separates us—the Chicago River." A song was then given by the Presbyterian brethren.

A toast was then proposed for the Methodist Students: "Three clerical requisites—boldness, brains, and brawn. A very pleasant rejoinder was made by Mr. T. S. Berry, of Evanston.

The Baptists then favored the company with a song. After which a reply was made by Mr Alva Hurd, of the Union Park Theological Seminary: "Our Aims, Anticipations, and our Aids."

A short speech was then made by Mr. E. H. Harvey, of the Presbyterian Seminary. A brief devotional meeting then took place, in which many of the brethren took part.

About one hundred and forty were present. The meeting broke up at an early hour, and all went away feeling that they had had an enjoyable season.

We understand that this is the second of a series of such meetings, the next of which will be held at the Congregational Seminary."

Here we have "a match game of base ball between the Congregationalists and Presbyterians"; then toasts and speeches, followed by "a brief devotional meeting." This is called a "grand reunion of theological students." We would not be understood as saying that this "reunion" was a notoriously wicked affair; but we do say that those whose hearts are warm with the love of Jesus, would take no pleasure in such things. They are just what destroy the life and power of godliness, which is the grand object of Satan. He well knows if he can persuade the young ministers to conform to the world, and partake of its spirit, that he need not fear much trouble from such preachers. How can they preach a pure religion when they do not live it themselves?

We see an earnest conflict approaching between Protestantism and a pure Christianity. Who will "stand up for Jesus"? Who will sanctify all to him now and for ever? No other position is safe. None other will fit us for his coming.

EXPLANATION ONCE MORE.

As many do not yet understand the date on their papers, or wrappers, we would say, the date on the paper is the time to which you have paid. If it is 7 Sept. 70, it means that you have paid to last Sept. If Nov. or Dec. 70, it shows that you have paid so much in advance; but if it is 67, 68 or 69. it shows that you are in arrears from that date, and ought to pay up immediately.

RECEIVED.—Among other monthlies for November, Arthur's Home Magazine, Children's Hour, Herald of Health, Good Health, Phrenological Journal, Young Folks, Reformer, etc., etc.

PERSONAL.—Sr. E. S. Mellen fell asleep in Jesus, Oct. 30th. She rests from her labors, and her works do follow her.

TRACTS TO SCATTER IN WIS.

Wishing to scatter my four new tracts more extensively in Wisconsin than I have been able to do with my own hand, with the help of a few friends, I offer to send by mail to any brother or sister living in Wisconsin, as many as 10 cents will prepay, if they will send me the postage, provided they send any time before the close of November, giving plain directions where to send them. I limit the offer to Wisconsin for the present, and restrict as to the quantity allowed each individual, fearing they may be too soon exhausted. Let no one send over 10 cts. in postage unless they design it as a donation to aid the enterprise. Direct to William Sheldon, Brodhead, Green Co., Wis., and send within the time specified.

DEPENDING ON CHRIST.

So called orthodoxy makes us dependent on Christ for some things—as future happiness and glory; but Adventism makes us dependent on Christ for everything—immortality and eternal life not excepted. Which honors Christ the most? This incessant boasting that we are immortal, independent of Christ and can live to all eternity regardless of his favor, and in spite of his frowns, is calculated to dishonor Christ, and to discredit the scriptural statement, "The gift of God is eternal life through our Lord Jesus Christ." A "gift" is not something that we possess independent of a giver; and in this case, God is the giver. and the saints will be the receivers when they shall "awake" "to everlasting life."

Thus "everlasting life" begins after the sleep of death ends, instead of running parallel with death, or preceding it. Christ "is our life," in the sense of being the great fountain of life; and the christian has a present claim on it, while it is yet only in Christ, and not in us. "This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son"; but not yet in us, nor can it be till the sleeping saints awake "to everlasting life"; agreeing with the statement of the Savior, "In the world to come, eternal life."

W. S.

WHY PREACH SO MUCH ABOUT THE LORD'S COMING?

This question is being propounded by many. We are prepared to assign our reasons:

1. It is a truth of revelation, and we have no right to conceal it to please those who disrelish it.

2. God has made it conspicuous in the Bible, and we have no right to assign it a less prominent place in our preaching.

3. Proof is abundant and clear that it is an event now almost due, and it ought to be kept before the people at such a time.

4. "Every man" is then to be "judged," and also "rewarded" (Rev. 20: 13; Matt. 16: 27); hence future reward depends upon his coming.

A theory that repudiates reward at the coming of the Lord, and locates it at death, sees no importance connected with the coming of Christ, and leads men to complain about our making this doctrine too prominent. But the truth is, there is no judgment till he comes, and no reward till the judgment comes. And is the reward of the saint a matter of no consequence? When will people open their eyes?

W. S.

"WE ALL DO FADE AS A LEAF." How true this statement of the prophet. Our friends may be in the bloom and vigor of health when we leave them, but after the lapse of a few years, we return to behold them fading like the leaf of autumn, bearing the undisguised marks of coming dissolution. And while our hearts are saddened at the fact, we are reminded that we too are fading. "The things that are seen" in this world, though lovely and beautiful for a time, are temporal—our life itself is temporal—but there are things as yet unseen, beyond the reign of death, which are eternal. There none will "fade," but eternal vigor will characterize all. W. S.

"WHAT CAN I DO TO SPREAD THE TRUTH?" If you cannot preach, there are several other things that you can do, and ought to do.

1. Help those that can preach. "No man can go a warfare at his own charge."

2. Purchase and scatter telling tracts; not those that are all words, and no thoughts, but pithy documents. They will cost something, it is true; but is the truth worth anything to you? Then love your neighbor as yourself.

3. If you cannot scatter as many as you can pay for, put your funds into proper hands to aid others in the good work. "Sow beside all waters." Who will do it? W. S.

DO YOU BELIEVE IT?

Do you believe that Christ is coming soon? Are you living as though you believe it? Are you on the altar unreservedly, having given all for Christ? Are you ready to meet Jesus? Can you heartily unite in the Revelator's petition, "Come, Lord Jesus"?

Alas! how many who profess to believe in the immediate coming of Jesus, act like other people, evince a lack of consecration, and do but little to help the cause of Christ. They know it needs help, but they leave that for somebody else to do. They hear pressing calls for aid, but think that is meant for somebody else. They do not know, by experience, that Jesus told the truth in saying that "it is more blessed to give than to receive," and have not faith enough in his word to make the experiment. They often wonder they do not enjoy more; but the true wonder is that they get one day of peace. Do they believe that Jesus is coming, while they do but little or nothing to scatter the news? Do they believe that God sees their conduct in scrimping his cause, or reads their hearts in withholding when "the Lord hath need of it"? W. S.

For the World's Crisis.

THE LATE EARTHQUAKE.

The earthquake of Thursday, Oct. 20th, was the only one I ever witnessed. Sitting with my family at home, I found myself swaying to and fro, and becomg dizzy. I inquired, What's the matter? I looked upon the trees and buildings, and saw them still remain. I looked about the room, and saw the clothes upon the bars swaying to and fro, as though some rude wind was among them. My daughter also experienced a sort of sea sickness, and I learn this sensation was general. The schools were immediately vacated. The armory hands fled their work. Door bells rang, and all confidence in the stability of things that are seen became quite shaky.

The following from the Springfield Republican seems to show that all things do not continue as they were, at least in the minds of thinking and observing men. May the Lord help us to be like those who wait for His coming. H. PRATT.

SUNDAY'S METEOR, AND OTHER RECENT PHENOMENA.—The dullest observer must have noticed that we are experiencing a rare and rapid succession of phenomena in the air and the earth, rare, at least, in this region. The auroral displays have been unusually frequent and brilliant, and so strong as seriously to interfere with the electric current in telegraphing; then came the earthquake of Thursday, which occurred on the second anniversary of the great calamity along the coast of Peru, and is by some scientists presaged to precede another similar convulsion; and now we seem to have entered into a storm of meteors. The first we have heard from was seen and heard on Saturday night at about eleven o'clock; another is reported at New York as exploding at a point fifteen degrees northwest of Mezar, in the constellation of the "Great Dipper," and its very brilliant light casting shadows of buildings and surrounding objects; the third fell at seven o'clock Sunday morning, and the fourth at quarter past eight the same day. It is the seven o'clock meteor, however, with which we are concerned, as it was quite as remarkable as has been seen for a generation. It was either seen or felt from middle New Hampshire to shortly below the Connecticut line, and from Pittsfield on the west to Cohasset on the east. Boston don't seem to have known about it, and as full reports about it reach us from all the country villages, while not a dozen people in this city and nobody in any other saw it, we are constrained to believe that early rising is not a city custom. Its appearance and effects are minutely described by various correspondents. It was apparently as large as the sun at his rising, and springing from the Dipper, it described an arc from northeast to southwest, at an angle of seventy-five degrees above the horizon. Its color is described as that of iron at white heat, with vivid vari-colored scintillations, and leaving in its wake a luminous train about three or four degrees in width, which remained for some fifteen seconds. Its brilliancy was especially astonishing, as the sun was some ways above the horizon. It exploded finally in a sharp detonation, scattering its brilliant fragments in all directions, each of which also burst in rapid succession. Its smoke hung like a cloud for several seconds more, emitting flashes of light, and then gradually faded into air.

The most singular feature of this phenomenon was its physical effect in producing a heavy, distinct rumbling, like a distant rock-blast, or echoed cannon-shot, which was heard more plainly in houses than without. This was accompanied by a jar strong enough to shake windows and doors, awaken sleepers, and alarm many with the thought of another earthquake. We have accounts of this great meteor from Concord, N. H. (where they are sure they have got it in a pond); from Ware (a very minute and careful one); from Amherst, Granby, Deerfield, Westfield, Pittsfield and Lanesboro (which also claims to locate the celestial wonder in an ore bed.) The 8.15 meteor was seen in Deerfield, and was creditably bright.

A singular effect was noted in West Springfield, where a good farmer was, simply as a work of necessity, turning his cider screw at the time of the explosion, and saw stars burned in the mash before his eyes. Another very splendid and exceptional atmospheric manifestation was a crimson aurora seen here, at 5 o'clock yesterday morning, resembling the light from an immense fire. It tarried but a brief time, and then vanished in glorious streamers toward the zenith. This display was also seen in Cleveland and Cincinnati. Last night there was another brilliant display in the northern heavens. What do all these signs and wonders mean?

A CHRISTIAN HOME.—How many fully realize all the significance of this title? A home for Christ, where we invite him to dwell with us—a home made pleasant by his continual presence—where he is with us at our rising up and in our lying down, in our going out and coming in; where love, charity, and peace abide—where an atmosphere of holiness and purity surrounds each member of the family.

Such a home is, indeed, a haven of rest where wearied souls, worn with their struggles and conflicts with the world, may find peace, "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding." With God's blessing, let us make our homes temples, where we can constrain our dear Lord and Elder Brother to come in and abide with us, and give us grace so to live that we may have a foretaste of those joys which are prepared for us in heaven, our Father's home—Parish Visitor.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield Camp-ground, August 24th, 1870, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

BRO. GEO. TILLEY writes as follows:—"In regard to spreading the gospel of the kingdom through the South, I will be one of ten to raise $5000 to send Brn. Grant, Couch, Sheldon, or such other brethren as may be approved by the Missionary Board, with tracts, etc., to spread the knowledge of the truth."

Who else will join in this good work? Now is the time.

CALL FROM HEAVEN.

The loud call from heaven seems to have been heard by our Bro. L. T. Cunningham, and he believes the unmistakable evidence of the Lord's soon coming, and makes a stirring appeal to his brethren to awake to the importance of the times; making a proposition to be one of a hundred to raise fifty thousand dollars to cause this message to fly swiftly by the living voice, and the more silent messenger, to every kindred, nation, nook and corner; to the highways and hedges, to cry—"Behold He cometh!" and give the last call of mercy to this generation. I hope others will hear this urgent call, and be ready to give a hearty response, and those able will unite with Bro. Cunningham in making out the five hundred great souls that bestow an inestimable blessing upon this last generation, by bringing before them the signs of our Lord's coming, and the last call of mercy. Do not forget your responsibility.

Chelsea. LUTHER BOUTELL.

For the World's Crisis.

"THIS MEETING HAS SAVED ME FROM SUICIDE."

Thus spoke a young man under the tent in Philadelphia at the close of Saturday night's meeting, and there joyfully repeated the following sentiment—

"There's power enough in Jesus' name,
There's room enough in glory."

That night he felt himself to be a poor lost man, forsaken alike of God and man, and had made up his mind to end his existence by violence; but, thank God for the tent, he saw it, and was led to urge his way into it, and here in this highway ark he found the Spirit of Christ, that welcomed him to Mercy's fountain and pressed the cooling waters of salvation to his burning lips.

He told his story,—the son of a christian mother, who for forty years among the Friends had preached salvation in Jesus' name to her dying fellow men, but, alas! a brother who spoke two languages, and himself who spoke four, had been led away by the intoxicating bowl, and he was even now under its influence. Ah! chide us not for listening to him; had he been thine own brother, wouldst thou have said, Put him out? Did that pious mother yet live, would she have given her voice against him? and could we do so?

God forbid. It was for such that this tent was spread, and for lost women; it was for the lost that Jesus died, and for such these brethren are spending and being spent. Ah! we felt, let this tent be filled with such lost ones, rather than drive one away; and do you not feel so too? Amen. And that our sympathies may be further awakened in behalf of such captives to Satan's power, and we led to cry to God for their deliverance as never before, we give an incident that he related of his brother.

Said he, "I have the letter in my pocket certifying the fact." This brother had not tasted liquor for six years; but, meeting one of his old comrades in sin, and inhaling his breath, it roused the sleeping demon in his bosom, and he had to flee to his home two miles distant, and there, before his wife and his open Bible, he wrestled and prayed four hours before the spell was fully broken and he could shout victory in the name of the Lord.

How often during the meeting did this young man entreat our prayers, saying, "Nothing but the power of God can do me any good." Then he would plead for all who drink. We could but hope and believe that virtue had gone forth from Jesus to his salvation.

The next day was one of surprising interest. The keynote so beautifully struck the night before, in the case just related, sounded out all day in every exercise, reviving the saints, quickening backsliders, and wooing sinners.

O, Jesus! Jesus! when every other name loses its interest and power, thy name comes to the rescue. The more we recommend it to poor lost sinners, the broader and firmer our own foundation grows. Did Jesus taste death for every man, and shall we not from a burning heart sound it in their ears? "And of some have compassion, making a difference; and others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire, hating even the garment spotted by the flesh." "Now unto Him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, to the only wise God our Savior, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen." Jude 22, 25.

Pray for the good work in Philadelphia.

Correspondence.

From Bro. E. Cotton.

Brethren and Sisters:—I have not written to you through the Crisis since Feb. 28th, 1870. Since that time I have labored in Newport, Acworth, Grantham, Dorchester, Warren, Wentworth, Holderness, Orford, Keene, Hinsdale, N. H., Northfield, Springfield, Mass., Hope, Harrisville, Anthony, Crompton, Arctic, Foster, Allenston, North Scituate, R. I.

I am now holding a protracted meeting in North Scituate, in company with Bro. Kellaway, a young preacher from England, quite an intelligent man, one that has the love of God shed abroad in his heart by the Holy Ghost. I would recommend him to the churches in America. The meetings in this place are quite interesting. Seven have made a start to seek the Lord. Some of them have found peace in believing, and the church have been comforted and revived in their minds.

The Adventists in this place have a small meeting-house. They own it free from debt. It will hold three hundred people. Last Sunday evening we were very much crowded. Many that came to the meeting could not get into the house. I think some will go forward next Sunday in baptism.

Since I wrote you last, quite a goodly number have sought the Lord, and found "him of whom Moses and the prophets did speak." I have been very much blessed in my own soul. The fire of God's love has been burning, burning in my heart. Glory! hallelujah! I am very joyful in the Lord. My heart is filled with fervent love to God and man. O how blessed to have the love of God constraining us. It makes the yoke of Christ easy and his burden light. "If the streams are so sweet, what must the fountain be?" The joy of the Lord is our strength. Neh. 8: 10. We can say with Caleb and Joshua, "We are well able to go up and take the goodly land." I do not wonder Peter said that the brethren had joy unspeakable and were full of glory. E. COTTON.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. L. BOUTELL writes from Addison, Vt.:—"I am now up here in sight of Lake Champlain and the towering hills of New York. The scenery is delightful. Notwithstanding the drouth, the earth has yielded her increase, and there is an abundant harvest. I also find some of the original Advent believers, who received their faith from the Bible through the preaching of Bro. Miller; and they are holding on still. We may as well call them Millerites; and I do hope they will hold fast the arousing declaration of his mission—'Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him.' For the present, events taking place in the papal world make it absolute and certain that we are soon coming into port.

I arrived here Saturday evening. Had an interesting meeting with them at their Chapel Sunday. Preached three times to a good gathering of those who seem to appreciate the doctrine of Christ and the signs of his coming. Meetings are to continue through the week, and I hope to see a reviving among them, and some putting on Christ anew."
